Ann Arbor, Michigan: Leland Stowe, Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist, commented in the Michigan Daily on the life of a reporter. "Your work and your life are a constant adventure," he said.

"You can learn more about people and things than you can anywhere else," he said. "Reporting gives you a minimum of routine and boredom."

The five essentials for a good reporter, says Stowe, are character and integrity, curiosity, social consciousness, intuition, and persistence.

New York, NY: Columbia professors and students are becoming concerned about the amount of cheating at their college. Certain medical schools, one professor said, have become hesitant about accepting Columbia students, because of dishonest behaviour.

"We must change the atmosphere and somehow invoke a more mature outlook towards examinations," declared the Vice-Chairman of the Student Board.

The editors of the Columbia Spectator agree that something must be introduced into the College program which will provoke a change of attitude. As a substitute for the present system, they suggest the honour system. The advantages of this, they say, would be social pressure, self discipline, and community responsibility.

Ann Arbor, Michigan: The professors at Michigan University apparently object to a Michigan Daily editorial criticizing the faculty for failing to lead campus opinion on controversial issues.

"You fellows have no loyalty to the University. You live on controversy, parasites thrive on it. This controversy is all bad stuff," said one professor. He called the editorial "sneaky" and "indecent."

A Daily editorial, however, felt that a large segment of the faculty agree with the criticism, although the administration objects.

P. Potts For '56

Here is winner of the P. Potts trophy for '56 in the maddest race of the century, held yesterday around the front campus. A riot broke out at the engineering chariot races, an annual event on this campus, and The Varsity photographer was almost run over by a careening wheelbarrow. The fun is repeated today at 1:00 as the interfaculty chariot race takes place. —VSP by Ed Staworzynski

Exam TV Appalling, Orwellian Students Cite Sawdust Caesar

Students here prefer proctors to television cameras if they're going to be watched in exams. The cameras would be "Orwellian," "distracting," "appalling," "Put TV on Philosopher's Walk" was one alternative suggested.

The Varsity's inquiry was started after a news item in a downtown paper reported TV cameras would be installed in the Peterborough post office to replace inspectors, peering through peep holes at the employees. Students were asked what they thought of this, and whether they would welcome the system in University exams.

"If it didn't walk around as some exam vigilantes do, it might be a good thing." "At least the television camera doesn't laugh over your shoulder the way a proctor does," were some comments.

Many students thought this might usher in the dictatorial set-up of George Orwell's 1984. "If the practice spreads into associated fields, it might eventually lead to witch hunts and saw-dust Caesars, such as the spy trials have produced in the U.S.," said Arnold Freedman, II UC.

"Privacy is a right the individual must not forfeit," said Vic Lewanuk, II premeds.

"It would be treating people as machines. Since most of us are machines anyway, it's OK with me," said a second year Trinity student. Those who considered students as persons said, "It would prevent the student from doing his best," "it would heighten the already great tension in the examination room and, would be detrimental to the atmosphere necessary to clear thought," and "it would make me more nervous than ever."

"The use of such cameras merely makes slightly more efficient the supervision previously in force. Those who object to their use merely have a childish and pathological objection to the use of machines in a 'supervisory' capacity," said a Commerce student.

But Marg Gulham, III General, felt "it would be too expensive for the university. They should put their funds to a more worthwhile cause." Several others voiced the same objection.

"The least they can do is trust us," "it's going even farther away from the honour system," were more comments. Many approved of the 'honour system, said that proctors gave some leeway for personal integrity, but that TV cameras would not leave a chance for, and hence not teach, honour in writing exams. But "knowing my friends and myself, I think it is an excellent idea," said Pete Adam, (II premeds).

Commented Warden McCulley: "Look out for Big Brother."

Chariot Race Confused J.P. Potts Trophy Stolen But Fastest Team Won

The official winner of the 162nd Chariot Race today was declared to be 1st Aeronautical Engineering since it committed fewer fouls than any other team. This brings to a close five years of possession by the Ceramic Engineering course, said an Engineering Society official. Since there was no entry made by either of these courses it has been decided to pick the fastest team in the race, he said.

This team was composed of the Chemical Chariot, a Mining and Met Club driver, and a mixture of charioteers and blockers from other courses. This caused several teams to claim the beautiful and glamorous Jerry P. Potts Memorial Trophy but the question was solved by it being stolen while the official decision was being pondered, the SPS official said.

Babes Welcome At Hart House Invitation Dinner

Members of Hart House will be able to bring their girls to a special Invitation Dinner in the Great Hall on Wednesday, January 25 at 6:15 p.m. Coffee will be served after the dinner in the East Common Room.

"We selected next Wednesday because it is a theatre night — the Hart House Theatre production of The Troublemakers, said Hugh Franks, II Trin., member of the House.

Invitation dinners are a recent innovation in Hart House, the first one was held March 13, 1953. The charter of Hart House, as a men's club, provides that women be admitted on special occasions. Other innovations since 1952 include admitting women to the Wednesday afternoon recitals and, on occasions, to the library evenings. For the last five years women have been permitted to visit the Art Gallery on Wednesday afternoon.

Invitations to the dinner must be picked up at the Porter's Desk in Hart House.

flap-flipping queens

Tasty Dish

Here one of the Carnival Queens starts at her task of flipping flapjacks for the two igloo-dwellers. The flipping took place late last night to the light of red flares near the igloo on the bookstore steps. No comment was offered on the flapjack's edibility.

—VSP by Jim Freeley

In the red light of flares a dozen campus belles last night tried their hand at flap-jack flipping.

Entrants in the Snow Queen contest of the current Winter Carnival, they were vying for the crown as "the girl you would most like to live in an igloo with."

Huddled over coleman stoves, the slack-wearing, duffle-coated beauties produced flippable pancakes to tempt the jaded palates of three judges.

Although most contestants managed to get their frost-bitten flapjacks back on the griddle in one piece, a few were found later decorating the trees and grounds around the improvised igloo.

Delicious smells emanating from the flapjack huddle lured two hardy engineers from their self-imposed exile in the snow-covered wooden shack behind the bookstore.

John Sanderson and Barry Mitchell, both I SPS, left their icy haven long enough to sample the wares of a few of the girls.

After it was all over the judges confessed they were in quite a quandary.

Mary Jane Champ, Forestry's entry, had a decided edge in the flipping department but her flapjack was a "little less than excellent," one judge said.

Marg Grace of Nursing turned out a tasty pancake which she couldn't flip at all.

The niftiest looking pancake was that produced by Doris Kerr of Medicine but she couldn't flip it and its taste left something to be desired.

Winter Carnival activities continue today with a campus parade at 12:30 p.m. A wild foray will be staged by hockey specialists from St. Hilda's and Engineering. This will be the "feecha" attraction of the evening along with a regular intercollegiate tilt between Varsity and Laval.

Saturday the Carnival moves to Caledon Hills Farm where wood-chopping, skiing, and snow-shoeing competitions will be held to decide the winner of the coveted Fox Fur Pelt, emblematic of supremacy in winter activities.

Today's weather forecast calls for snow and freezing temperatures in the Caledon region this weekend.

Saturday night a barn dance in the farm's renovated barn will be topped off with a marsh-mallow roast.

Law Of Entry Often Flouted Says Brewin

The administration of Canada's Immigration Act is hypocritical, according to Andrew Brewin.

It gives a black eye to justice and democracy in Canada," he said last night to a meeting of the Political Economy Club. Twelve members were present.

Applications for admission to Canada are not being given the fair hearing the Act provides, he said. The Department of Immigration will not admit it is being arbitrary, and will not change its procedure, Brewin stated.

A local Immigration officer judges applicants, with Regulations passed by the Federal Cabinet under the Act, Brewin said. These bureaucrats: "flunkies" can judge whether the applicant is "unsuitable, having regard to the economic, social, industrial, educational, health or other conditions . . . in Canada or the country applicant is coming from or through," said Brewin.

"It gives full ground to the racial intolerance of the special examiner," said Brewin. At the whim of examiners, even applicants from the United States have been rejected, he said.

Brewin attacked other restrictive clauses in the Regulations, and said that the government itself, not its individual officers, should make immigration policy.

Applicants should be admitted to Canada on their educational qualifications, Brewin suggested.

Immigrants perhaps could be sponsored, he said, or admitted under a quota system from Asian countries. No matter how necessary, a restrictive policy must be fair, he said.

Bauer Wins Schweitzer Prize For Arctic Explorer's Story To Be Published In Germany

By MICHAEL PENGELLY

A 51-year-old, German-born University of Toronto student has been awarded an internationally-coveted prize for writing.

For his biography on the life of the arctic explorer Fridtjof Nansen, Walter Bauer, now studying modern languages at University College, has received the Albert Schweitzer prize — a $4,800 award — which he will share with another German-born author, Karl Otten of London, England.

The award is given by the Kindler Publishing House of Munich which will publish his book.

Mr. Bauer is also planning to publish soon, a biography on the life of the Canadian explorer La Salle.

Mr. Bauer is a protege of the late German author Stefan Zweig whom he met in the 1930's. Besides writing biography, Mr. Bauer has worked with the drama, the novel, and poetry. He writes in his native language.

Mr. Bauer came to Canada four years ago after contacting Professor H. Boeschstein of the Department of German here, whom he had known in Europe. They had been associates writing for the Swiss national broadcasting company.

"He wrote to me from Germany," Dr. Boeschstein said, "asking about opportunities in Canada. I managed to find him a job with a chocolate company and he decided to come."

Prof. Boeschstein described Mr. Bauer, now in his third year here, as a socialist with a strong democratic outlook who was not pleased with political developments in Germany following World War II.

"During the war, I believe he was continually under suspicion for his deep pacifist, humanitarian tendencies," Professor Boeschstein said.

"During the war he kept a diary which makes fascinating reading today."

Mr. Bauer now is in Munich for the presentation ceremonies.

Fridtjof Nansen, who is characterized in Mr. Bauer's prize-winning biography won worldwide fame both as an explorer and as a humanitarian who helped lost citizens following the first World War.

Nansen's arctic adventure was doomed to failure. Trying to reach the north pole in the years around 1910, he held a theory that if his ship were to be encrusted in the ice, the whole mass would float him into the vicinity of the pole. Nansen's part managed to hold out for a year but he had, eventually to give up the project.

Nansen, a Norwegian, was perhaps better known as a humanitarian in the empty years following World War I. Under the guidance of the League of Nations, he was in charge of issuing "Nansen Passports" to lost European citizens.

Igloo Types Keep Warm

Inside The Igloo: (Staff)—The two igloo dwellers are having quite a time for themselves the volunteer ice-cave inhabitants — Barry Mitchelson and John Sanderson, both I SPS — agreed to spend 24 continuous hours in the carnival igloo from Thursday to Friday noon.

Late last night, the two ice-dwellers were busy playing cards while listening to a portable radio. The wood-lined igloo (not the orthodox Eskimo type by any means) was well heated by a portable Coleman lamp.

There was perhaps one thing amiss though.

Every time a shapely girl would pass the covered opening of the igloo, the curtain would be raised and a plaintive voice sound out:

"Come on in — it's lovely in here."

Engineers Forced To Leave

Kington: (CUP)—In the wake of a devastating set of Christmas exams, 18 Queens students have been required to withdraw from second year of the Faculty of Applied Science.

A special faculty meeting held last Friday rendered judgement on the group, only two of whom were repeating their second year.

No students in either the Faculty of Arts or the Faculty of Medicine were required to leave the university as a result of Christmas marks.

The engineering students ran afoul of a new faculty regulation first formulated last January. The regulation states that "second year students who fail in seven or more courses in December are required to withdraw."

Last year at the University of Toronto, 43 out of 680 freshman engineers were expelled after they failed to make 35% on their Christmas exams. Second-year students who did poorly were not required to leave.

Commenting on the situation in the Arts Faculty, Dean Earl of Queens said that there was no provision for sending people home after the results of the Christmas exams except "in very isolated and extreme cases."

Dr. H. D. McEwen, Secretary of the Faculty of Medicine, stated that exam results were poorer than usual in his faculty too. Medical students who do poorly at Christmas are not required to leave. Dr. McEwen concluded, "We wouldn't be so cruel."

Cadi Reserves Judgement In Dresden Colorbar Case

Magistrate J. C. Dunlap reserved judgement on Wednesday in the case involving two Negro U of T students and Dresden restaurant owner Morley McKay.

McKay had been charged under the Ontario Fair Accommodation Practices Act with refusing service to the two students because of their color.

The two Trinidad students, Jacob Alleyne (graduate student in Anthropology), and Percy Bruce (III UC) laid the complaint against the restaurateur in November. They alleged they had been ignored while other customers were served.

Miss Helen Steenson, typist at the office of the Friendly Relations with Foreign Students Branch of the International Students' Organization testified at the hearing that McKay boasted of "beating" a previous race discrimination charge.

Judgment was reserved until February 28.

HH Accepts Nudes

Nudes are acceptable subjects for submission to the 34th annual Hart House Exhibition of Photographs, Bev. Best, (II Vic.), exhibition manager said last night:

"All pictures, however, must adhere to the very high standards of taste and quality of recent exhibitions."

Entries will be accepted by the HH Hall Porter until February 10. Rex Frost, A.R.P.S., A.P.S.A., Victor Crich, A.R.P.S., nature photographer, and Gilbert A. Milne, a Toronto commercial photographer, will judge.

In past years many pictures and colour slides accepted for the exhibit have done well in outside exhibits. The most notable of these was D. A. Sprott's colour photograph of a cedar wax-wing feeding its young, awarded a $250 prize in the Canadian Sportsmen's Show last year.

The HH Show categories are: Senior A. F. Coventry Award (12 prints may be entered), Junior K. B. Jackson Award (12 prints), Karsh Trophy for campus life and activities (6 prints), and the Hart House Colour Award (4 transparencies). See the Hall Porter for entry forms and further details.

Exhibits will be on display from Feb. 14 to Feb. 26.

WUS Offers Tour of Europe Possible Soviet Union Trip

Three U of T students will have an opportunity this summer of touring Europe — including the Soviet Union — on a World University Service study tour.

This was announced yesterday by Anne Kilgore Chairman of the WUS Summer Seminar and Study Tours on campus.

Miss Kilgore said that the study tours and seminars will be attended by 35 Canadian students, including the three from Toronto, and 70 students from the United States, Europe, the Middle East, Africa, and Asia.

The summer session will consist of one five-week study tour at one of the following five areas: Germany, Spain and Portugal, Greece, Yugoslavia, and Russia. There will also be a three-week seminar in Germany, held under the joint sponsorship of the Canadian and German WUS committees. All groups will spend a few days in Paris to visit such international agencies as NATO and UNESCO, said Miss Kilgore.

Miss Kilgore said the students selected for the tour would have to bear some part of the expenses themselves, although "substantial" grants towards the tours are made by universities and the provincial government.

Applications for the WUS-sponsored summer in Europe are now available at the SAC Office, near Hart House. Miss Kilgore stressed that the applicants must combine good scholarship with participation in extra-curricular activities.

They must be within one year of graduation, she said, or else graduates intending to return to university, although some exceptions may be made.

She also said the students selected must be capable of interpreting Canada abroad, and of communicating their experience to their fellow students on their return.

The application deadline is February 1.

Cuban Classrooms Closed

Exchange: 20 Cuban students face possible imprisonment for "crimes of attempted homicide," 50 have been seriously injured, and the presidents of two faculties have been imprisoned following student demonstrations.

According to the IUS news service, the disturbance began when police attacked students marching in commemoration of the anniversary of the shooting of 8 medical students.

In an attempt to publicise "government invasions of university autonomy," a band of students broke into the field of Habana Stadium where a baseball game was being played before 30,000 spectators. It is reported that 15 students were injured on the diamond and later in the police station.

Classes were suspended throughout the country. It is not known if they have been reopened.

Blues Battling For First Place Meet Strong Laval Team To-Night Saints, Skule In Carnival Game

First place is at stake tonight when the Rouge et Or from Laval University tangle with the Varsity Blues in the feature attraction to the four-day Winter Carnival.

Currently tied with the Blues for the top spot in the league standings, each with three wins and no losses, Laval will feature the usual flash of the French, Canadian Universities, coupled with a new and improved attack.

The Flying Frenchmen ended up in the cellar last season with two lonely wins, but appear headed to a much better position this trip. Kingpin of the Laval club is veteran centre Robert Lafreniere, flanked by Georges Lemieux and Maurice Lagace.

Lafreniere finished third last winter in the individual scoring race, preceded only by Varsity's Dave Reid and Paul Knox, and is already well ahead of last season's pace. He has six points in three games and is sure to be a thorn in the Blue side when the struggle gets under way at 8 o'clock.

Blues will be sparked by the league's most prolific goal-getter and playmaker. Winger Ken

Trin. Unbeaten Nurses Victors

In hockey action yesterday morning, Trinity B's kept their unbeaten record intact, and moved out in front of Group 4, by edging Dents B 4-3. Four Trinity players shared the scoring, with McGaw and Hill counting in the first period and Jennings and Harrison in the second. For the dentists, Leggett counted a pair and Muirhead added the other.

Minor League basketball action saw St. Mike's More House edge out II Mech. A by a 35-32 score. The UC Killers continued their winning ways by trouncing II Engineering Physics 61-47. In the lone major league encounter, UC III defaulted to SPS V when only four men showed up.

St. UC B and Meds IV chalked up victories in squash play. The red and white tripped Architecture, while the doctors downed Wycliffe.

At last, the Nurses have won in the interfaculty loop! This was accomplished last night when the Freshie Nurses defeated POT 33-20 in a volleyball tussle at the Lillian Massey gym. In spite of strong POT rallies, the Nurses proved to be superior to their fellow Medical sisters. Brenda Birch and Sheila Hislop were tops for the "Ladies in White."

Last night in a feature basketball game at Hart House, Engineering Allstars soundly trounced an allstar squad from the four Arts colleges 62-38. The game heralded the commencement of this year's Winter Carnival.

The Skule attack was led by Ed Rigby with 20 and Hank Galka with 14. Rigby, displaying an amazingly accurate push shot from the head of the key, was especially effective in breaking the zone defence of the Artsmen. In displaying a deadly set shot and as the offence's leader, Galka was the best individual performer on the floor.

The play of Bob McMinn was the Arts teams' bright light. Besides contributing nine points, McMinn snared most of the defensive rebounds and set up play after play for the losers. McMinn comes from Victoria. John Lychy, in a losing cause hooped seven. He displayed some accurate foul shooting as well as a very good set shot which gave him seven points for the evening. Ron Stroud also threw in nine for the losers.

The outcome of the game was never in doubt. Exploiting the porous zone of the Artsmen, Skule led 36-20 at the half. The same pattern held true in the second stanza as Skule walked off with an easy 62-38 win.

Other than that the Blues will be at full strength for the crucial test with Laval. A win will leave them in the strongest position possible for next week-end's jaunt into old Quebec, while a loss will force the issue to remain in doubt until the last half of the schedule.

Exhibitions of figure skating by the Toronto Skating Club's Barbara Jacques, Gordon Manzie and Ian Campbell will be given between periods, while a challenge hockey match between the Skule Sevenths and the St. Hill-da's A's will be held after the senior game. Festivities get under way at 8 o'clock.

Blue Wrestlers Take On UWO

The senior wrestlers, fresh from a convincing 33-3 win over McGill last Friday evening, will join forces with the intermediates Saturday at 2:30 p.m. against two teams from the University of Western Ontario.

Western should provide good opposition, having just recently defeated Central "Y" of Toronto 21-15. Coach Kirk Wipper was very pleased with his team's effort last week and feels that with steady work, his men could bring a championship back to Varsity. Kirk is especially pleased with Jim Trenton, at 137 lb., and Bob Sibthorp at Heavy, who have made the senior team in their first year.

Intermediates Murray Berman, Jim Dart, Bill Claven, Bob Alexander, John Graham, Bill Chykaluk and Bob Herod are expected to make it a double victory for the Blues.

Archers

All are invited to the Hart House Archery Shoot which will be held in the Drill Hall, 119 St. George St., on Friday night at 8 p.m. Prizes, refreshments and gold doubloon for all. You shoot in your own class, expert against expert and tyro against tyro, on nine targets. Some equipment will be available for those who have none. The admission is a very nominal 99c. We'll see you there!

Speaking OF SPORT

By HOWE MANDELL

When Phog Allen talks about basketball, everyone takes note. For Phog knows more about that sport than anyone today. And when Phog says that Wilton Chamberlain is the greatest player that he's ever seen, one wants to know more; for Phog has seen and coached some of the greatest.

Forest C. Allen has coached basketball at the University of Kansas since that school has played the sport. That is quite a distinction in these days of hire and fire coaches. Allen is so highly esteemed that when the school's board of governors decided to build a new field house, they named the gymnasium in his honour. Phog's basketball past goes back to the days when he played for the Kansas City Germans, one of the first basketball teams in the U.S.A. Back in those days most of Kansas City's games were refereed by one Dr. James Naismith. No one knew the rules any better than Dr. Naismith simply because Dr. Naismith invented the game. That will give you an idea of the length of time Mr. Allen and basketball have gone hand in hand.

Phog turned 70 last month and the state board of regents demanded that its college teachers retire at that age, but when he got to Chamberlain, the board made an exception to the rule. But enough about Phog, the purpose of this column is to tell a little about Chamberlain.

Wilton is known to the sports public as "Wilt the Stilt." If you're asking how he got tagged with that name, all you have to do is look at his height. Wilt stands seven foot two in his stocking feet. But unlike many others at that height Chamberlain is a well coordinated player.

It wasn't an uncommon thing to hear that Wilt had scored fifty or sixty points a game in his final year at Philadelphia's Overbrook High School. With a record like that more than 140 different colleges and universities went after "the Stilt." Kansas and Allen got him.

How he came into the Kansas fold after the other schools had offered Chamberlain cars, tuition, fantastic after-school jobs and free air trips home every weekend is an example of the best in diplomacy. Phog himself went down to Philadelphia more than once during Wilt's last year at high school. During these trips, he not only talked to Wilt, but had many conferences with his mother. To help the cause along, he called in a negro concert singer Etta Moser and Professor Calvin Vanderwert of the school's chemistry department. The last visitor did the trick. For the first time a school had also stressed the academic side of university to Mr. Chamberlain.

Kansas' conference, the Big Seven, does not allow freshmen to play on the varsity squad or freshmen teams to meet other schools, so Wilt has to confine his action to practice games with the senior team. The results have been rather startling. In the first clash of the season, the K.U. Frosh trampled a better than average varsity team 81-71. Chamberlain had only 42 points that evening.

To give you some idea of Wilt's height, Allen uses 12 foot baskets during practice sessions. This is no deterrent to Chamberlain who with a short jump slams the ball down the basket with two hands. Think of what he can do on the conventional ten foot hoops. But Wilt does not confine his athletic prowess to basketball alone. He's also quite a track man running the hundred in 9.10 and high jumping well over six feet.

By this time, you probably have the idea that Chamberlain is all muscle and no brain. But that's not the case; he has an I.Q. of 120 and is very interested in his studies. The lanky lad is enrolled in the School of Business Administration at Kansas and he has yet to skip a class. Quite an athlete!

St. Mikes Wins Defeats Doctors

In a hard fought third period scoring game, St. Mike's maids downed the Med's women's hockey club, 2-0. The double blue squad affected a brilliant offensive attack which culminated in the last half of the third period with their scoring two goals.

In spite of the usually well-timed saves of Marg Norman, Med's hard-working goalie, the accurate passing and tricky skating of the offensive line led by St. Mike's Barbara and Elizabeth Gratton paid off.

Aided by the strong thirty minute play of Moyra Cawkell on the defense, St. Mikes managed to keep the play in the Med's end while Peggy King cleverly stick-handled her way to the first double blue score.

Judy Marshall was an asset to the Med's offensive line as was her team mate Carolyn Cadbury on the defense until an injury took her from the play.

A last minute rush down the ice seemed to be a final spurt of the medical women to score, but St. Mikes' Elizabeth Gratton intercepted the puck and outskated the Med's defense to score the last goal.

The Sportswoman

By MERLE OVERHOLT

For those athletic types who like to pursue sport in the comparative warmth and security of indoor courts (unlike their more energetic (?) counterparts who prefer the great out-of-doors, zero-degree temperatures, and events Winter Carnival style), the interfaculty badminton tournament (women's) is the dish. The tournament will be held Tuesday and Wednesday of this coming week, the 24th and 25th of January. Names of those interested in entering, must be in the Athletic Office of S.A.C. by 1 o'clock today and incidentally, each faculty will be represented by any number of players.

The four semi-finalists of the interfac. meet will journey to McGill to represent Varsity in the intercollegiate tournament on the 10th and 11th of February. Three girls from the team who took last year's laurels are back this year. However, they are not assured of a berth to McGill, unless they land in the coveted four places. Elizabeth Rorke, Noreen Beasley, and Pat Codson, the sur-reviving trio, are expecting plenty of stiff competition from such potential stars as Pru Smith and Rona Swarbrick.

There will hardly be time to take in a practice session at the Drill Hall before the interfac. tournament gets under way, but if you feel that you could out if any of the four semi-finalists from their exalted positions, challenge them. The select four will be open to challenge until just about train time, so if you think that you can make the expected good team better get in under the 1 o'clock deadline and give in your name or challenge any of the four on the top rungs of the journey ladder.

An unshaven, shabby-looking man shuffled into the coffee shop, sidled up to a patron and asked:

"Can you spare a dime for a cup of coffee?"

This pathetic scene is being enacted every day in various haunts around the campus.

The half-abashed, penniless inquirer is the student still waiting for his Dominion-Provincial Bursary to come through.

These normally reach the student in two instalments — one early in December and the other in the spring.

This year the "powers that be" decided only one payment — for the total amount — would be made this year.

With this we have no quarrel. But why has it been necessary for university officials to postpone several times the payment of this money? Is the trouble in Queen's Park or Simcoe Hall?

Let's have a forthright answer to this question and a firm date offered students who have won these awards.

If the money is there let's get it into the hands of the student to whom it rightfully belongs.

If university officials are not in a position to pay this money over we would appreciate a little more effort to make it available and a little less of the buck-passing students have been getting from unsympathetic bureaucratic small fry.

By the way, anybody got a spare dime?

congratulations, it's a carnival

The carnival has started.

What last year was a small exclusive event has become already a "big thing" on campus. We welcome the addition of this activity in the spring term. We welcome the fact that it gives some opportunity for students to show their traditional attributes of initiative and imagination apart from the fall football games.

If the carnival is successful this year, it could easily become one of the outstanding events on the U of T campus and even one of the outstanding events in Toronto, which goodness knows is not overflowing with such colourful happenings.

Some consideration should now be given to placing the Carnival under the sponsorship of the B & W, since it has become an all university activity.

A Social Science

Economics

Economics is one of the Social Sciences, says Aranka E. Kovacs, Grad Studies, the writer of this article. But Economics has also a social duty to aid in the making of welfare decisions. The second of two parts.

ONLY ONE DIVISION

One division of the social sciences is constituted by Economics. Although we cannot disregard the influences exerted by other social forces, economics as a distinct science studies the mutual relations of economic activity as a special aspect of social life.

Without losing its individuality, at the same time, the science of economics cannot be isolated from the other social sciences. Especially with regard to the formulation of practical policy, the relative influence of the other sciences must be considered for decision-making programs.

PATTERN OF BEHAVIOUR

The science of economics recognizes a certain pattern of human behaviour. We know that choice, preference or indifference are subjective terms and future expectations or anticipations are incapable of observation, but we must take into account these psychological factors if we are to understand changes in economic activity. But in the process of analysing the production and distribution of goods and services, the economist takes these tendencies as given.

Economics has been criticized for assuming an economic man whose chief concern is self-interest and money gains. The relative valuations placed by individuals on different goods is not explained by economics but is taken as given. The motives behind the pattern of behaviour may be egotistical, altruistic, aesthetic and so on, but it is not the concern of the economist to discover their nature, for the reason behind or the "why" of human action is left for the psychologist to solve.

When rational conduct is said to underlie economic generalizations, this assumption is correct so long as by "rational" we mean "consistent." Economics assumes rational behaviour in order to isolate the conduct of individuals. The abstract economic man attempts to attain a maximum value with a minimum of effort and sacrifice.

SCIENTIFIC DISCIPLINE

The study of economics is primarily a scientific discipline. We may regard abstract economic theory as the logical foundation, for a grasp of the analytical principles provided by particular theories is necessary in order to draw up and formulate practical policies.

The hypothetical treatment of economic phenomena tends to focus attention on mechanical and technical details, and a tendency to lose sight of the more human forces in economic activity may result.

The application of the inductive method serves to relate theory to the real world and at the same time act as a reminder that, although abstraction is employed because of the infinite complexity of the world about us, the ultimate aim is the interpretation of economic phenomena in reality. Economic science cannot remain independent of specific experiences for very long, as the working out of the theory requires that its ultimate goal correspond to the actual world; for from the interaction of ideas and facts there results a vital relationship. A thought from Einstein at this point is well worth remembering: "Concern for man himself and his fate must always form the chief interest of all technical endeavour . . . Never forget this in the midst of all your diagrams and equations."

REFLECTION SOCIAL REALITY

Economic activity, then, is only a part of the whole of human action, and a reflection of social reality. There is no dividing wall in the social sciences and it is Time which gives unity to the different forces shaping our civilization. The science of economics should contribute, along with the other social sciences, to human welfare and aid in formulating policy for the social good.

SOLUTION OF SOCIAL PROBLEMS

The history of economic thought indicates a keen awareness and concern by great economists to use their tool of analysis towards the solution of social problems which arise in their own time.

A. C. Pigou, Cambridge economist, expresses this concern when he states that, "the compelling motive that leads men to economic study . . . is the sense, that in the world of business and labour, justice stands with biased scales; that the lives of the many are darker than they need be. In these things lies the impulse to economic investigation; and the removal or at least the mitigation of the evils they portray is the goal of the economists' search."

RESPONSIBILITY OF ECONOMICS

The interaction of behaviour to satisfy wants raises problems which reach beyond the study of economics. However, it is by breaking up the problems into several parts, systematically and fully organized, that we are able to deal with them with greater force and certainty. The implications of alternative ends are made available to us, alternative ends not only in individual choice, complicated systems of policy, but also in systems of society. "By studying the economic organization and appraising its efficiency ways and means can be suggested to lessen and eliminate imperfections and inequalities. In modern societies the responsibility of ultimate decisions with regard to problems of distribution and welfare cannot be ignored.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR:

We Was Robbed Of P. Pott

The Editor,
The Varsity,

Three rousing cheers for The Varsity! Despite all the criticism and sour grapes letters, it seems that The Varsity is really the true, unbiased source of light on the campus. In Thursday's edition you published the picture of the winner of the P. Potts Trophy for '56. You have indeed pictured the true winner of the race, but not the official winner as declared by the Engineering Society. The driver standing atop his vehicle is none other than that world renowned charioteer — Winston "Poo" Pierce of 11 Year Civil Eng.

The official winner was 1st Aero. Engineering who as your article stated, "committed fewer fouls than any other team." This is undoubtedly true, since 1st Aero. did not have an entrant in the race.

An official protest was tendered to the Engineering Society, but it seemed to hold little water with them, even though it threatened the withdrawal of 11 Civil's support of the society. The members of the class were so incensed at the decision that they were threatening revenge for this miscarriage (of justice), even going so far as proposing to support some other faculty's chariot in the inter-faculty race. But, after tempers had cooled and everyone was thinking straight again it was decided that that would really be going off the deep end since SPS is easily the best faculty and would surely win with ease. But we still think "we was robbed," not of the trophy itself, but of much honour and especially the P. Pott.

Again we would like to congratulate The Varsity on its honest judging of the race.

Yours very truly,
"Gig" Crawford,
"Skip" Knapp, Incumbent Representatives of 11 Yr. Civil.

P.S. If we have taken the wrong meaning and you really meant that this team was the winner because they looked like a bunch of P. Potts, all of our former accolades of thanks are herewith and forevermore withdrawn.

Concentration

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In Wednesday's Varsity you published a letter of high-sounding prose from Ian Story criticizing the noise in the Wallace Room. Mr. Story does not seem to realize that one of the greatest benefits of a University education is the opportunity for discussion with our fellow students. Now I ask him, what could be a more suitable place for a discussion than a room filled with books of knowledge?

It is true that talking disturbs those poor souls who wish to work in the Wallace Room. However it's time they learned to concentrate.

Therefore I say, "Vive the Wallace Room, meeting place of the campus."

Dignity-Smelling Gents

The Editor,
The Varsity:

There appeared in Hart House recently the following notice:

"The Board of Stewards believing that the majority of the members of HH desire to see a standard dress used by all members which is in keeping with the dignity of the House, asks that all members conform to such a standard."

I will not discuss at present whether dignity is a direct function of the price of fabrics and how far the majority has a right to enforce personal dignity on the individual.

But I understand that a member of a club knows beforehand the prospects and regulations and accepts them willingly, if he becomes a member.

Now, I should like to know where in the calendar it is mentioned that a student can be exempted from HH membership and fees if he refuses to conform with the askings of some dignity-smelling gentlemen.

Because in that case there is the possibility for the lucky fellows to accommodate themselves in an undignified student's union.

Stern And The TSO

When I undertook, a fortnight ago, to review a Toronto Symphony Orchestra concert, I found in all good faith that I was compelled to make some rather uncomplimentary pronouncements about Sir Ernest and Mozart.

Now it would surely be the height of presumption to think that my words had been the cause for a change in the whole temper of the TSO. Nevertheless the coincidence when I arrived back in Massey Hall this week was really too striking for me to allow it to pass without some observation. The bald fact is that Mozart was missing from the program, the ungodly wheezing of the flutes and woodwinds eliminated; the heathen screeches of the brasses minimized; and Sir Ernest nowhere to be seen.

(I must say in all fairness, however, that the fact Sir Ernest no longer was on the podium could not be attributed to my remarks, for it had been common knowledge weeks before that Mr. Sherman would arrive back from Europe in time to conduct the concerts.)

The guest soloist with the orchestra this week was the American-born violinist Isaac Stern, who gave a highly competent rendering of the violin concerto of Beethoven. There were times when I felt that Mr. Stern might have given more had he been equipped with a larger-toned instrument; it was sometimes difficult to catch the phrasing in passages where the violin was playing against a theme being carried by the orchestra. I did not feel that the fault lay with the orchestra, which I thought played remarkably well, particularly in the tutti passages, the oboes and clarinets having made an excellent entrance at the beginning of the concerto.

Mr. Stern's interpretation seemed to me excellent throughout, and his playing of the traditional Joachim cadenza at the end of the first movement was deeply moving as well as dazzling. The second movement was played with extreme delicacy, the ethereal quality so necessary to the lovely melody of the movement amply displayed. The final Rondo was superb; the rollicking theme catching hold of the audience and inspiring them at last into an ovation which brought Mr. Stern back to the stage seven times, the final time, significantly enough, without his fiddle.

The most interesting work (and one which Mr. Stern must have thought sufficiently interesting, for he slid up to take a seat in the audience for its performance) was the Canadian premiere of the Symphony No. 10 of Shostakovich. It is a work of stupendous proportions requiring the indulgence of every noise-making contraption in the orchestra. It is a work not without merit, seeming somehow to reflect the spirit of a nation alien to the occidental mind, wrapped in mysticism and mental brooding.

I have no way of judging the effect of this work upon the audience, although a friend I bumped into after the concert offered some indication when he explained that it was profuse with what seemed to be a half dozen or so final cadences. This gentleman could sense, he thought, a sigh of relief each time one such cadence was reached, a conviction that at last the end had come, only to be assailed afresh by some shocking new dissonance or some ear-splitting crash of the percussions.

The Shostakovich Symphony No. 10 is definitely not suited to those whose diet is restricted normally to Mozart and Beethoven.

Moore, Hepworth et al Show British Sculpture

The current exhibition of British sculpture at the Toronto Art Gallery is probably the most significant to be seen here in a long time. Of primary importance, this exhibition features sculpture and drawings by Henry Moore, who is considered by many to be the greatest contemporary sculptor, of the same stature as Brancusi or Rodin. Moreover, the works presented here place British sculptors as a group in a pre-eminent position in a sphere in which they have been traditionally weak.

The works of Moore are particularly concerned with expression of human form and of human feelings. In general his work is a synthesis of organic form with the nature of materials. His figures are human archetypes, disembowelled and fossilized, signifying the universality of human ideas and emotions rather than any individual human characteristics. His preference for working at a monumental scale is directly related to this vital and universal conception of humanity.

Michelangelo believed that it should be possible to roll a good piece of sculpture down a hill without damaging it. That is, that the centre of gravity should be well within the structure of the sculpture and that the sculpture should not be so greatly undercut that it is structurally weakened. The value of this precept may be observed in Moore's work. In appreciating sculpture one has a natural tendency to empathize with it by projecting oneself into the object and exploring its movements, rhythms and tensions.

Moore, however, stresses another kind of empathy. After observing the form in all its aspects and having created a mental synthesis, it is possible to imagine the object held in the hand and to assimilate weight, texture, and the complete form simultaneously. An early work, Mother and Child, illustrates literally how this experience is facilitated. The form, carved out of stone to represent a woman clutching her child close against her, suggests by its ridges and depressions that it was compressed into its form by some gigantic hand.

Of the other sculptors, Barbara Hepworth is perhaps the best known and stands quite apart in her mode of expression and choice of materials. She departs more radically than Moore from representation of organic forms to express herself in the abstract and geometric terms of closed curves and warped planes. Space as a sculptural material is an integral part of each composition. People Waiting is her most daring spatial composition and, to me, the most significant of her works.

The remaining sculptors have matured since the war and their efforts to express or arouse emotion derive from the fabric of postwar feelings. This sculpture is the opposite of heroic. Tense, brittle, and small in scale, it conveys a poignancy and bitterness that is personal and immediate. The common use of steel in linear constructions is an innovation peculiar to this group.

The paintings of six Cornish artists included with exhibition of sculpture were very disappointing and in no way compare with the recent exhibit of British painters at Hart House. However, the quality and variety of sculpture was in every way adequate for a well-rounded exhibit.

Krupa Co-operative

By OUR MAN STAWORZYNSKI

Gene Krupa, handsome and obliging jazzman billed as "the world's greatest drummer," left Toronto after a one-week stay at a downtown club saying the response here was "so terrific" he'd be back in the summer.

He's now playing at Frank Daley's "Meadowbrook" in New Jersey. Then back to New York for a week on Basin Street, followed by series of one-nighters around the city. Then a six-week tour in Europe.

Photographer-interviewer was refused admission to club by "bouncer, who stated that "Mr. Krupa will not pose for photos because he is too tired." Statement proved true; Krupa overslept and was over half an hour late for next day's matinee.

Interview (ultimately accomplished) revealed: Krupa is happy working with a small group — now leader of a foursome and will continue so "at least for the time being." Keeps his big band, however, to cut records, and has retord date in Chicago for the near future.

Explained a small band can be disbanded any time, and saves him from having to work 52 weeks per year. Also saves in expenses, endless hell of one-nighters, replacement headaches. In spite of these time-savers, says he needs a rest.

Latest triumphs: appearance (with big band) on "America's Greatest Bands" TV show; new contract with Clef Records; freshly out "Quartet Album", still aims to go on annual tour with Norman Granz's Jazz At The Philharmonic.

Krupa turned out to be very co-operative during the interview, and smiled dutifully for two photographs. His agent described him as "a regular guy who has never given reporters a hard time." For once, an agent seems to have spoken nothing but the truth.

elina ritchie

The first Wednesday five o'clock recital of the spring term was given to a small but appreciative audience this week. The artist was Elina Ritchie, pianist.

Miss Ritchie's program was varied and ambitious, requiring great technical and interpretative ability, and the demonstration of widely varied talents.

This reviewer was impressed by the strength and spirit of her performance. Yet delicacy of touch is one of her main assets. The Fantasia in C minor, one of Bach's lighter compositions, for example, was warmly and sensitively played, suiting the style usually associated with the artist.

Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 57, on the other hand, is Beethoven breathing fire. The composer once made a comment about his compositions in general that is well suited to this sonata. "If people knew what I think of when I compose, they would tremble with fear." Miss Ritchie played this work with audience-jolting power. A tendency to change the rhythm too abruptly was perhaps a fault of the performance.

Liszt's Funerailles was rendered vigorously with a large ponderous tone, and an artist's sympathy for its somber theme.

The Chopin Nocturne, composed in imitation of the violin, seemed the most beautifully played selection on the program. The clear, transparent execution was well suited to this dreamy picture.

Groups Suggest Government Aid

Ottawa: The Canadian Association of Architects and the Federation of P.T.A.'s and Home and School Clubs have both recently endorsed the national student federation's resolution favoring student scholarships.

Over the past four years, dozens of organizations have placed themselves on record as favoring the NFCUS-proposed government aid to students.

From 1949-50 the University itself published a periodical known as the Varsity Graduate. Now the University, at the request of the Alumni Association, is undertaking the publication of the Alumni Bulletin under the title of The Varsity Graduate.

"I hope to develop the editorial content of the magazine to make it just as interesting to undergraduates as to graduates," said C. C. M. Grier, Editor of the publication. "It will definitely contain a resume of the news in as many branches of University life as we're able to cover," he added.

The staff of The Varsity Graduate is composed mainly of undergraduates. Assistant Editors are Clyde Batten and Catherine Breslin.

Quartet Entries Asked Winner Sings at Dinner

The Hart House Intercollegiate Quartet Contest will be held in conjunction with the Members' Invitation Dinner on March 2. Toronto's entrant will be the winner of the Interfaculty Quarter Contest which begins on Monday, Feb. 6, and continuing for four successive Mondays.

Last year the Skule House Four won both the Interfaculty and Intercollegiate prizes.

Bob Jarman, Quartet Committee, chairman announced that Waterloo College and the University of Montreal have submitted entries and said last night that he anticipated a high standard of competition.

"To date several entries have been received for the Interfaculty Contest, but there is still room for more," he said. "There should be no fear of a group not being good enough, for the contest is sponsored solely for the enjoyment derived by all who participate."

Entry forms are obtainable in the Undergraduate Office, Hart House and should be submitted by 5:00 p.m., Wed., Jan. 25. There is no restriction regarding the type of song.

How to get better marks . . .

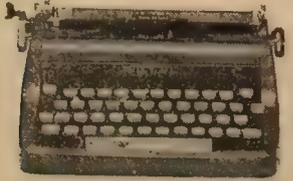

According to many well-known educators, there's a legitimate way to improve your marks. They contend that typewritten notes and essays lead to better standing. Thoughts are expressed more clearly—spelling improves.

And speed? Fast longhand writing is about 30 words a minute. In no time at all you can do far better on a Royal Portable.

Typed notes mean less squinting and guessing at exam time too!

Just one caution—when choosing a portable typewriter, look for a Royal. The rugged Royal will last a lifetime. Small wonder it's the world's favorite.

Baton Rouge, Louisiana: The Daily Reville, of Louisiana State University, has been investigated during the last few weeks, by a students' committee, and their report has been presented. The editors of the paper dissent with the recommendations.

"We feel that a student newspaper cannot best serve as 'the official voice' of the student body because we think that 'an official voice' would necessarily become a captive voice," the editors wrote.

Vancouver: 438 acres of land have been transferred to the University of British Columbia by the provincial cabinet. This brings the total campus area to about 1000 acres. As well as buildings, it is expected that the area will provide additional playing fields and recreational facilities.

Morgantown, West Virginia: The state legislature is considering an estimate of $11 million, out of a total budget of $94 million, for state universities. This West Virginia expenditure of $11 million in one year on universities compares with a total of about $40 million spent by all the governments in Canada on aid to universities.

Washington, D.C.: The President of the United States is expected to ask congress for an appropriation of $1,250 million to help the nation's schools over the next five years.

Kingston: George Drew may address Queen's University Model Parliament, as guest speaker, this year. The campus Conservative party will be the government in this year's Model Parliament at Queen's.

Winnipeg, Man.: The Students' Union has rejected most of the points in a planned revision of student council activities on the campus. The council refused to eliminate the editor of the Manitoba as a member of their students' council. (The editor of The Varsity is also a non-voting member of the SAC here.)

The Manitoba also chided the president of their students' council for pettiness—in deciding that no one could visit the secretary of the students' council. This decision was taken so that the office might improve its efficiency.

Ann Arbor, Michigan: After this year, students living right in Ann Arbor will find it more difficult to get into residence. Freshmen whose homes are in the city will only be allowed to apply for residence if their parents agree to house a non-Ann Arbor student.

The new policy has been initiated because of crowded residence conditions and an expected increase in enrolment. The policy will be reviewed and altered as conditions change, the Vice-President said.

Skule Building: Toke Oike, student newspaper of the engineers, commented in its latest issue that it was getting "a little tired" of the drive to professionalize the engineers.

Toke Oike pointed out editorially that engineers are not a close group because they work at a variety of jobs, and have nothing in common "except four years at college."

The latest issue of Toke Oike—the first eight-page publication in some time—was printed at The Varsity's printers, The North Toronto Herald.

Free Enterprise Will Expand In Fifty Years - Harvard Prof

Kingston: (CUP)—Canada and the United States will have more free enterprise, not less, in the second half of the 20th Century because "free enterprise is what we want," said Dr. Samuel E. Morrison, of Harvard University.

The noted American historian was speaking on "Economic Freedom" at the second Dunning Trust Lecture last week at Queen's University.

"Our mixed system of free enterprise, squeezed between the upper millstone of the state, and the nether millstone of the labor union, is still grinding out far greater benefits, in terms of the good life, than any other system known to us . . . and certainly with greater benefits than those in any parallel system today," Dr. Morrison stated.

But Dr. Morrison also stated that religion must help implement our political and economic institutions.

"Free enterprise makes strong demands on human nature. It can only function in a society that believes in God and in the Hebrew-Hellenic ethics we inherit; a society where the great majority of people respect integrity, and have higher values than mere wealth and comfort."

Dr. Morrison said only a Christian commonwealth is capable of preserving freedom, and without freedom, nothing in our civilization is worth preserving.

"Economic freedom as commonly understood," he said, "means in the economic field free trade and free currency exchange. It means Freedom to choose your profession . . . freedom to make all the profits you can . . . freedom to grow rich or go broke . . ."

Dr. Morrison stated that "galloping capitalism had given the U.S. and Canada its greatest prosperity."

He said that although 135 corporations in the U.S. own 45% of the industrial assets of that country, and although the great prizes of the future are likely to go to these industrial giants, there should be plenty of room for the small fellow.

Dr. Morrison said that the capitalist system of the U.S. had been saved by the New Deal of the 30's, even though Roosevelt's program had been wasteful and inefficient.

"If we had not had an FDR," he said, "we would have had a Huey Long."

Danger of Nationalism In North America Now Outlined at Hillel Talk

Nationalism and the great community of learning was discussed last night at the Hillel series.

Speaking to a crowd of over a hundred, Dr. Henry Steele Commager of Columbia University said that Nationalism is becoming as much of a problem in the West to-day as it was in 19th century Europe. Dr. Commager outlined the parallel development of nationalism and the community of learning.

Up to the 18th century, he said, scholars and artists were internationally appreciated and honored. But with the French and American revolutions a change appeared.

European nations suddenly became nationalistic, each aware of his own superiority and importance, he said. Writers, artists and scholars no longer sought learning and art for their own sakes but to instill the virtues of their state.

In the U.S., he said, the story was not quite the same. Set up originally as a co-ordinate and co-operating state, the U.S. fought only wars of precaution.

Thus, Dr. Commager argues, no chauvinistic nationalism was achieved. He said that nationalism in the U.S. grew up from below, that the people have never trusted big government, nor have they ever worshipped the central authority, looking at it with a "fishy eye."

Contributing to the prevention of the European type of Nationalism on this continent, said Dr. Commager, was the absence of one strong church of militaristic class.

Dr. Commager described the cultural picture in the U.S. during the last century. American scholars, artists and technologists went to Europe to study and from there brought back what was most adaptable to the America of their day.

"In Europe, nationalism was inextricably connected with romanticism," said Dr. Commager. People looked to the golden past of their nations for inspiration and themes for glory. The U.S. on the other hand, had no past to look to and romanticism took the form of looking towards the future.

"The American Romanticist of the 19th century," commented Dr. Commager, "looked to the west and the future for their golden age."

Now, however, Dr. Commager believes, there is a continual change for the worse. There is an emergence of nationalism and the bureaucratic mind. With the struggle for nationalism in Asia, Africa and some of the South American countries, America is giving its technological and economic aid and is feeling its strength.

"Americans have to learn in one generation the lesson at power that it took Britain 100 years to learn."

With Canada growing ever stronger, Dr. Commager concluded, the problem of chauvinistic nationalism is also growing here.

Sports Types Smash Newsies In 11-3 Ice Hockey (?) Win

In a reasonable (but not very) facsimile of the game of hockey, the Sports Department of the Varsity retained temporary possession of the Kash Trophy by edging out a close 11-3 victory over the News Staff yesterday in Varsity Arena.

The game started sharp, a half hour late, due to the unfamiliarity of the News Staff with the world of sports (they spent twenty minutes in the Hart House squash courts awaiting the opposition).

The Sportsies, minus the sharp shooting of Flashy Flo, chalked up a 6-1 edge by half time. Howie Mandell came out of the Sports net to open the scoring at the 4 second mark, and quick tallies by Merle O. and aforementioned Wilson made it 3-0 before misplaced Michener broke the Newsies' goose-egg. The Sports Editor (attention Mr. Wall), situated some 185 feet offside, poked in three more to make it 6-1.

After a brief intermission to enable Bob Brown to be helped to his feet (he had been sitting rather dejectedly on the blue line since the game started), the contest got underway again. John Wojtech scored first before a Flying Frenchman named Charlebois and Al Toton (on loan from Sports) made it 7-3. Miss O. was unable to stop the shots from her behind-the-net-position, Wilson (?) and the S. E. rapped in four more to make the final 11-3.

Word has it that the newsmen are preparing a b-ball team in an all out effort to regain the trophy. After that, perhaps wrestling? Who knows?

Toike Oike Looks Backwards; Considers Recognition Problem

Issue number 6, volume 50, of the Engineers' official newspaper, appeared on Wednesday. Toike Oike, devoted exclusively to news of interest to those in the science faculties, gave the greatest space to the Winter Carnival and a forthcoming dance.

The editorial column was devoted to a discussion of professional recognition of engineers. The editor said that engineering will probably never be a well-regulated profession because of the wide variety of occupations encompassed by it. It said the engineer would benefit through greater recognition of the fact that he is a professional man, but rejected the idea of an American Federation of Engineers.

Included in the paper was a reproduction of the front page of Feb. 19, 1929. Make-up differed radically from the present tabloid-style lay-out. Like most papers of that time, stories were written in single columns, running into the next when the bottom of the page was reached. The paper was three columns wide.

Reporters were allowed free use of editorial comment and expression of personal approval in all copy.

Wednesday's paper offered assorted types of humour to conforming Engineering taste. A former Varsity CUP staffer said, on reading a column called "Definitions": "That's the sort of thing we tried to run in 'CUP Runneth Over' last year, but we were nearly censured for it."

Montrealmen Invade Campus Varsity Opposes Annexation

Quebec's position in Canada will be subject to debate to-day when the McGill Debating Team supports the motion: "Resolved that Quebec should annex Canada" against two U. of T. debaters.

The debate commencing at 1.00 p.m. in room 67, UC, will be the first exhibition debate under the auspices of the University of Toronto Debating Union.

It expected that the McGill emissaries will paint a rosy picture of the benefits that would accrue to the provincials of Canada through annexation by Quebec.

Speaking for the opposition, Clyde Batten (III UC) said he hopes to "probe the subtleties of this annexation question."

He is supported by Moïse Reiter, (III UC), who will "expose the conspiracy that festers beneath this seemingly harmless question."

Both debaters successfully represented U. of T. in inter-university competition with McMaster last year.

All students are invited to attend.

LIBERALS TAKE POWER

Carnival Queen Is Sylvia Kilu - Pharmacy Rep.

Sylvia Kilu, Pharmacy's fair-haired candidate, was chosen as Queen of Toronto's Winter Carnival yesterday at Caledon.

Sylvia, who stands 5' 8", was selected from among 14 candidates for the regal honor on the basis of flap-jack flipping, wood-chopping, snowshoeing, enthusiasm, willingness, and, "general appearance." She is a student in the second year of Pharmacy's degree course.

The Queen was presented with her crown as she sat on a throne carved out of natural ice. The presentation was made by Warden Joe McCulley of Hart House.

Doreen Fogarty, P.O.T., and Eileen Johnson, P.H.E., were selected as the princesses of the Carnival.

The presentation of the Queen's crown was almost marred by an accident. Just as Warden McCulley was making the presentation, the ice on which the assembled crowd was standing (on one of Caledon Farm's many ponds) gave a loud crack, and the crowd, the queen, and McCulley dispersed in short order. No one was hurt, however.

Later, a carnival official described the process whereby the Queen was selected. He said that no one could quite decide who won the flap-jack flipping contest, held Thursday night, for the benefit of the Igloo's inhabitants.

The Queen candidates were also required to saw wood in their attempts at the crown. Quennefer Wood-Hahn, Architecture, won this contest with a time of ten seconds for a log two and a half inches in diameter.

Miss Kilu tied for second in this contest, along with Janet McRae, Vic, and Doreen Fogarty, P.O.T., who were all clocked at 13 seconds.

Eileen Johnson, P.H.E., won the snowshoe contest for the Queen candidates with a time of 43 1/2 seconds for the 150 yard course. Doris Kerr, Meds; Doreen Fogarty; Marg Grace, Nursing, came close on her heels.

However, Miss Kilu had a hard time in this contest, as she tripped and became tangled in the snowshoe strings. She was carried over the contest line by enthusiastic carnival supporters.

Gifts and Notes - Fascinating Make Igloo Stay 'Intriguing'

The two igloo inhabitants were released from their snowy prison Friday noon after spending 24 hours in an igloo in the middle of the university campus.

And — for their troubles — they were presented with some "fascinating" gifts. They received, among other things, a can of Serno, ice cubes, a cap can (with blood running out of its mouth), a snowball, a bottle of beer, and a block of ice.

"It wasn't as bad as we expected," said Mitchell. But Sanderson remarked that "The only thing that troubled me was people running around on the igloo roof at 3:00 a.m."

The igloo-dwellers also report that they found an "intriguing" note in their igloo when they returned to it late last night. The note said: "Dear Boys:

We were here — but you weren't in!

Two disappointed Cody House Lovelies."

There was lipstick faintly visible at the end of the note.

Fox Pelt Again For Forestry Highest Points In Competition

Forestry has again taken the Fox Pelt Award at the Winter Carnival, with Skule coming in second. This award goes to the faculty or college on campus with the highest number of points in winter sports competitions at the Carnival. Forestry also got a 60 point bonus for the six woodsmen who slept outside on Saturday night at the Farm.

Final standing was Forestry, 314 points, Engineering and Aeronautical Engineering, 215, and Victoria, third in the competition with 25 points.

In an extra-curricular competition a girls team from P&OT defeated Forestry 3-2 in hockey. The game was played on the Caledon pond Saturday afternoon. No points were counted for the Award. The girls were given hockey sticks, while the

Given Mock Parliament By Gov-Gen Macdonald On Authority's Advice

The Mock Parliament tangle was cut Friday as Governor General E. A. Macdonald, acting on the advice of Professor C. B. MacPherson, appointed a Liberal government.

Professor MacPherson, an outstanding Canadian constitutional authority, had prepared a five page statement outlining thirteen possibilities for the government, but favoring the Liberals.

The minority Liberal Government, with only 30 seats, will have the support of the CCF's 19 votes in parliament.

The mix-up began in November, when no party gained a majority in the Mock Parliament Elections.

The Conservatives claimed the right to govern, because their vote was larger than that of any other party. A Liberal-CCF agreement gave the Liberals the support of 49 votes to the Conservatives' 42, and dispute arose as to which faction would govern.

MacPherson's report emphasized that if the CCF agreed to support the Liberals in opposition as well as in government, a Conservative government would be thrown out on the first no-confidence motion.

"In view of the fact that the CCF have given me an undertaking that they will support the Liberal party both in government and in opposition," said Governor General Macdonald after a four-party meeting Friday, "and since that seems to me to be the best possibility of attaining a stable government, I have asked the Liberal party, having been assured of CCF support, to form the government."

Penal reform and health insurance will be the Liberals' programme. The CCF party has agreed to support them in this "limited" programme, said a Liberal spokesman.

The Liberal Party has not formed a coalition with any other party, and has never sought a coalition," said Prime Minister Larry Levenstein of the Liberals. "The CCF party will take no part in forming the government. They will take no seats in the cabinet. The Liberal party will accept full responsibility for the health insurance bill."

CCF leader Al Millard also denied the two parties were forming a coalition.

"How many who voted Liberal would have voted for a socialist coalition?" asked PC leader Ted Rogers last night. He repeated previous charges of "expediency" by the Liberals and CCF. "This is an abandonment of public duty."

Foresters Frigid 'Slept' Outdoors

Six hardy Foresters spent Saturday night at the Carnival outside — three of them in tents, and three under the stars.

Armed with two sleeping bags apiece and their oldest, heaviest clothes, Dave Fayle, Bob van Nostrand, Martin Sudden, Ted Wilson, Bob Simpson, and John Gurtin all spent the night outside.

Commented one, "It was cold to begin with but after we'd been there a little while it was fine. Why, we didn't even wake up till nine o'clock."

The few that undertook to sleep in the barn fared a little less happily. They had only hay to bunk in and according to one frozen soul, "It was murder."

Facts From NFCUS....

At the NFCUS regional conference this weekend in Hamilton, delegates from nine Ontario universities:

—heard the NFCUS Scholarships resolution is being presented in the House of Commons this Thursday.

—moved Toronto's Scholarships mandate to the National Office in Ottawa.

—discussed the basic role of NFCUS and sent Toronto's proposal for more meetings and less frills on to Ottawa.

—learned Canadian Campus was no longer a NFCUS propaganda magazine, but a paid literary one.

—recommended a sliding scale of voting at all conferences to the National Executive, with three voting delegates for universities over 5,000, two delegates for universities from 1,000 to 5,000 enrolment, and one delegate from universities under a thousand students.

—suggested $1300 as an income tax exemption for working students.

—requested a referendum from the Students' Council on whether to include non-NFCUS members in the NFCUS debating union.

—reported varied reactions to student life insurance and SDS.

Foresters made do with cut-down brooms.

"We depend on quality, not quantity," said Dave Story (IV For.) about his faculty's success. Forestry took first place in three of the five events, and Skule took the other two events.

With a compass and map between them, four engineers ran three miles back to the Caledon Farm in 48 minutes to win the orienteering contest. Bruce Stewart (III Vic) presented the Torontoensis Nonsense Trophy to the winners, Bill Friend, Bob Gray, Bob Warnica, of III SFS, and Harvey Oldham, (II SFS).

The downhill ski run, as originally laid out, proved too difficult for the competitors, and the course was changed after nearly all of them had fallen. John Hill of Skule was the eventual winner, with a time of a minute and fifty seconds over the 250 yard course.

Five foresters, entered the snowshoeing race, and naturally enough they won. There were no other competitors. Dave Story came in first, in twelve minutes and twenty-six seconds, and the other four followed him in times up to twenty minutes and a bit.

In the wood-chopping, Forestry took first and third places.

At Long Last

Upper years Dominion-Provincial type B bursaries have been received and are available for distribution in the Chief Accountant's Office, Room 109, Simcoe Hall.

A recent and rather nasal ballad in the United States has been causing considerable concern in that country.

The song, entitled "I Sold My Soul to The Company Store," tells of the plight of a poor exploited coal miner who breaks his back producing 16 tons of coal a day only to be continually sinking deeper in debt to the company owned store.

The furor that the song has raised south of the border has been caused by the ballad's "anti-capitalistic" bias. A host of critics have sprung up to blast the subversive hill-billy song and to point out the fact — undoubtedly true — that the conditions described in the song no longer exist in any American or Canadian coal mine.

While this is quite true, many of these critics forget to mention that the conditions described in the song did exist as recently as thirty years ago on this continent, and are still prevalent elsewhere in the world.

These professional anti-subverters need to develop both a sense of history and a sense of humor.

persona non grata

Twelve cars formed outside the entrance to the campus at one o'clock on Friday to make up the Carnival float parade. Upon approaching that scourge of the student driver, the university policeman, they were told that they were persona non grata.

In fact, one student was told that there were specific orders given to keep the parade out of the campus.

Granted, the organizers of the carnival among the many duties which they had to perform had neglected to phone the administration specifically to get permission for these unstickered automobiles to enter the campus. Granted, this was the only courteous thing to do under the circumstances.

Nevertheless, the administration knew that the Hart House operated committee had planned a parade on Friday as part of the general celebrations.

If it is true that specific instructions were given not to admit the parade, it seems that some members of the administration are indulging in childish pouting because of an unwitting slight.

Finding themselves barred from the campus, certain members phoned Simcoe Hall to see if permission could not be obtained. The only reply was that permission could have been obtained earlier.

This frigid refusal was quite unnecessary. And this incident of the administration needlessly interfering with harmless student plans is not the first or only example.

If the administration wishes to be regarded without hostility by the students of this university it must cease to treat them as children and offer them the respectful consideration that mature people consider the due of another human being.

OUR READERS WRITE:

A Warning Against "Teasers" With Impish Lips

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Much has been said on the wave of sex crime, a little more. Daily newspaper headlines shriek "will demand life and lashes for sex criminals." The entire public gets carried away in the welter of sensationalism and a feeling of righteous indignation. Now is the time for all to express "how awful," "how beast-like," "how dreadful" such crimes are. Those who commit sex crimes are usually righteously condemned. However the public must not overlook the teasing elements often present.

As a confirmed night-walker in a district rather on the seamy side, I've seen the "teasing" element at work and cannot condemn it too strongly. It asks for trouble. On corners, preferably dim-lit, girls in age from 12-17 stand about in skin-tight Texas tans, puckering impishly painted lips. The bosom in most of these specimens is not emphasized. The reason, I presume is lack of development in this area. (This may well be the cause of the shift from breast to bottle.) These

"Loveleis" will drift from their rocks, in two and threes and walk in what they think is a luring manner (it's driving me crazy) in search of admiring male goons.

Such sought after specimens are not hard to come by. Their ages range from 14-23. They wear rather standardized monkey-suits, cowboy-king tight fitting jeans and jean jackets.

The jail bait (the girls) consider they have had a successful evening if one of the male goons make a few disgusting remarks about their pronounced posteriors and their all-round invitation-to-bed mannerism. In light of events, I think few desire the invitations to be accepted. But there are those few who do. Evidently the boys are taking no chances, trying to find those convivial few.

Set this down as the warning of a prude to be sirens. My boys are liable to misinterpret the instructions.

How's Your Self-restraint?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

May I exercise some "Freedom of the Press" and beg the reader answer a problem-question?

Either that "Freedom" means freedom with restraint or without any restraint at all. Now, Reader, if it is the former then that restraint (call it censorship?) is justified by definition. But if it is freedom without restraint it is a position and positions must be justified.

Consider that justification. What a man reads influences his thoughts and activities. (I presume The Varsity agrees.) But then one must ask if that influence is good for the reader or bad. (sic: Is exercise without standards or restraint good for the athlete?) . . . CONCLUSION: Freedom of the press is subject to the primary standard of its matter being good or bad for the reader. Therefore, there must be restraint in The Varsity or else The Varsity feels free to harm the reader!

Further, restraint is either self-restraint or external restraint. Can The Varsity or any campus newspaper exercise sufficient self-restraint?

But Adult-Children cannot exercise self-restraint because they have not yet acquired sufficient experiential knowledge. (Note: we have juvenile delinquents.) Many adults find it impossible. (Note: we have convalescents and prisons.)

And Varsity affirmed in a recent editorial it was bound to tell the truth. The truth is, university students are not yet adults but have delivered themselves into the hands of others to acquire such necessary volitional and intellectual knowledge. They are not here to do what they want but WHAT THEY OUGHT since then they do what is good for them as men and students.

GENERAL CONCLUSION: Varsity, as all student newspapers, is bound by restraint. While self-restraint is recognized as ideal it is impossible on its level and mature, firm guidance is necessary from without to see that no policy is pursued injurious to staff or reader.

Corollary: This IS Freedom, freedom from the penalty of untruth, the disgusting, and the harmful. Freedom of the press means just that.

James G. Case.

Liberals Unsportsmanlike

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We charge both the Liberal and C.C.F. parties with trying to avoid debate on the Conservative legislative program for the coming Mock Parliament — namely bills to abolish the payment of unemployment dues by students; to exempt students from paying income tax up to yearly earnings of $1500; to build an all Canadian public gas pipeline and measures to process Canadian raw materials in Canada. We charge that the Liberals and C.C.F. are afraid of taking a stand on these bills which are of intense interest to the students of our campus.

The Liberals and C.C.F. are being unsportsmanlike in not accepting their defeat gracefully and are abandoning all principles in their desperate bid to gain power which has caused great havoc in making plans for the Mock Parliament.

The campus political clubs fought the election representing their respective party platforms. Students did not vote for coalitions but rather for the policy of the winning party to be brought to the Mock Parliament and debated. The Conservative Club on the campus reflects party policy because student opinion is represented on the National Exec. of the Party. This is not the case with the Liberals and the C.C.F. They claim the right to abandon party policy at the Mock Parliament which amounts to hypocrisy with the student electorate.

The Conservative Party promises a highly interesting and debatable Mock Parliament unless it is spoiled by the bickerings and whimpering of the frustrated and defeated Liberal and C.C.F. petty politicians.

U of T Conservative Club.

We Pay No Fees

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Comparing the life of university students in California and in Toronto we noticed two striking differences:

1. The students here do not pay university fees.
2. The high school teachers' training is incorporated into undergraduate university training.

We would like to add another fact, namely that the students being trained for teachers are happier and pleased with their courses. From our contacts with O. C. E. students in Toronto we could tell that these students had a great dislike for that institution.

We do not advocate acceptance of all educational ideas from this side of the border, but some may be better than those in Canada. It seems to us that a course in hiking would not be suitable for Canadian Universities, but a university education without costly fees would be most desirable.

Hockey Blues Lose 3-2 Lavoie Stars For Laval Blues In Second Place

By JOHN WILSON

Frustrated for two periods by the agile netminding of Laval goaler Reynald Lavoie, Varsity's ice Blues grabbed a slim 2-1 lead midway in the third frame of Friday's Intercollegiate feature, say it tied up and lost it with minutes left when Pierre Raymond was left uncovered at point-blank range in front of the Varsity net.

Raymond's goal was the second of two counters, and came barely three minutes after Rejean Perron had nullified the Blue margin, slapping in a rebound at 15:30 of the third period.

Blues out-hot Laval 45-16 over the evening but failed miserably in countless attempts to out-guess the clever Lavoie. Brian Anderson put them back in the game at the 8:25 mark in the third with the prettiest goal of the night, after bringing a loose puck out from the corner.

Centre Don Cossar had given the Blues the lead seconds after being foiled on a solo rush by Lavoie, but the margin was short-lived. Taking advantage of the few opportunities offered around the Varsity goalmouth, the Laval marksmen struck quickly with two payoff goals, and vaulted the Red and Gold squad into sole possession of first place in the league standings.

The victory also marked the end of an 18-game unbeaten streak for the Blues in league play, begun in the last three games of the 1954 schedule.

Varsity had a decided edge in play throughout the first period, and controlled the puck for most of the second stanza. But the Laval attack came to life in the third behind the capable direction of captain and veteran centre Bob Lafreniere, who paved the way for both third-period goals.

Outstanding in a losing cause for the Blues were centres Cossar and Anderson, while wingtips Ken Linseman and Johnny Macdonald exhibited a merciless degree of back-checking, but to no avail.

The usually reticent third line burst forth with vengeance in the last two periods, and came often closer than the others while holding off the Laval snipers. Defenceman Dave Jackson played his usual giant game at the blue line, with Big Sam Ashton turning in a stellar performance both attacking and defending.

But by far the most brilliant performance was that given by Lavoie, displaying an untold degree of vigilance between the Laval pipes. Often left without adequate protection, and fronted by a crew that allowed Varsity men to sift in and out of the opposition's territory almost at will, the veteran netminder deserved anybody's first star.

"You write him a big star," offered Laval Coach Jean-Paul Poulin after the game. The man was dead right, Lavoie made the difference and the Blues slid to second place, a spot they haven't seen for more than a season.

Varsity Whites Tie 2-2 Fisher, Lotocki Score

By JOHN VOJTECH

The Varsity Whites came within twelve seconds of coming up with a win last Saturday night in the T.H.L. Major Series, as a Pick'n Chicken goal tied up the score at 2-2. The Whites played the brand of hockey everyone knew they were capable of, but four penalties in a row in the third period proved to be too much for them to handle.

The Whites started out like a team on fire, and their persistence finally paid off as Ted Lotocki scored on a long shot from the blue line. Duncan Brodie and Grant Mills were credited with assists on this, the only goal of the game scored while both teams were at full strength. The lead was short lived as Fraser Scott scored while Brodie was servng a penalty. This goal was heavily disputed by the Whites as it seemed that Scott had knocked the puck down with a high stick and then proceeded to take his shot.

The Whites took the lead again in the second period as Clare Fisher picked up the rebound from Greg Burassa's shot, and fired the puck home before the P.C. goalie had a chance to move. Grant Mills had a breakthrough, but he was outguessed by P.C.'s Freddy Coles. Then came the disastrous third period. With a little more than three minutes left to go in the game, Mills received a penalty, followed a minute and a half later by Brodie. Don Borthwick had a great chance to fire the insurance marker as he got loose on a breakthrough, but he missed, and, on the return rush by Pick'n Chicken, Bruce MacFayden scored.

On Passing Out . . . Hugh Curry came up with one of his better games in the Varsity nets. The two goals that got by him would have had any goalie beaten . . . John Tolton and Ted Lotocki stood out on the Whites' defence . . . Brodie played a good game going both ways well . . . Fisher continues to make the opposition look sick with his expert stickhandling either while his team is at full strength or short-handed . . . Burassa played a rousing game at the right wing slot . . . A little more polish around the opposition's nets, as well as their own, may put the Whites on a winning stride . . . The players have been getting peeved with the refereeing they've received. If some players had their way, a new slate of referees would be brought in. The first P.C. goal is one example. Even their view is upheld by an impartial ex-baseball umpire who sat in on the game.

Wrestlers Split In U.W.O. Meet Intermeds Star

Senior and intermediate teams from the University of Western Ontario split with the University of Toronto wrestlers in an exhibition meet held in Hart House Saturday afternoon.

Western seniors won seven bouts and trounced the Blues 29-8, while the Varsity Intermediates took a 28-10 decision, winning six bouts and losing three.

Wally Kamitakahara and Bobby Waugh were the only Toronto winners in the senior meet. Kamitakahara won by decision from Bill Kidney in the 130 pound division, while Waugh pinned Western's Ray Johnson at 2:59 of the third period in the 191 pound class.

Varsity intermediates displayed unexpected power in defeating the Western Seconds. Murray Berman, Jimmy Dent, Chuck Mayer, Bob Alexander, Bill Chykaluk and Bob Herod all had individual bouts for the Toronto team.

Birdies

Girls are reminded that the intramural badminton tournament begins tomorrow at the Carleton Club which is at Church and Hayden streets just below Bloor.

All girls who entered the tournament are to report to the Club on Tuesday morning at 9 a.m. decked in their whites. Birds will be supplied.

The four intercollegiate players who will travel to Montreal in February will be selected from the participants in this tournament.

Baby Blues Beat Ryerson Stroud, Stulac High Men

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Varsity Intermediates, after allowing an 11 point second half bulge to dissipate into nothing, closed with a rush in the last three minutes last Friday night to take a 69-63 decision from Ryerson Rams. The tilt, played at Ryerson, was Varsity's first exposure this year to regular intercollegiate play as the Baby Blues strive to retain the title they shared last year with Western.

The turning point in the game occurred with only three minutes left and Toronto holding a slim 59-57 lead. Ryerson's Ed McClay, who had pumped in 24 points, to head the scoring for both sides, collided accidentally with Varsity's Rollit Goultung. Goultung retaliated by taking a few wild swipes at McClay who responded with a few misses of his own. The end result was that both were ejected from the game. Gary Vipond then sank both shots of the one and bonus that had been awarded to Goultung because of McClay's body contact. The two points increased Varsity's edge to four and the Baby Blues went on to lead by as many as ten points before winding up with their six point margin.

The Rams sorely missed McClay who had displayed a real hot hand and rarely missed a second half shot.

The Seconds had some rough sledding early in the game when they found it difficult to adapt themselves to the large floor and to cope with Ryerson's zone. Varsity, forced to shoot from the outside, saw their shots rimming the hoop and popping in and out. Barry Stroud especially was having tough luck with his shots.

The Toronto squad finally got untracked at the eight minute mark and led by Goultung's rebounding and some fine shooting by Dave Parker, finished off the half with a 31-21 lead. Parker scored 12 of his 14 points in the opening half.

Throughout the encounter, RIT had many opportunities to score via the fast break route but continuously blew them. Two or three times a Ram had a break-away but took steps as he attempted to score. When Ryerson had two on one, their dribbler usually couldn't control the ball properly and either lost it or threw it away.

The Ted Toogood coached Rams overcame an 11 point deficit in the last half and tied up the game. They were sparked by McClay's accurate shooting and the ferocious rebounding of Ed Pazon.

After the affair was tied up, the story until the double expulsion was one of Varsity taking the lead and Ryerson coming back on even terms. Joe Stulac and Barry Stroud found the scoring range for Varsity in this last half while Pazon kept the Rams in the ball game by scoring 12 points in the last 12 minutes of the tilt.

Varsity's top scorers were Stroud and Stulac, each with 15. Pazon's 16 points gave him second place on the Ram score sheet behind McClay's 24. Short shots . . . A real oddity occurred in the game, namely, a four point play. Varsity's Mike Syron fouled McClay who had just taken a shot. The shot went in and the officials ruled that the foul took place after the shot. McClay was given the one and bounds and made both shots.

Saints Opposed By Engineering - Hockey Game

As a fitting finale to the second day of the Winter Carnival, St. Hilda's Hockey Club opposed the Engineering T-15 in a ball to game.

At first, SPS seemed to have a slight edge in the play as a fact demonstrated as a tall blue-tanned lad skated through the St. Hilda's team for a shot on goal. Fortunately a stick held by a referee was in the path of the puck and the Saints were saved. Chuck Scott's mads however, soon gained the monopoly of the play in the Engineers' end and the future looked bright for St. Hilda's as one of their number got into position — about a foot in front of the goal to shoot on the empty Engineers' net. The shot was wide, but it was only seconds later when an outburst St. Hilda's player wearing a strange black and white striped shirt recovered in the Saints' end and broke away to score the first goal of the game.

About half time, the determined Saints' line, including the man SPS sued in a close checking centre, set the pace.

A smooth stick-handling Engineer in the dying seconds of the game after about 10 minutes of play, weaved his way through the defensive players of the Saints to tie the score.

UC, Trinity Tie Gordon Scores

The Friday afternoon team hockey tussle at Varsity Arena proved to be one of the most thrilling contests this year to date. UC, as St. Hilda's II and UC, it played to a one-all tie. It was a hard fought game all the way and it appeared as though the Trinity girls had the advantage on the play, however they were unable to capitalize in the second department in spite of many excellent opportunities.

For the Saints, Marg Gordon, Glenna Hart and Sandra Kennedy were the big three on the forward attack, while Nancy Montzambert played an outstanding game on defence.

Besides playing an outstanding game throughout for St. Hilda's, Marg Gordon was responsible for the lone tally for the Blue and Grey. Jane Webber was the UC miss who put the puck behind Molly Metcalfe in the Saints' net.

Sr. Skule Wins In B-Ball Game Minardi Shines

In major league action on Friday, Senior Skule squeezed out a close 44-40 decision over their counterparts from UC.

Individual scoring honours went to Minardi of UC with 14 points. Close behind was Scrzypek of Skule with 13 points. Other high men for the winners were Polecerone with 11, Larsen with 8 and Webb with 6. Helping to keep UC in the game were Scott and Banks, with 10 and 6 points respectively.

Ed Scrzypek was outstanding on both offence and defence. Besides being top scorer for Skule, he broke up many UC rushes and set up play after play. For UC Minardi scored on a variety of shots including two beautiful hook shots while Larry Scott displayed great accuracy at the foul line, hitting on 6 out of 7 tries.

Despite a disastrous second period in which they were out-scored 23-6, the Redmen came back strongly in the final frame to outscore the Engineers 20-11; however, this effort fell short of a tie by four points and when time ran out the score was 44-40, the men from Skule.

St. Mike's A Increase First Place Lead Jack Andrews Registers Third Shutout

Hockey activity yesterday saw St. Mike's A's increase their first place margin in group 1 as they snatched, however Jack Andrews shutout Skule firsts 3-0. Ron Doty opened the scoring for the Irish early in the game. Paul Legge broke into the clear at the Skule blue-line shortly after on a pass from Gary Wardsworth to beat SPS's goalie Laster with a shot to the short side of net.

In the second period Ron Sheppard closed the scoring with a nifty backhand shot that fooled Laster completely. The game was snuffed with penalties as both teams tended to be rather touchy when in close. At one time the Irish had three men in the snazer, however Jack Andrews held the fort with the help of the Glonna, Reddall and Fenette. The contest ended with Drolet, of St. Mike's and McAllister, of Skule cooling off in the sin-bin.

Jack Andrews recorded his third shutout of the year and gained some solid support from Glonna, Fenette and Findlay Bedowski and Hewson stood out in a losing effort as did Laster who thwarted several labelled hots by the fiery Irishers.

In further action SPS VI defeated MED VI 6-3. Floyd led the SPS attack with two goals. Coulter, Lewitt, McDonald and Oliver added singles to round out the Skule scoring. Cody with two and Macintosh scored for the sawbone squad.

St. Mike's C's walloped Vic IV 11-2. Terry Wheeler with four, Leo McGugan with a hat trick and Chuck Stock with two, were the big scorers for the Irish. Kevin Wheeler and Jack Tait added singles to complete the scoring for St. Mike's. For Vic A Barker and G. Peacock netted goals.

DIARY

Of an Igloodweller

By JOHN SANDERSON and BARRY MITCHELL
Inhabitants of The Igloo

- 1:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m. — With local peasants hurling tokens of esteem (snowballs) at us we were escorted to our igloo.
- 2:00 - 3:00 — We arranged our equipment and were astonished to find the igloo constructed in true Eskimo fashion. Composed of an obsolete set from the Vic Bob Revue and first grade Varsity arena scrapings.
- 3:00 - 6:30 — We cooked our first meal of bacon and eggs which was supplemented by coffee and donuts brought by kind souls intent on their good deed for the day.
- 6:30 - 7:30 — The Snow Queens dropped by on their way to Tabloid to see how we were faring.
- 7:30 - 8:30 — The cold weather and the girls' ineptness with a frying pan caused the flap-jack flipping to flop.
- 8:30 — After the contest we returned to find two uninvited visitors (one male, one female) huddled together (to keep warm no doubt) enjoying the comfort of our igloo.
- 8:30 - 11:30 — While the crowd dispersed to Hart House we indulged in a few hundred hands of cutthroat poker.
- 11:30 - 1:00 — We entertained ourselves in the besht engineering tradition.
- 1:00 - 7:30 (approximately) — z-z-z-z-z-z!
- 7:30 - 8:30 — Harassed by many ghoulish students who came to see if we had survived the night, we managed to whip up an appetizing breakfast.
- 8:30 - 1:00 — Following breakfast we had a very uneventful morning during which we washed dishes and kept warm.
- 1:00 - 2:00 — Owing to a heroic defense of the Wellesley St. bridge by the guard on duty, our term of imprisonment was extended.
- The beauty of the Snow Queens was exceeded only by their generosity and we received such valuable gifts as a 10-lb. carp (dead), a parcel of ice-cubes, a genuine snow-bell, a whiskey bottle filled with coke and a bottle of beer (later used to bribe a demonstrator in engineering drawing). However the most valued gift was an inscribed plaque from the very efficient Winter Carnival committee commemorating our idocy.

The pictures on this page were taken by Varsity photographers Paul Kyselka and Ed Hoskiw on the U of T campus and at the Caledon Hills farm over the weekend. They illustrate the wide variety of activity in which the 240 Carnival-rellers participated. Other activities not shown were the orienteering contest, the wood-chopping contest and the evening square dance.

It Was A Rockin' At The Carnival Stomp

By MARY JANE ROWLEY

The rafters of the old barn at Caledon Hills Farm were really rocking Saturday night—they had to, it was the only way to get warm. But once they started, everyone soon got warm. The only live musician at the Winter Carnival dance was the "genoovine" fiddler promised in last week's Varsity.

He was a dour type, and his mouth tilted slightly upward in a perpetual sardonic grin. His ears stuck out like a leprechaun's. His scarf was slung carelessly around his neck and one end was bunched up to cushion his fiddle.

Unfortunately, he would start one tune and then decide it was the wrong one.

Since the PA system had broken down (later fixed by the engineers of course) people more or less hopped around and made up their own style of dancing. An interesting observer (and participant) reported, "There were almost as many couples shackled up in the hay as there were on the dance floor. Every few minutes one of the couples would roll onto the dance floor causing a great deal of distraction."

About 240 were there for the Saturday events. At least 70 spent the night in the farm-house while a few other brave souls found themselves such accommodation as tents or the barn. The most serious thing that happened Saturday was that a couple of cars skidded off that horrible road (sheer ice all the way in) and into the ditch.

Preceding the square dance was a monster sing-song held in the most unroomy lounge. As an unexpected surprise, Jim Vasoff, IV SPS, gave his Skule-Nite rendition of Ed Sullivan. A floor-show on a grand scale was well on its way to being formed when the call came for the square-dance.

Following the dance, everyone made for the Caledon Farm's rink and a skating party. The rink is a natural pond, banked by a high stone quarry and cedar trees. Everyone skated (and occasionally fell) around a coleman lantern in the middle of the pond. When they tired of skating or just plain had cold feet, there was a roaring fire and marshmallows to toast.

Tired but happy, finally everyone tramped the mile back to the farm-house for a snack and bed. It was then the conspirators began their grim task. First they lit a roaring fire in the sauna, the Finnish steam bath that was built two years ago by some Finnish exchange students. Unfortunately, six hardy souls left the air vent open and delayed the festivities for sometime.

While this situation was being remedied, they chopped a hole in the ice with a pick and an ax. The two-and-a-half foot aperture is still dramatically marked by a small bush. The heroes (or dopes) steamed themselves for half an hour, du naturel, and plunged fearlessly through the hole into the icy water.

The diehards rushed back to the sauna for an even hotter session and then again jumped into the pond.

On-the-spot comment: "I was right in and out again, and didn't feel anything and anyhow I hurried right back to the Sauna and got warm again." After the second ducking, they too trudged back for a snack of tea and sandwiches before bedtime. We regret that there are no pictures available of this unusual event.

Sunday morning, after a breakfast of flapjacks, bacon, porridge and coffee, the majority of people retired to the barn for a church service. Music was supplied by an accordion and two violins, and organ music on records. Two students from Emmanuel College conducted the service. Everyone sang hymns lustily, mostly in order to keep warm, while the sun peeked in through the cracks—the many cracks in the barn.

After a quick snack of sandwiches and hot meat pies, everyone turned out in full force to cheer on the Snow-Queen competitions of wood-sawing and snow-shoeing. The climax of a wonderful week-end came with the presentation of the fox-pelt award and the crowning of the Snow-Queen to the accompaniment of the Hart House Glee Club. The only mishap occurred at the climax of Warden McCulley's speech when there was suddenly a tremendous cracking and the ice began to break. Someone shouted "Holy Jehosaphat" and everyone scattered for terra firma. Nobody fell in, however, or even came close to it, and everyone gradually filtered back to Toronto and central heating.

MOZART

Paganini On Stradivari

The first part of the Mozart Cycle at the Conservatory has been completed. Thursday through Saturday, the Paganini Quartet performed four of Mozart's string quartets and five of his quintets, to celebrate the bi-centenary of his birth.

The Paganini Quartet derives its name from their Stradivari instruments, which were once owned by Paganini himself and are over 200 years old. The artists have had much experience in music-making, to which these performances and their recordings bear witness. It is the privilege of those who attend these concerts at the Conservatory to be infected by the understanding, communication and enthusiasm that exists between the players and their music.

The music played was composed between 1784 and 1791 for a variety of reasons, primarily to entertain the players and provide a vehicle for their accomplishments — secondly to entertain an audience. The texture is neither that of a sonata, nor of a symphony, yet the expression of each is achieved. Contemporary critics of Mozart complained that his approach was too original and too overloaded for the audience or players to appreciate. Perhaps that is why the works make such good listening to-day.

Outstanding on Thursday night was the andante cantabile of the C Major Quartet (K 465), which contained the most beautiful sonorities and silences. Paul Doktor joined the Quartet to play second viola part in the two string quintets K 614 and K 516. The change in sound when a fifth instrument is added is most marked and agreeable, giving the ensemble more body. It is interesting to compare the results of Mozart adding a viola and Boccherini's addition of a 'cello.

On Friday the violinists produced some magnificent music in the K 458 and the K 575 quartets, particularly in the andante of the latter. Ezra Schabas played the clarinet part in the clarinet part of the Quintet in A major, K 581. The pedigree of his instrument was not revealed, but he controlled it perfectly. The limpid sounds were fired by warm accompaniment from the strings. The quintet has a close affinity with the A major piano concerto, K 488, which is in turn similar to the clarinet concerto. It now seemed that like athletes, the players had only been warming up for the main race, the Quartet in D major, K 575. This work was played with a finesse that at times had been lacking during the evening.

The level of performance and interpretation reached its heights on Saturday. The Quintet K 598 contains a taxing slow movement in which the sombre pulsing of the 'cellist was most effective. Great feeling was lavished upon the Quartet K 387. As on previous evenings, most was achieved in the last item, in this case the C major quintet K 515. This is the first of four last great quintets. The movements were perfectly contrasted—the first urgent, the second suave. There is no better praise for the other than to say that they were truly Mozartian. Finally, a word of praise and thanks to John Beckwith for the comprehensive programme notes.

The cycle continues February 2nd, 3rd and 4th, with the performance of six string quartets, the two piano quartets, and the Divertimento in B flat Major (K 287) for the quartet, bass, and two horns.

The performances are scheduled to start at 8:30 p.m., but the artists kindly appear around 8:35 and pause for the latecomers at the end of the first movement of the opening number. Perhaps the latecomers could show as much courtesy and consideration as the artists (and those who have taken the trouble to arrive on time) by remembering that besides elegance and attendance, punctuality is a social duty and virtue. Incidentally, the same goes for Massey Hall.

Trouble At Hart House

aisle seat

Flitting about as though on a hopscotch court, The Troublemakers, a play in three acts by George Bellak, presented as the year's third Hart House Theatre production, is a work most notable in its pointlessness. Basically it seems to be a tug-of-war between the forces of truth and those of hypocritical self-interest, played out on a field of concentrated ugliness against a sky of hopelessness. There is a disappointing vagueness in the ideas presented, offering only the slightest definition of the issues involved. The tugging brings no resolution of the conflict, the rope of contention parting, tumbling both forces to defeat and disgrace.

Troublemakers is set in the University town of Brighton, with the action alternating between the home of Torin Gerrity and his Saunders University residence. Gerrity, a student and an individualist, has made the mistake of speaking his mind, criticizing his country and calling on his fellow-men to "think" or some such ridiculous thing. Naturally, since they are a pack of dull, unthinking, intellectual jellyfish, they resent being annoyed by this bothersome fellow, whereupon, stimulated to peak efficiency by high-grade bourbon, they give Gerrity a thorough beating that he dies.

His room-mate, Stanley Carr, having witnessed the murder is persuaded by slick Mr. Sprock, monied father of one of the murderers, to help apply a gloss of whitewash to the affair and keep young Sprock from breaking his mother's heart and the family line. But, under pestering of conscience and Grandfather Gerrity, the cad relents and decides to reveal all.

The sordidness so heavily loaded in the story was enough to obscure whatever meaning Mr. Bellak intended for Troublemakers, but the Hart House production managed to relieve the fuzziness to some extent. Even in the meagre, journalistic framework of the play there was room for several instances of effective directing and a number of fine individual performances. The general effect, however, was one of dragging melodrama, almost soap-operaic in parts.

Stereotyping of characters and dialogue in both the residence and Gerrity family scenes was not helped by unenthusiastic playing. Too often there was a feeling of impatience for the actors to hurry up with their little bits of memory work so that the story could get on. But then, too, there were times of strong dramatic impact. The ight scenes were too convincing to have been anything but real, and it was in these that the college-boy types, a little dull at other times, were at their best. So well were scenes staged that it seemed quite believable that murder had been committed, that Torin Gerrity was dead.

Particularly effective was the meeting in the last act of Professor Lockwood, Carr and Sergeant Bender wherein Stanley learns of the rottenness that has grown about to smother his ideals and brave intentions, of the "fix" that Mr. Sprock has arranged with the Police and of the hypocrisy of his "realist" of a Professor. Donald Sutherland as the Sergeant, James Turnbull as the Prof. and Fred Eurringer as Carr, made this the most memorable part of the show in my opinion. Aside from this, and the fight scenes, the appearance of Mr. Sprock and son, Ray Stancer and Barry Lipson, were very good, achieving the atmosphere of deceit and righteous selfishness that made the general tone of the play. A neat job of casting and acting made Michael Nimchuk Buck Wallace, slightly slaphappy football player with a "good heart"—a refreshing change from the never-ending line of characters either intensely good, bad or stupid.

Everybody knows that realism is dead; only the vulgar mourn its passing. To-day it is a kind of primary discipline stuffed down one's throat at art school; great unchewed hunks of life that send the good artists, for relief, into a choking frenzy of abstraction. There are of course other solutions, but these appear too painfully tedious to the young artist who wants to be "modern."

Gerald Scott provides us with some possible solutions to this dilemma. His paintings, currently being shown in the Hart House Gallery, originate in a fundamentally realistic concept, but find their final form through various uses of impressionism, expressionism, and colour abstraction. Of all the paintings in the show, his self-portraits probably best illustrate this technical development. The earliest of these, Self-portrait in Golden Light, shows clearly the development from the Rembrandtian technique of using a middle-tone base, and modelling with a careful application of light and dark, to achieve the effect of inner light found in Rembrandt's portraits.

Several other portraits utilize colour abstractions, sometimes in a manner approximating that of Varley, sometimes that of Rouault. Self-portrait in Blue and Brown, a superb expressionistic study, indicates the further influence of Augustus John, both in technique and the frankness of its insight. Two portraits of Paul, the artist's son, sketched first in black and white, are exquisite in the effect achieved through the later blending in of colour.

Although the show consists mainly of portraits, there are a few exceptionally fine still lifes and cityscapes; one still life of sweet potatoes is beautifully subtle in its delicate abstractions of green, brown, and mauve. The work in this show, with its illuminating vitality, provides a solid foundation for Mr. Scott's future work.

CNB's New Elegiac Couplet

Offenbach in the Underworld is by far the most enjoyable ballet in the Canadian National Ballet's repertoire for this season. Offenbach, one of three dances performed Friday night, is Antony Tudor's new interpretation of the well-known Gaite Parisienne.

The reason for the success of this number is mainly the amazing ability of all the dancers to act as well as dance. Lois Smith, as the operetta star, was delightfully coquettish, Angela Leigh as Queen of the Carriage Trade, was regal and haughty, debutante Lillian Jarvis was excited by the illicit evening and yet sweetly shone by it all.

so obviously comfortable in a dance. The Company enjoyed dancing the number and the audience enjoyed watching it.

Antony Tudor's choreography is brilliant. He has painted Paris' underworld in vivid clear colours. The music of Offenbach is as delightful.

One of the new dances in the repertoire, also choreographed by Antony Tudor, Dark Elegies, was not nearly so effective. There were in the dance a great many motions (especially hand motions) which suggested deep symbolic meaning, but which were not understandable. Although the dancers executed these motions perfectly they did not seem to understand them, and therefore could not possibly put it across to the audience. Nevertheless this is an interesting dance, being extremely different, and I feel it should be performed, but not too often.

Lady From The Sea, another new dance, is quite understandable in spite of some of the rather obscure things it is trying to say. The dancing was, in this dance, also excellent. Celia Franca, the lady from the sea, gave a moving portrayal of a girl who loves the sea, and of a woman with a torturing decision to make. Ray Moller, as the widower she married, gave a dramatic interpretation of the role. Judith Dornis again shone out and outshone the two other sisters, Sylvia Mason and Betty Pope, yet the dances of these three were relaxing interludes amidst the tension of the plot.

The dancers of the Canadian National Ballet Company have shown themselves to be adaptable to almost any style of dancing, and in my opinion are quickly achieving maturity as a group.

Toronto Proposals Approved At Mac Regional Conference

By BILL SMYTH

Hamilton (Special): Hailed by the McMaster Silhouette as coming "with an axe to grind," Toronto's delegates to the Ontario Regional NFCUS conference returned yesterday to report themselves "very well satisfied" that the core of their proposals had been accepted.

In a three-page report to the ten-university conference Toronto emphasized the need for communication among Canadian students and expressed dissatisfaction with the federation's present policy. The conference approved a four-point Toronto programme including plans to introduce seminars and weekend exchanges to the federation's projects.

Under the plan, next fall's national conference will consider the Toronto proposals, which include the implementation of weekends similar to the Carabin Weekends now conducted between the universities of Toronto and Montreal.

"There is every possibility that such a scheme will be introduced," said the NFCUS Co-Chairman. "It will further what I believe to be the central aim of federation, and remove the illusion that NFCUS is, and can be nothing but, a great giveaway show."

Major items on the conference agenda were "the aims of the national federation," "the role of the national conference," which together occupied most of Saturday in the weekend session.

The gathering also voted approval of holding seminars in conjunction with the national conference "on topics of student interest" and introduced plans to streamline the conference, including: (1) the early presentation of prior working papers; (2) descriptive material to be delivered to possible conference delegates both in the spring and fall. The conference approved a sliding scale of voting at all conferences, to equalize the representation of small and large universities.

National president, Peter Martin, student at the University of Toronto last year, arrived late — due to a plane crash near Oshawa — but brought the first information on the NFCUS Travel Service. Students will be able to make bookings for travel to and tours in Europe, starting this week.

The regional conference re-defined the status of the Students' Discount Service, now operating at Toronto, and emphasized that it was set up on a local basis only. The resolution read: "Whereas there has been some confusion as to the status of the SDS, be it resolved that the SDS is a scheme, approved in general by the federation, but operating only on a local level; and that the responsibility of implementing the plan rests with whomever the particular university mandates."

"This simply reiterates that the implementation of SDS is entirely up to the particular universities," said Ed Schofield, SAC federation chairman. "We want no-one to suppose that the discount service forms a fundamental basis of NFCUS."

No explicit decision was made on the admittance of Ryerson to the federation, but the conference approved three criteria for judging those who wish entrance: (1) post-matriculation standing (2) possession of a de facto student organization (3) type of degree or standing offered.

A motion favoring the transfer of the scholarship campaign to the national office was passed at the conference. The vote arose from the recommendation of Harry Arthur, Toronto, Scholarship campaign chairman, because of the heavy burden of administrative and executive duties placed on a student chairman.

There was also speculation that NFCUS might be able to hire an executive secretary, to increase office efficiency and give continuity in the organization.

Veteran observers interpreted the conference as a distinct vote of confidence in the activities of the national office this year, because of the large volume of administrative detail left in the hands of the national executive.

Police "Have Orders" Parade Refused Entry

A scheduled automobile parade — planned as one of the festivities of the Winter Carnival — had to be called off last Friday as university policemen refused to admit the car cavalcade to the university grounds.

The auto parade — 13 cars long — had been slated as part of the Friday noon celebration of the release of the two inhabitants of the Winter Carnival igloo.

But Jim Vasoff, IV SPS, said that a university policeman at the Queen's Park entrance told him that he had received specific instructions not to admit the parade.

Vasoff said that the Carnival Committee had not obtained permission from the University authorities to admit the cavalcade, but did not know why the policemen should have been specifically instructed not to let the parade into the grounds.

The announcement of the motor-car cavalcade was printed in Friday morning's Varsity.

After the policeman's refusal to admit them, Vasoff telephoned the buildings department of Simcoe Hall, but could not obtain permission for the parade to enter. He was told, however, that if he had tried to obtain permission earlier, it would have been granted.

lished principles reflecting their hunger for the appearances of power."

The decision was reached after a meeting of the four political parties, the Governor General, and the Political Economy Club.

Parties this year may again run into problems of filling their seats. "Last year, the CCF were the only party to consistently fill their seats," said one observer.

"a Bill of Rights is imperative in Canada because serious attempts have been made in the last several years to suppress fundamental freedom."

He is supported by Leo Gray, (IV SPS), who said, "in recent years there has been a disconcerting trend to think of material security as being of even greater importance than political rights; the time has come to reserve this trend."

The Negative position, in this debate, will be taken by Dave Finlay and Douglas Wilkins, from Osgoode Hall, who are expected to show that a Canadian Bill of Rights is neither desirable nor necessary.

Women will be permitted to attend, said West. Discussion from the floor will be allowed.

Debate Nation's Need For Bill Of Rights

Inter-University competitive debating returns to the campus this evening when the teams from Osgoode Hall and the U. of T. discuss the question: "Resolved that Canada should have a separate codified Bill of Rights."

This debate, commencing at 8:00 p.m. tonight, in the Debates Room at Hart House is the first for Toronto in the current I. U. D. L. Elimination Tournament. The winning team from this league will compete in the C. U. D.A. national finals, early in the spring, for the MacDonald-Laurier Trophy and the honour of representing Canada in debates abroad, said Bill West, Chairman of the U. of T. Debating Union.

Setting forth the Affirmative position, in this debate, will be Steve Lewis, (I U.C.), who stated, Ottawa: For the first time in its history, The Carleton, the University newspaper of Carleton College. The "Arts Desire" is the special issue published by the Arts Society, to advertise their Arts Masquerade Ball.

Other universities, especially Queen's, make a practice of having special faculty issues.

Windsor: Gordon Vichert's famous "freedom list" of college papers seems to have raised some furor from one end of Canada to the other. The Editors of the Purple and White, of Assumption College, object to their placement (of nineteenth) on the list.

It was from Assumption that the strong criticism of The Ubyssy came — it was called the "vilest rag imaginable" by an Assumption professor. The Ubyssy heads McMaster's "freedom" list.

The Editors claim that faculty supervision of The Purple and White is for the purpose of seeing "that the grammatical content of the paper is in keeping with the highest English standards." The faculty moderator has had to delete about three lines of copy in three years, they claim.

The Editor and Assistant Editor commend the faculty of Assumption for the interest they show in student activities. They also declare that their student council has "absolutely no control over the content of the Purple and White."

New York: A student at Columbia University has reported that empty pop bottles have been missing from his room. The case of bottles disappeared several weeks ago and, strangely enough have been reappearing one by one. Each bottle bears a note signed "The Phantom," over a blot of red ink.

Toronto: Ryerson Institute of Technology will soon be getting a brand new home, if tentative plans drawn up by the Institute's administration are approved. The first new building to be built, the Architectural Design Building, is to cost $500,000 and architects are already at work on the plans.

Ryerson is now housed in a series of buildings in downtown Toronto, some of which date back to the 1840's. The new plans call for a quadrangle of buildings on the old site.

The $500,000 for the first building has already been budgeted by the provincial government.

Winnipeg: $3,500 has been allotted for hockey in the 1956-57 Athletic Budget at the University of Manitoba. This means that Manitoba may get into the Western Intercollegiate hockey circuit, The Manitoban announced. The university's Board of Governors still have to consider the budget.

Hamilton: $1,333 was the gross intake from the Treasure Van at McMaster University this year. This is $500 more than last year.

The financial return is better than that of any other university at which the Van has visited this year, the McMaster Silhouette reports. This includes Western, which has a much larger enrolment than McMaster.

Kingston: First steps towards an honour system at Queen's University were taken last fall. Ten permanent student constables have been appointed to oversee student conduct off and on campus.

Queen's students hope that the force will only be necessary for a year or two until an honour system has developed. Under the honour system students will be responsible for their own conduct and that of their friends.

Vancouver: One of the oldest medical schools in Canada, the Faculty of Medicine at the University of British Columbia, is racing ahead in its building program.

A four-storey medical building is under construction, and a basic medical sciences building will be started next year. A 300-440 bed University Hospital on the campus is also planned.

Davies And Bell Are Judges For Varsity's Literary Issue

Two of the five judges for The Varsity literary issue were announced last night.

The judge of the photo contest is to be Mr. Kenneth Bell, professional Toronto photographer and Mr. Robertson Davies, editor of the Peterboro Examiner will judge the entries in the fiction category.

Mr. Bell started photography as a hobby at high school and left an architecture course almost 25 years ago to work at Lane Studios.

He served in the army throughout North-West Europe, and landed on "D" Day with the Highland Brigade. During the German Occupation he commanded the Film and Photo Unit.

Back in Canada, in 1949, he produced a book on the war theme called "Curtain Call", and opened up his own studio, Ken Bell Photography Ltd. He was one of the founders of the commercial and press photographers association of Canada and is now the new president for 1956.

Up to 25 photographs of any size may be submitted by any student at The Varsity office and will be returned where possible providing they are clearly marked. The deadline for entries is January 27th.

Mr. Davies is one of the most versatile of contemporary Canadian writers. Several plays, two novels, (Leaven of Malice is the latest), The Diary and Table, Talk of Samuel Marchbanks and a large share of the Stratford books have all come from his pen at the same time as he fulfilled his editorial responsibilities in Peterboro and pursued his numerous other interests. For years Mr. Davies' book review column in the Saturday Night has been a fine example of intelligent, unpedantic literary criticism.

Short stories may be submitted in The Varsity office up until January 27th. The editors cannot guarantee to return any manuscripts but will make every effort to have them available in The Varsity office the week following the publication of The Literary issue. Every entry should be clearly marked with the author's name and year.

The judges for the essay, light and serious verse categories are not yet known. They will be announced later this week.

A first and second prize will be awarded in each category, if merited.

Nationalism Rises In East Europe —Prof. Halecki

Nationalism in Central Eastern Europe was the topic of a talk last night by Professor Halecki, of Fordham University.

Professor Halecki spoke of the difficulty of defining nationalism adequately, saying that "it is more than a state of mind; it is an active, growing force." He added that few people know whether nationalism is a curse or a blessing, particularly since the term is used both in a derogatory and a laudatory sense.

He listed among the results of nationalism, the second world war, partially caused by this rising force. He also mentioned the connection between nationalism and religion, which in Russia led to control of the Church by the state.

Professor Halecki gave as the main cause of the increased nationalism in Central Eastern Europe the imperialism which led smaller countries to wish not only to protect themselves, but to rise to equal power.

Last night's talk was one of a series held weekly in Flavell House.

Robert Weaver

Weaver Will Judge Varsity Essay Contest

Robert Weaver, a CBC programme organizer, will judge the entries in the articles class of The Varsity literary issue, it was learned last night.

Mr. Weaver is a graduate of University College in Philosophy and English. He has written for the Queen's Quarterly and the Canadian Forum and is now in charge of the Talks and Public Affairs Department at CBC. Two programmes which he supervises are "Critically Speaking" and "Anthology."

Recently he was co-editor of Canadian Short Stories, a book published by the Oxford University Press which included twenty-four stories by Canadian writers.

Other judges are Robertson Davies for short stories, and Ken Bell for photography.

The deadline for contributions is January 27 in The Varsity office.

Classes Cancelled Monday Men Cite Burwash Meals

By MARG EVANS

Influenza has struck the residents of Burwash Hall, Men's residence at Victoria College. Members of the residence were excused from lectures Monday afternoon and advised to stay in and avoid spreading the virus.

A member of North House said the flu was of brief duration and spreads quickly. He added that about one half of the house was sick, and two had been transferred to the infirmary on St. George St. He didn't know whether the Women's Residences had been hit or not, but thought it likely that they would be.

Dr. Love, Senior Tutor for the Men's Residences described the epidemic, which started Burwash on Friday, as 24-hour flu. About 40 of the 250 residents were ill, he said. "Things seem to be under control now and it apparently doesn't seem to be serious," he added.

The influenza epidemic which hit the campus in the autumn of 1918 caused the University to close its buildings, from October 18 to November 1. The epidemic originated in Glasgow and spread the campus and the death of one of the faculty. In February of 1920 a less serious epidemic struck the campus and lasted in the South House infirmary for about three days.

A victim of the epidemic in South House was Dr. J. G. Love, who contracted the epidemic in Glasgow. He returned to Toronto in the autumn of 1918 and was the first to bring the epidemic to the campus. He was the first to bring the epidemic to the campus. He was the first to bring the epidemic to the campus.

Students Protest Damage Money Present Petition

McGill (CUP). A special meeting of the McGill Students' Society was called to discuss a student petition protesting the recent vote of the Student Council to grant $5,000 to the Montreal Transportation Commission. The grant was in the way of a report on the damage done in the recent "tramway riots" in Montreal.

The petition submitted by the students stated that "the students of McGill University believe they should not accept collective responsibility for damages in a riot to which only a minority of the student body was present."

The students also stated that the SEC did not act in the best interest of the student body by agreeing to pay for damages incurred by the riot. They rather than taking a stand against the rioters.

The petition also stated that the damages paid by McGill University were not a fair contribution to the Montreal Transportation Commission. The students also stated that the damages paid by McGill University were not a fair contribution to the Montreal Transportation Commission.

Dr. Callahan, Assistant Director of the Health Service didn't consider the epidemic serious and that the epidemic was not a health problem. He said that the epidemic was not a health problem.

"A lot of people had the flu, but I don't think it was a health problem," said Dr. Callahan. "Everyone is miserable and I was up all night," he added.

For the first time in the history of the University of Toronto, a large sum of money was donated to the Chemistry Department. The donation was made by the University of Toronto Alumni Association.

Osgoode Debater for NFCUS Thwarts U of T in Tournament

Osgoode Hall's representatives were unanimously elected to go to the NFCUS debating tournament yesterday.

The final decision of the judges was revealed last night at the closing sessions of "the home and home" elimination tournaments which were held at Osgoode yesterday afternoon and Hart House last night. Osgoode supported the motion, "Canada should have a separate, codified bill of rights" in the afternoon and opposed it in the evening.

Steve Lewis, 1 UC, supported the motion, citing examples of infringements of citizens' rights. Among these were the Quebec Padlock Law of 1937 which permitted the seizing of a house and the confiscation of any literature in it on suspicion of subversive activities and the Alberta Press Bill of 1937 which threatened to limit the power of the press in that province.

Lewis added that Canada was lagging in signing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and it was therefore only logical for us to follow the same precepts at home.

Doug Wilkins, first speaker for the negative, contended that citizens' rights had no safe-guard.

and finally its permanency—the fact that the ideas of democracy change and develop and a bill would tie us to our present rate of growth. He said that such a document would have loop-holes and thus be badly misinterpreted in the hands of the wrong individuals.

Leo Bray, speaker for the affirmative contended that a person should not have to spend time and money taking a case to the Supreme Court.

Dave Finlay, the last speaker of the evening, said that almost nobody was aware of the infringement of rights and therefore that there was really no need for it.

There is a law against murder and people still murder, so if there were a bill of rights people would undoubtedly continue to break the law.

Such a bill could not do away with all the bigotry, intolerance and small-mindedness that existed, he said.

A bill of rights would be a cloak for the apathy of the citizens of a country, he said, but the strength of an unwritten bill of rights puts the burden of those same rights squarely on the shoulders of the citizens. It is up to the individual man to work to a better understanding of his fellow men in Canada, he concluded.

a mock or a model parliament

Once again the dawn breaks on another opening of the "Mock Parliament" of U of T. Once again students interested in politics (as distinct from that other breed, student politicians) will walk into the ring waving their red flags at each other.

The results in the past have been such as to leave the average student filled with skepticism. And the beginnings have not been much more promising this year. All we have seen to date is squabbling and scheming in the best political tradition of demagoguery and governmental corruption.

Our student representatives have acted like children dressed up in sophisticated over-size clothes. They have noticed the exteriors of parliamentary behaviour, and ignored the basic seriousness.

The mock parliament is an opportunity, an opportunity for developing a debating technique, an opportunity to experiment without consequence, and above all an opportunity to give serious attention to the contemporary political scene.

Go to it politics.

OUR READERS WRITE:

A Disgusting Spectacle

The Editor,
The Varsity:

It has often been charged that campus politics are a disgustingly childish spectacle. Whether or not this is merely a rationalization on the part of those who feel they 'should' taken an interest but are looking for a good excuse not to, the charge is substantially true.

The recent controversy over who is to form the government in the Mock Parliament, and why, is the latest, and one of the best lessons in how to keep the field of politics restricted to those who have no scruples about making calumnious charges, stating only half-truths, and forsaking even the very minimum of sincerity and responsibility.

I think students should be told that, in general, the process of choosing a government for the Mock Parliament was orderly and evidenced a good deal of maturity and responsibility on the part of most politicians concerned. A few feel that wild accusations (e.g. it was charged in a letter to The Varsity that two parties are afraid to debate certain issues when the writer knew that the parties had not been approached on the subject) are necessary to win support or justify actions.

Such irresponsible tactics catch the eye of the press and the end result is not to advance student interest, but to strengthen the widespread aversion to campus politics.

"Inspired Liberalism"

It is rather interesting to watch the tactics being used by the Conservative Club—tactics typical of the narrow and backward politics of the national Conservative Party. They have tried to brand the working agreement arranged between the Liberals and C.C.F.'ers as some type of left wing arrangement. This represents typical Conservative doubt that anyone, anywhere, can unite to present a programme beneficial to the Canadian people and consequently opposed to Conservative thinking.

However, such an arrangement did come to pass, and will enable a progressive and liberal legislative slate to become law in this year's Mock Parliament. Poor Ted Rogers! His twelfth century ideals have been overthrown! Gone is the tradition that enabled him to walk sideways while looking backward. Yes, an agreement was reached without the participation of the Conservatives. Yes, Rogers can only sit back, gnash his stubby teeth, and try to emulate another paleolithic throwback—Senator Joseph "Uncle Joe" McCaffhy. Yell away, oh you ancient traditioners. A new era has dawned. State welfare is no longer an ugly word. The large land estates have finally been broken up. The people look to their government for more than inspired titular whisky-sipping, tales of the charge of the Lancers at Balacava, and hooting and hawking in smoky House of Lords sessions.

Wake up, Conservatives! Your time machine has landed you in the middle of the twentieth century. And waiting for you in the Mock Parliament will be the dominant and inspired forces of liberalism, guaranteed by its creators and proponents, the Liberal Party.

The University of Toronto is indeed fortunate to have on campus this coming week end, as a visiting lecturer, Miss Ann K. Ross, one of the foremost Physical and Health Educational teachers on the North American continent. Particularly, will all students who are interested in diving and synchronized swimming benefit from Miss Ross' lectures — these sessions are definitely a "must" for those interested in these two phases of aquatic endeavour.

After graduating from Wellsley, Miss Ross taught for two years at her Alma Mater and at present, she is instructing at the University of Wisconsin. Besides an outstanding teacher Ann Ross is also a former American Diving champion. While in Toronto she will instruct in the two specialized realms of diving and synchronized swimming.

On Friday afternoon, first and second year PHE will benefit from Miss Ross' knowledge; however, on Friday evening at Hart House, a general session on diving will be conducted. This session is open to both men and women. The time is 7.30.

Out of the pool and on to the badminton courts and another reminder to the athletic and recreational types in this fair domain. The free badminton hours at the Drill Hall have been changed. The evening of fun is now Tuesday, and the time is the same—7.30 to 10. Do not worry, if you haven't a racket for them can be supplied and also birds will be provided. For the beginners in the crowd, a PHE staff member will be on hand for instruction. Don't forget badminton time, is Tuesday night at the Drill Hall.

Engineers Win Trinity Shutout Brewer Scores

There were only two games played yesterday in intramural hockey. The first game saw Jr. Vic shutout Trinity A's 1-0 in a close well-played game. Brewer shot Vic into the lead in the second period with a shot that had goalie Goodwin beaten from the moment it left his stick. He gained ample help from McLean, Grant, and Johns. Brown, Mason, and Lovering were good in a losing cause.

Jr. SPS took the measure of Jr. UC 4-1. Skule potted two goals in each period as they outgouted the Arismen at every turn. McHardy led the Engineers with two goals and Rentis and Bielawski added singles to round out the scoring for the winners. Aston was he ruined German's bid for a shutout late in the second period. Manala and Allan stood out for the outplayed UC team.

Trinity Shines Medics Victors

In major league basketball action yesterday at the Hart House gym, Trinity A came from behind on an 11-3 first period deficit to edge SPS IV by a 33-30 score. Timmy led 12-11 at the end of the second half and outscored the engineers: 18-8 in the final period to gain the win.

II. Engineering-Business A lost another close decision to II Mechanical A 28-26. Payne, potted 16 points to pace the winners, while Mason scored 12 in a losing cause.

Medics III defeated Victoria 3-0 in the lone squash game of the day.

Fencing

Last Thursday night, the U of T fencing team, intercollegiate champions, added the Ontario Team Foil Championship to their already impressive list of triumphs. The team of three men, comprised solely of Engineers, won 24 bouts and lost only 12.

Excellent fencing was turned in by Wally O'Neil (7-5), just a sophomore, who came through time and time again to win important bouts. Walt Kostiw, 1954 intercollegiate sabre champion, posted an 8-4 record, while last year's intercollegiate foil champion and Tully Trophy winner, George Montgomery, won 7 and lost 2.

Replacing Montgomery in 3 of the bouts, Jack Hawkins chalked up 2 victories. The team now moves on to Buffalo and Royal Military College before returning to Toronto to defend their intercollegiate title in February.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

Latest hockey news from our American friends is that Canadian college players down there seem to be running into a bit of difficulty. The first incident was the suspension of Denver from right here in Toronto. Kibbey apparently had uttered words to say to a referee in a game in Saskatchewan and as a result, dis-covered the Denver puck squad. Varsity fans will remember that the Blues lost and tied in pre-season exhibition games with Denver.

The second case was the temporary suspension of two players from the Michigan State hockey team. One of them, Wally Maxwell, played his junior hockey for the Toronto Marlboros before joining ex-South Porcupine and Barrie goalie Lorne Howes on the roster of the hockey Spartans, seems that the Michigan State hockey officials heard somewhere along the line that Maxwell had had a tryout with the Maple Leafs and had received considerable remuneration for his services. Of course, "amateur" sport has a clause which does not permit players who have been paid at any time to participate under amateur rules, so Maxwell was suspended pending investigation into the matter. However, perhaps it should be brought to the attention of the Michigan State officials that any ex-junior player from Canada that they have on their squad has certainly been paid a salary while playing hockey in Canada, although they have been allowed to keep their amateur status. As Memorial Cup teams are under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. With the majority of American College players in this category, U.S. College hockey would almost cease to exist if someone decided to take the "paid amateur" situation into consideration.

Looking about . . . Ray Monnot dropped in 31 points last Saturday as Western downed Assumption 76-66 for their fourth straight win against no losses. . . Laval appear to be the bad boys in the Intercollegiate Hockey League. . . They have 111 minutes in penalties. . . U of M has 92, the McGill Redmen 67, and our Blues only 50. . . The Carabins' Jacques Leblanc has spent 30 minutes in the sin-bin so far and with the season just underway that is only eight minutes short of the mark set by team mate Houle last year. . . He has a match misconduct to add to his total. . . Sunday's game in Quebec was a real donnybrook to boot. . . Laval blanked the Carabins 5-0, and there were 81 minutes in penalties. . . Three majors at the 19:40 mark of the third added considerably. . . Ken Linseman continues as top point-getter in the league with six goals and five assists in four games. . . Don Cosnar is third with eight points. . . Blues are away at Laval and U of M next weekend. . .

Faster, Ken!

Varsity Blues starry winger Ken Linseman seems to be the lead man in a quick game of ring-around-a-ross. Middle man in the chain is Laval defenceman Francois Laroche, of the caboose is Lorne Arseneault, of the Red and Gold. The action came at Varsity Arena which Laval won 3-2, and in so doing took over undisputed possession of first place.

Inco Metals At Work In Canada

Copper is one of 14 different elements obtained from Inco ores. Inco produces over 250,000,000 pounds of copper a year. More than half of this copper goes to Canadian manufacturers. Rainspouts and hundreds of other copper products are made in Canada from Inco copper. Copper rainspouts like this one usually last longer than the buildings they are installed on.

Here's how rainspouts made from INCO COPPER help provide jobs for thousands of Canadians Jobs are created by making the things people want. Here's how Inco copper helps provide jobs for thousands of Canadians:

- 1 At Inco, Canadian workmen mine the ore. Then they concentrate and smelt the ore, finally producing refined copper as cakes, cathodes and wire bar. About 18,000 men and women are employed by Inco in Canada.
- 2 Canadian manufacturers buy refined copper from Inco and roll it into sheets and rod. Several thousand people are employed by these companies.
- 3 Then from the copper sheets, workmen in Canadian sheet metal companies fashion copper rainspouts like this one.
- 4 Canadian contractors, employing Canadian workmen, install these rainspouts on Canadian homes.

From the ore to the ultimate consumer's product, hundreds of items like this rainspout are made from Inco copper that never leaves Canada.

Dream or Delusion?

STUDENT UNION

Is a Student Union wanted or needed on this campus?

And if it is, is there any chance of getting one?

A Student Union — a building to serve as a focus for student activities and interests — has long been agitated for on this campus. But it has never been achieved.

In this issue The Varsity presents its proposal for an all-university co-educational Student Union. The Varsity believes this proposal to be both practical and worthwhile, provided it has the support of both the students themselves and the University Administration.

The plan outlined on pages four and five of this paper would involve the spending of many hundreds of thousands of dollars of the students' own money on a Union Building. It would involve the imposition of an additional student levy of perhaps five dollars a year per student.

It would mean the building of a union to house student clubs and organizations. It would mean the creation of central co-educational eating facilities. It would bring together students from all over the campus to meet together, to talk together, and to work together.

This plan will be discussed at tonight's Students' Administrative Council meeting when Ted Sievenpiper, SAC Arch. Rep., and Tom Thompson, SPS Rep., will present a motion that the SAC investigate the possibilities of establishing a Student Union. The SAC meeting, held tonight at 7:00 p.m. in Falconer Hall, is open to all students interested enough to attend.

LIBS. SAVE THEIR DAY

Cheezit, the Cops!

The Governor-General of the Mock Parliament, E. A. MacDonald, rises to leave after making the speech from the throne. —VSP by Ed Hoshkiw

Kill No-Confidence Move Charges Of Laxness Fly As Mock Session Opens

A Speech-from-the-Throne calling for abolition of the death penalty and a national insurance plan received parliamentary support here last night. The vote went 48 to 44.

But the parliament was composed of students of the University of Toronto.

The five-minute Speech-from-the-Throne was read by E. A. Macdonald, acting as the Governor-General.

A three-day "Mock Parliament" session is being held in the Legislative Assembly chambers at Queen's Park. The students were allowed full use of the assembly and some 25 students and parents watched.

The Liberal government withstood a two-hour attack on its intelligence, its policy, and the conditions by which it assumed power.

"We respectfully represent that IF . . .

. . . we had a Student Union, less conversation would be carried on in the Library reading rooms.

(The above appeared in The Varsity of November 19, 1951. For one whole year The Varsity ran an "If" item on the front page every day, describing what would happen "If" we had a Student Union.)

Your Excellency's advisors, by reason of their complete failure to provide needed benefits to the students of this country, their indifference, inertia, and lack of leadership in the face of serious national problem and their failure to assure Canadian control of our economic destiny, are not entitled to the confidence of this house," said Ted Rogers, leader of the Opposition, in a no-confidence amendment to the Speech from the Throne. (This was later defeated, 50-42).

The whole sitting is . . . a disgrace on the Mock Parliament," Rogers said before moving the amendment. The Liberal government "offers not one thing for the student body of this University," he said, and their bills are "rather innocuous."

The LPP also charged the Liberal government with "failing to bring in legislation of importance." Mr. Freeman, leader of the LPP, charged the Liberals with "the sell-out of our economy to the United States." "Not until recently have the Conservatives chosen to follow us (in this policy)," he said.

Several Conservative members also spoke of Canada's "economic sell-out" to the United States. "We are being dominated by the United States economically, politically socially and morally . . . because of the sissified and namby-pamby policy of the Liberal Government," charged Tony Grey, (II Tyn.). "The Liberals are trying to confuse the opposition by dirty tactics of banging their desks." His speech was described "as rabble-rousing."

Heckling and desk-pounding were vigorous throughout the night's session. During one Government speech, several Opposition members hid themselves behind The Sporting News, the Toronto Star, and The Telegram.

At the close of the Throne speech debate, Bob James, (I Law), speaking for the Government, condemned both sides of the House for their poor taste and for the general low level of debate. "They were like babies," was one girl's reaction after the adjournment.

Twenty first year engineering students from a class of 650 have been expelled as a result of their low marks in the Christmas exams. Last year 43 out of 660 were required to withdraw.

The students expelled obtained less than 35% in the exams. A warning was issued to those obtaining between 35% and 39%.

This policy of the Engineering faculty applies only to first year students and was inaugurated last year.

The Faculty of Applied Science at Queens sent home 18 second year students following the Christmas exams. Their regulation states that "second year students who fail in seven or more courses are required to withdraw."

A Point Of Order, Sir

Government and opposition seats were filled at last night's first Mock Parliament session. CCF (foreground) and Liberal members watch for new points in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, given by Governor-General E. A. MacDonald. Final vote on the Throne Speech came just before adjournment, and no other government bills were debated. Thirty-five spectators and four reporters watched the session. —VSP by Ed Hoshkiw

Library, AVR Bookstore Under Scrutiny Of SAC

"Tomorrow night's meeting of the SAC should be the most important meeting of the year," said Ted Stevenpiper, Public Relations Commissioner, last night. He issued a special invitation to any students interested to attend the meeting in Falconer Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Highlighting the agenda will be reports on the library, the bookstore, the All-Varsity Review and by the publications committee. The last-named committee will recommend that next year 88 issues of The Varsity be published, six more than this year.

Other topics for discussion will include the University Settlement, the SAC-Caput Liaison Committee, the NFCUS Ontario regional conference meeting and the UTDU.

The library committee has been negotiating for an extension of library hours. Many students complain that the ten p.m. closing is too early, for they have barely had time to settle down for a night's studying after supper when it is time to leave.

The bookstore committee has been investigating the question of discount for students in the University Bookstore, and prices here compared with those downtown.

Lost Hope For Loans? SAC Fund Offers Help

The students' council's loan fund for students has never suffered a loss through non-repayment.

The loan fund, has been built up over the years from the Students' Administrative Council's surpluses. It now has a total fund of $3,700, which is lent to students in their final two years who require financial assistance to complete their course.

Mr. E. A. Macdonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC, termed the fund's record of never having lost a cent through non-repayment, "a remarkable achievement."

However, Mr. Macdonald stressed that the limited funds available in the fund meant that only students who are in desperate financial need can be considered for the fund, which is administered through the SAC Office. He stated that a close check is made on all applicants to see that they actually need the money.

Vic Flu Past Dead All Buried

All the bodies have been re-interred, and the flu epidemic which swept Buiwash Men's Residences and threatened to spread across the campus is a thing of the past.

Spokesmen for the residences last night reported that most of the men are fully recovered, and no new cases have developed. Two students committed to the infirmary have been released. "It was an affair of about a day and a quarter," said a spokesman, in Neiles House "No one is sick now". The brief quarantine was lifted Tuesday.

The ill were cheered Monday night, he said, by a mysterious visitation of two female mourners, in black dresses and veils, who were carrying a white plaque lettered in black and solemnly intoning the words "Bring out your dead"

The outbreak of flu had been described variously as "24-hour flu" and "of brief duration". During the brief quarantine, lectures and labs were cancelled.

About 20 percent of the students were affected on Friday when the bug hit the Victoria residence.

OUR READERS WRITE:

A Crying Need At UofT.

The Editors, The Varsity:

We feel that there are two vital functions which the University of Toronto is ideally suited to perform, and to which until now, very little thought has been given. We are referring to the pressing need of making Canada known and understood by other countries, and of assisting newcomers to acclimatize themselves to the customs and institutions of their chosen environment. What we have in mind is a sort of "Institute of Canadian Civilization" offering a programme of studies designed to explain the formation of the present Canadian mentality, and to interpret Canadian political, economic and sociological problems. Courses would be organically flexible, for the backgrounds of the students would be necessarily diverse.

For foreign students planning to return later to their land of origin there could be two kinds of full-time diploma courses: one running parallel to the regular academic year, and another for those (notably Americans and French-Canadians) who desire a more condensed summer curriculum.

Weekly or bi-weekly courses should be organized for foreign university students already studying here, as an optional but integral part of their normal studies.

But perhaps most important of all is adequate provision for those who have elected to make Canada their permanent home, and are unable because of their occupation to pursue full day-time courses. Newspaper "Letters To The Editor" columns are filled with complaints from unhappy New Canadians who have, for one reason or another, found it difficult to adapt themselves to Canada.

For these there must be night classes of a calibre equal to that of the daytime ones, and offering substantially the same programme as these.

As a model for a course of study we enthusiastically suggest the famous "Cours de Civilisation française" given in the Sorbonne at Paris. This school has a department especially for foreigners, and uses the very top professors of the University of Paris as instructors.

We have the professors, we have the foreign visitors and new compatriots who are patently worthy of the time and expense the project would demand. In fact, all that lacks is the initiative by the University.

Of course, Canada has something to gain too by the contribution the graduates of the Institute would inevitably make in promoting the sympathetic comprehension of Canada abroad.

Toronto is the logical choice for a national centre of this character and importance. The majority of all New Canadians settle in the Metropolitan Toronto area, and those going to rural regions can only study by correspondence.

Is there no one of authority with the foresight to correctly assess the immensity of the need, and with the energy and public spirit to act? We hope, for Canada, that there is!

Varsity Can Grab Lead With Double Ice Victory

The ice Blues will make their second venture into old Quebec this weekend on decidedly different terms than when they last visited the Carabin haunt.

Two weeks ago they had played only one game, but two victories at the expense of McGill and the University of Montreal shoved them into a first place deadlock with Laval. The glory was short-lived, however, and since last Friday night the Rouge et Or has added yet another triumph to their skein. By posting wins over both Laval and the Carabins this weekend the Blues can again tie the Frenchmen for first place, and can deal again with them on equal terms.

Friday night they meet the Rouge et Or in the Quebec Coliseum and then entertain Saturday for Verdun and their second meeting with the Carabins.

Blues had it all over Laval last Friday night in Toronto, outshooting them 45-16, but dropped the encounter 3-2 due largely to the rather clever goaltending of Reynald Lavoie. On Sunday posting the first shutout of the season as the Rouge et Or blanked the U of M 5-0. That leaves him with eight goals against in five games, an acceptable average.

Varsity is by far the most powerful scoring team with an average of over six goals per game. Winger Ken Linseman is tops in the goal column with six in four games, while centre Brian Anderson runs second. Don Cossar is the league's top playmaker.

There's no doubt the Blues are a more potent team than Laval, but Lavoie can make things tough. The Carabins should be easy meat, so Friday's game appears to be somewhat crucial.

Whites Meet Leaders Seeking First Victory

Varsity Whites take on the league-leading Kingsway Lumbermen at eight o'clock tonight in Varsity Arena and if Jack Whelton's boys can come up with a victory, it is conceivable that they may not be in the cellar come the end of the evening's activities.

The Whites are currently tied with Pickin' Chicken for the bottom rung on the ladder, while Kingsway is undefeated in three games so far in the second series. Lydhurst Motors, winners of the first series, are in second place with two wins and a loss.

The situation was bright for the Varsity crew last Saturday night as they held a 2-1 lead over Pickin' Chicken going into the last five minutes of play in the game. Twin penalties to Grant Mills and Dunc Brodie left the Whites two men short, and with only 12 seconds remaining, Bruce MacFayden drove the length of the ice to pot the tying tally.

Temper were flaring towards the end of the contest, particularly amongst the Varsity players, and unless a revised edition of the 1955-56 C.A.H.A. rule book has been published for the sole use of the THL referees, one cannot particularly blame the Whites for being incensed.

The first Pickin' Chicken goal in the 11th period was scored after a Bar-B-Q player had reached into the air with his stick and knocked down the puck, Lorry Stacey, expecting the play to be stopped, slowed down for a minute, and that was all the time that Fraser needed to swoop in on an equally surprised Curry to score the goal.

A C.A.H.A. ruling states that "batting the puck above the normal height of the shoulders with the stick is prohibited and when it occurs there shall be a whistle and ensuing face-off at the spot where the offence occurred." The exception to the rule is only if a player of the defending team shall hit the puck to an opponent while in the defending zone. Such was not the case.

So needless to say, the Whites are hopping mad for blood and victory. Tonight's game should be a thriller!

PHE Tops St. Hilda's 3-1

In one of those wretched eight o'clock hockey games at the arena, PHE downed St. Hilda's, 3-1. Although the score might indicate a rather one-sided effort for the PHE ladies, St. Hilda's played a very good game and it was not until the last frame that PHE could definitely say the game was theirs.

Carol Smith opened the scoring for the athletes in the first period from a scramble in front of the Trinity net. Throughout the rest of the period, the Saints fought back stubbornly in an attempt to get the equalizer and it was not until the early minutes of the second period that they found the PHE net. Vivian Sturdee was the girl responsible for the tie.

PHE forged ahead again on a goal by Ada MacPherson, but the Saints remained undaunted. In an attempt to even up the score, they resorted to a four-man gangling attack and continued this play well until the third period. In spite of many excellent attempts, they were unable to get their name in the scoring books. This offensive attack gave Pat Montgomery the chance for a break-away and she made no mistake when she fired on Nancy Banks in the Trinity nets to make the score 3-1 for PHE.

Gals Intercol Archery Sat. With Six Teams Competing

Heads up! Cupid has some competition shooting arrows this leap year—the Intercollegiate archery maids. Saturday morning at 10:00 is the time and the Drill Hall is the place where teams from McGill, McMaster, Western, Queens and Guelph will be on hand to challenge the Varsity squad.

Ann Pendleton, Pat Humphreys, Marjorie Reid (Vic) and Marilyn Charters (III PHE) compose the spirited Toronto representatives. Some of these girls were also on the outdoor archery team which was active in the fall.

Hard practice, these girls say, is what qualifies them—and they should know! For the past couple of weeks now they have been spending the hour from 12 until 1 with lunch in one hand and a bow in the other. Thanks goes to Bill Sladnyk (Trin) and Jack Reid (SPS), members of the Hart House Archery Club, who have been sacrificing their lunch hours and supplied "lots of enthusiasm" to give the girls that added skill and confidence that marks champions.

After the match, the visiting teams will be invited to lunch at UC with their Varsity hostesses. Best of luck to U. of T.'s female marksmen. Let's hope for a direct hit at the championship.

When a 102-11 score cropped up in Intramural Basketball awhile ago, we were inclined to disbelieve it, but last night in a game between Pharmacy Cations and Knox B the story was nearly the same. The Druggists won 91-8 with Doug Widdifield and Al Wysebrod hooping 28 and 24 respectively. Pharmacy led 62-2 at the end of the second period, but weakened badly in the finale to allow Knox six more points, while only able to score 28 themselves. At the start of the middle frame, Pharmacy scored 28 consecutive points in no longer than four minutes. The information for this game was delivered to us by Manager Mort Myers, with special request that we mention Mort Myers).

Interfaculty Summary

In Major League basketball action yesterday afternoon, Pre-Meds downed Pre-Dents 55-34, while UC III defeated Meds III 46-29.

Scoring 25 points in the middle period, Pre-Meds outplayed the Dentists all the way to garner the win. Shugar paced the winners with 12, closely followed by Larry Joynl with 11. Medline and A. Adelman had eight apiece. For the losers, Gazo and Smith were top men with six points each.

Bannister and Aston were the big guns in the UC victory over the Doctors. Scoring 11 and 10 respectively, they shot the Redmen into a 30-16 lead at the end of the second period. Rosenthal was best for the Medsmen with eight, while Freiberg had seven and Zeib six.

UC Killers continued their winning ways in Minor League play by rapping 24 points past the Vic Shamrocks to grab a 46-35 come-from-behind win. Aarons and Futerman led the Killers with 12 apiece, while Brian Clark scored no less than 26 for his team's 35 points. Carl Chisholm was next high man with four.

In water-polo, Berger, Kosoy and Grosfield each picked up the hat-trick as Meds III trounced SPS II 9-1. Applin counted the lone Skule goal.

Meds Upset Redmen 3-1 Close In On Second Spot

Senior Meds vaulted to within one point of second place UC in Group I hockey action yesterday with a convincing 3-1 victory. The Doctors out-played and out-bumped the Redmen as they took a 2-0 lead in the first period and then held goal-hungry UC in the second.

The contest was one of the roughest played this year in Intramural Hockey, with referees Peter Maik and Jim Taylor handing out no fewer than 10 penalties—six of them to UC.

The game started out rather scrappily and continued this throughout the first frame. Neither team had much organization until the second canto, when passing plays started to click on both sides.

Kerr opened the scoring midway through the opening period when he deflected a long shot from the blue line into the upper corner of the UC net. Seconds later, Teark went off for a combination of elbowing, kneeing and tripping, and Kerr spotted a loose puck in front of the Redman net and drove it home to make the score 2-0. Teark and Paul went off for roughing towards the end of the period.

Two successive penalties to Meds early in the second set the stage for the shut-out leader as Scott scored from Bob Nader to put UC right back in the game.

Teark, who picked up four penalties in the game—three of them for roughing—was in the box at the time along with Doray and Marshall.

Martini went off for roughing and he was followed by Teark and Robertson. With three men in the sin bin, Marshall put the game on ice for the Doctors as he banged in an unassisted counter with only a couple of minutes left. Norm Dysart nullified any last-minute power plays by UC as he went off for interference.

worth considering

A dream has been resurrected on these pages. A Student Union has been banded about for years on this campus. But previous proposals have been wrecked, chiefly by administration indifference and unkindness.

We hope that none of these fates awaits the Student Union proposal this year. For the idea of a Student Union is one that can be of great benefit to the students of this university, and to the university itself.

Think about it.

This is not a reassuring world that we live in. Every day, from somewhere, we hear some bit of news that disturbs us. But the news that has shocked us most in recent months is the report on Premier Duplessis and his battle with the newsprint manufacturers in Quebec.

Premier Duplessis proposes first of all, to force the newsprint makers to grant substantial reductions in price to all Quebec newspapers. He also proposes to double the municipal taxes on one particular corporation for, it appears, no other reason than that he dislikes the company.

There are many disturbing features in this situation. For instance, Duplessis' use of the law as a weapon of personal vengeance is hardly reassuring. His proposals reveal an alarming tendency to corporate fascism: they would create an insane breakdown in the national economy. The result would be to impose penalties on every other consumer of newsprint in the provinces of Canada and abroad for the benefit of Duplessis' friends.

But the most alarming thing about the whole business is the ease with which Duplessis has used other people's money to bribe the newspapers of Quebec into silence. These newspapers have sold their integrity for a few dollars, their freedom for a roll of paper.

STUDENT UNION

State Of The Union

Suggested Location

A Student Union: but what and where?

When a Student Union was first proposed on this campus, the idea was to build a large and grandiose building on St. George St. or in the middle of Queen's Park. These locations were objectionable because:

1. they were extremely costly
2. they would create a second focus of student interest on this campus, away from Hart House and the bookstore. Besides splitting student interest and energy, it would mean an expensive duplication of the all-male Hart House facilities.

Therefore, a location immediately next to Hart House would provide the best site for a Student Union. The Union could then merely provide co-educational and women's union facilities, and would be far more economical to construct. It could avoid duplicating Hart House facilities.

The all-male basis of Hart House has obviously become outmoded with the passing of the years, and the changing of social conditions. A Student Union built next to Hart House would revitalize student interest in it.

And again the Union would not compete with existing unions, such as Vic's Wymilwood and the St. Mike's Co-Op. The Student Union would be for all university activities only, leaving such unions with their own separate and local functions.

There are two alternatives for a site. One is immediately to the North of Hart House kitchens, on Queen's Park Crescent; the other is immediately to the South of Hart House Great Hall, on the same street.

WHAT WOULD THE UNION CONTAIN?

- student lounges, reading rooms, and a small library of recreation and reading matter.
- cafeteria and snack bar, convertible at noon-hour into extra lunch room facilities.
- SAC offices, SAC President's office; SAC Council Chamber.
- music room, art room.
- the SAC employment office (co-educational), the housing service, etc.
- small auditorium, and drama rehearsal space.
- meeting space for campus clubs (common meeting rooms, plus rented private lockers).
- other facilities.

Why A Student Union?

By ROBERT BROWN

The primary reason for a Student Union on this campus would be to encourage the free interchange and development of ideas among the entire undergraduate body.

A Student Union, where students from all faculties and courses, and from both sexes, could meet freely would help to break down the appalling divisions that exist on a campus such as this.

A Student Union would also encourage an all-campus spirit, and a universal enthusiasm for the university.

Such a Union would not detract from the academic basis of the University, or provide an "unreasonable proliferation" of student activities, as one campus authority has said. It would rather concentrate and strengthen those existing activities, and provide them with both a home and a more secure basis of student support. The Union could contain a small auditorium, for the convenience of the smaller drama groups on the campus who cannot afford or obtain the Hart House Theatre.

The auditorium could also be used for student meetings, for lectures and for other purposes.

The Union would provide a place where the SAC's Carnegie Record Collection, now housed at the top of the Mechanical Engineering Building, would be easily available for the first time.

It would provide a place where Hart House Art shows could be on view to all students. It might even provide facilities for women camera-bugs, now totally lacking.

The Union could also provide a meeting place for various clubs, who could rent private lockers in the Union.

It would provide the Blue and White with their first permanent home, and more logical and planned facilities for the SAC offices, employment service, housing service and other activities.

The removal of the SAC Offices to the building would also provide The Varsity and Torontonensis with additional and sorely needed office space in the old SAC Building. Their advertising offices could also be located in the old building.

The dining facilities would mean that any students would be able to get a good meal at a decent price right on the campus, amid fairly pleasant — and co-educational — surroundings. It would mean a badly-needed lunch-room space.

Room could be provided for campus music room.

It might be a good idea.

Student Union 1894

This is the first and only Student Union ever built on this campus. It was constructed in 1894, but was only open to men. It was torn down in 1912 to make way for the impressive gift of the Massey Foundation, Hart House. And ever since that time The Varsity has been able to fill its pages with comments on the lack of co-educational student activity facilities.

A Union - Financial

By VARSITY STAFF

Is a Students' Union financially possible?

It is on the solid rock of financing that many previous plans for a student union have foundered. There have been suggestions that the University should build the union out of its own revenues. This suggestion was in the years after the war, half-heartedly supported by the administration itself, but the pressing needs for other projects have removed any immediate hope from this quarter.

Another proposal was to launch a public appeal for funds. But the supply of people who are willing to give money for a building for students is rather limited. Besides this, the University disapproves of student appeals to outside sources for funds, since they feel that they hinder the University's own campaigns for money.

The only practical proposal for raising the money for such a Union is through a student levy. If the students want a Union, they must be prepared to pay for it themselves.

The cost of a relatively small Student Union as outlined elsewhere on this page would be roughly $450,000.

This could be paid for by an annual levy of $5 per student per year. At this rate, the fund could be built up at the rate of $55,000 to $70,000 a year, taking into account the expected increase in enrolment over the next few years.

ION FOR TORONTO?

THIS DESIGN, drawn in 1950 by J. Van Huysse of Architecture, shows the appearance of a proposed Union to be located immediately South of Hart House, on Queen's Park Crescent.

Student Union Has Been Issue For 60 Years Plans, Drawings Galore—But Never Finalized history of student unions on this campus is a long and contentious one. For sixty years, complaints have filled the air, proposals have been made, and plans have been drawn for a student union.

For the first time the issue of a student union has been raised again.

The first student union on the campus was co-ed union. Many European universities have similarly luxurious Unions, although there is no doubt that Toronto can get one, even without the Lily pond.

compound interest, the fund would amount to $380,000 in six years, and over years of the actual Union could be started in five years from now if additional funds from could also be started at an earlier date if the funds were borrowed, the loan being secured by the building itself and the future income from the building might start within three years if the student body OK the proposal on has been constructed, the operating costs of a reduced student levy of $3 or $4 a year. The cost of $450,000 is based on an estimate of $13 a sq. ft. for the building. The cost of a good school building would run below $13 a sq. ft. The building could contain 25,000 sq. ft. with a margin of $75,000 for extra equipment and for safety. A building with 20 rooms, an auditorium, entranceways, and built in 1894. After considerable student agitation, the building was agreed to by the administration, and financed partly by a university grant and partly by student-raised money. It stood on the present site of Hart House.

The building served as a student union until 1911, when Hart House plans were drawn up, and the old union building disappeared. Since then, the files of The Varsity, and letters to the Editor, have perennially repeated the cry — we want a student union.

Action on a student union didn't really amount to anything till 1947. In that year a student vote went overwhelmingly in favour of a union. In the spring of '48 a SAC committee was set up, to investigate possibilities of a union — soon. Work progressed quickly, plans were drawn up, and it was felt that nothing further could be done till definite financial support was arranged for.

After the SAC had met with the Administration, in the fall of 1950, it was announced that plans would have to be scrapped, and the work started again. Enthusiasm still ran high. Instead of a site on George St., it was suggested that the union be built beside Hart House, and utilize Hart House facilities. Plans again were drawn up, and the prospect looked "favourable."

The administration apparently commented favourably on the idea of a student union in the fall of '50. By the spring term of 1950 it was estimated that the cost of a union would be about $600,000. "President Smith indicated at the time the university could raise this amount," The Varsity reported.

Then the blow fell. "The half million dollars which President Sidney Smith hinted last year could be used for a student union has by now almost completely disappeared," The Varsity reported in November, 1950. Because of higher building costs, the building surplus dwindled away to one-sixth of what it originally was, President Smith announced.

However, a ray of hope appeared in December of the same year, when the SAC decided to bring in an expert on co-educational unions, to report on the U of T's need for a student union.

Edgar Whiting, American student union authority from Cornell University, presented his report to the SAC in February, 1951.

"I am firmly convinced that a building which will provide space for organized campus groups, accommodations for women only, and facilities for both men and women is badly needed. An 'ALL-VARSITY' union building can fulfill these needs," reported Mr. Whiting.

He recommended that the proposed union be built adjacent to Hart House, so as to make use of the facilities there.

After Whiting's report, virtually nothing was done on the Student Union issue for some time. Finally, in the fall of '51, the SAC resolved to immediately investigate all ways in which money could be raised.

However, Simcoe Hall turned thumbs down on the project. A fund-raising campaign could not be permitted at the time it was announced, "The administration must be concerned first with meeting academic needs," stated a letter from Simcoe Hall to the SAC.

In his convocation address, Sept., 1952, President Smith tentatively suggested that the athletic wing of Hart House might be used for a co-ed union. New athletic facilities for the university would be provided. The idea did not meet with general enthusiasm, and, as The Varsity remarked in the new year, "we have not heard much more about the idea."

By 1953, enthusiasm and hope for a union had generally disappeared. The chairman of the Student Union committee wrote, "I am resigned to the fact that we are powerless, at the present time, to do anything more than continue to remind the Administration that we are painfully aware of the lack of co-educational facilities and student activities space and that the problem still remains unsolved."

Later that year, it was finally decided to turn the old Observatory over to the SAC, with room for The Varsity and Torontonensis. With the adoption of this temporary arrangement, the idea of a student union seemed to have been finally killed and buried.

Others Can Do It!

Others can do it! The University of Manitoba will see the construction of a $1,000,000 Student Union on the St. Paul's campus.

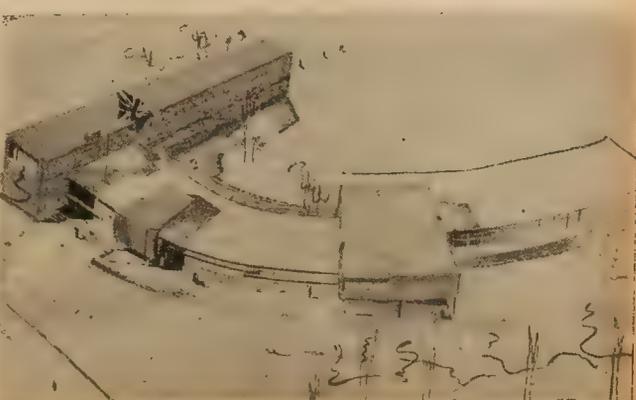

The Student Union now to be constructed and paid for by the administration will replace the existing Student Union built in 1947.

Students, according to their campus newspaper, thought the new union would greatly help their student activities, now scattered through several buildings. They also wanted of their activity offices to cluster and a place to bring sisters to the campus.

The University of Manitoba has just recently finished the construction of a new Student Union there, entirely student financed. McGill, Queen's, McMaster, Alberta, UBC, Saskatchewan, Dalhousie, Carleton, UNB, Sir George Williams — among others — all have student unions.

But not Toronto.

Student Union — Upper Bracket

Here is the most luxurious Student Union building ever proposed for the campus. Brought forward in 1949, the building was to be built East of Trinity College, and was to contain an auditorium, swimming pool, gyms, radio broadcasting headquarters, landscaped gardens, and so on. It was drawn by Stan White.

MORE MOZART

Hart House Orchestra Hit

It is quite possible that by the end of 1956 we shall all be quite sick of Mozart. There may be interminable cycles of indifferent performances and recordings which conductors musicians and others feel duty bound to produce as paltry tribute to this colossus, Toronto has already had a dose—the most unpleasant being when an international celebrity turned Mozart's K. 488 piano concerto into a vehicle for his mechanics, or virtuosily, in a performance hailed as one-of-a-lifetime by one of The Varsity's critics. Your other critics (sitting in the cheaper seats) heard it as the showman's warhorse, ridden round continents and recorded ad nauseam elegantum.

(Ed. Note—The previous reviewer's point was that the performance should have been a one-in-a-lifetime, BUT . . .)

The Hart House Orchestra with Ray Dudley, under the direction of Boyd Neel, is the antithesis of this, something of which we shall never tire. First the Great Hall is a perfect winter setting for Mozart, both aesthetically and acoustically. Secondly, Boyd Neel's witty introductions to each piece make stuffy programme notes redundant and the music intelligible. Thirdly, the performances of all were superb.

The tempi chosen for the first three movements of Eine Kleine Nachtmusik were exceedingly sensible, avoiding the eccentric for the sake of originality. In the last movement the pace was checked slightly to reveal a wealth of detail often obscured in routine performances. The most striking emergent was the effect produced by the second violins and the violas, showering the first violins with a rain-like patter of sound.

The performance of the Piano Concerto K. 499 was almost flawless. Ray Dudley confirmed his reputation as one of the foremost pianists of the continent and his status as a player of international repute. There was none of the affectation so often encountered in a performance of a classical concerto, yet none of the tension, delicacy, sensuality or gaiety of the work was mishandled. The orchestra concert with the soloist, at no time seeming disinterested in their task.

The Divertimento K. 137 was played with great bite and wit. We might have added urbanity, if we had not been told that its sources and employment were mainly rustic.

Boyd Neel seems to obtain much more lively results from the Hart House Orchestra in the intimate atmosphere of the Great Hall than from his own orchestra in their famous concerts in the more impersonal Raphael Cartoon Gallery of The Victoria and Albert Museum in London, England.

It would be erroneous to make similar remarks about the Serenata Notturna on the strength of an early '78 rpm recording. However, Boyd Neel's affection for the work is undiminished, Mozart's happy device of dividing the orchestra into a quartet of two violins, viola and bass against the rest, was at last audible and fully exploited to its happy conclusion.

A brilliant movement from the Divertimento K. 205 was played as an encore and the audience would have stayed to clap for more, had the orchestra not skilfully withdrawn.

SEASONAL SLUMP

It was Premiere Night in this city last Monday as Toronto celebrated the opening of its newest stage company in The Fifth Season at the Avenue Theatre.

The Fifth Season brought to Canadian theatre some of the less commendable aspects of the Hollywood techniques for ensuring box-office success. For they have sought to exploit the name and talent of a single excellent actor to carry the load for an essentially weak and unimaginative production. It is to the credit of Sammy Sales, who plays Max Pincus, that the show reaches the audience with some of the warmth and feeling-packed through its script, as there is a notable reserve and seeming lack of identification with their parts on the part of the other members of the cast.

Sylvia Regan has written a comedy in a minor key about the garment industry in New York. Contrasting the patient integrity of little Max Pincus against the big and flashy hucksterism of his partner and pal, Johnny Goodwin, as they fight together to win their place in Dunn and Bradstreet, Miss Regan has used some old situations, homely philosophy and excellent characterizations to give her play meaning far beyond slapstick or melodrama.

The play itself is built along familiar lines. Two pals try for the stars, are poor and happy, get rich and miserable. Sad little fellow stays nice and sweet, big handsome fellow gets big ideas, dissipates life on pretty model. Drops model, but too late to keep his wife who heads for Reno while son hunts cash to pay for smashing up car belonging to his married girlfriend.

The solution to all these difficulties is a bit pat but, then, who wants to cry at a comedy anyway.

In the Premiere production, casting was fairly well-handled insofar as the characters all looked their parts. But since they were all stereotypes, easily obtainable in any garment section this couldn't have been too hard. The actors seemed, too, to have been well-directed, Ben Lennick moving them about neatly, but they didn't quite fill the places allotted them. Lighting also helped, by its awkwardness, to make the production seem quite amateurish and disorganized technically.

There was an interlude of real beauty in this play, "schmaltzy" though it may have been. It is late at night. Pincus sits celebrating the firm's success with his pretty little book-keeper, Miriam Oppenheim. Both are shyly in love with each other, neither realizing that the feeling is mutual. As the lights dim a love scene, without even a single embrace or kiss, is played out. As Miriam reminisces about her early life with the family whom the Nazis "liquidated", and as Pincus remembers his own orphaned and empty childhood, the scene assumes an air of tragic beauty, in tone a mixture of Perez, Sholom Aleichem and Zangwill, which, basically, is what Fifth Season is.

But this moving spirit was evident only when Miriam (Iris Krangle) and Sammy Sales played to each other; it slipped out of the remainder of the evening. It is to be hoped that by the time the Premiere Theatre Company reaches its own fifth season it will have achieved a somewhat higher standard than it showed at its premiere.

Moishe Reiter.

Letter to AM&D Ed.

The Editor, The Varsity:

If Mr. Reiter finds "The Troublemakers" pointless, that is simply because he has missed the point. Though the focus of the play is too diffuse for effective dramatic communication, the theme is completely relevant to the exigent situation of contemporary society.

George Bellak has, in our opinion, produced an incisive if confused portrayal of sick individuals in a sick society. Such a society cannot accept the challenge of the non-conformist, and individuals in it are impelled to destroy those who unlike themselves.

The flaws of dramatic technique in this play will require more than the usual patience and sympathy from the theatre-goers, but he will be repaid with a valuable insight into our demoralized society.

Skulemusic Moves In

"The Skulemen" will give their first concert tomorrow in the east common room of Hart House at 1:00 p.m. Programme will vary from Billy May to Glenn Miller with Jazzy interludes. Bill Steggies conducts.

Special guests for the occasion will be the famous "Skulehouse Four" now rolling again after Don Elliot's appendectomy.

Master of ceremonies for the occasion will be "Dizzy" Vasoff who positively will not play any musical instrument.

Concert is under the auspices of the music committee of Hart House and is one of the series of Noon Hour recitals. (This is a recital?)

As usual, coeds on the campus will not be permitted to watch although they have performed as artists. The M.C. regrets that this is the case but hopes for better days to come.

Thistles Or TV Screen? Students Differ On Flag

Students' views are about as diverse as those of newspaper correspondents when it comes to discussing a "distinctive Canadian flag".

Notes compiled by a student in journalism at Carleton College, Ottawa, indicate that designs run from "keep the red ensign" to flags with nothing to indicate any "mother country".

Ten of 18 students interviewed at three Ottawa colleges thought the red ensign should continue to be Canada's national flag. Some of these were staunchly pro-Commonwealth, others thought that it was all too much trouble, and that the flag might just as well be what it is now, as anything else.

One student complained that if she were asked to draw the present flag, she would not be able to. She suggested something simpler.

Toronto students polled were in much the same dilemma.

One student muttered "distinctive, distinctive" and wandered away, his mind on a phone number he had been trying to remember all day.

A translated Scotsman suggested a St. Andrew's Cross with entwined leaves and thistles, adding,

"Anyone who wouldn't be proud to see it flying over the campus is a shauchley wee bache." A well-known campus cynic grunted that a football on a television screen would be the most appropriate national symbol.

The night's shortest answer to the question "Should Canada have a distinctive flag?" was "No".

Some said it would not make any difference whatever it was.

The impression gained by the small sample poll was that students did not care very much what the Canadian flag looked like.

Federalist Party New At Queen's Plan US Annex

Kingston, Ont.—(CUP)—A new "Federalist" party has been formed on the Queen's campus for the Mock Parliament on Feb. 20. A report in the Queen's Journal reveals that scores of followers are joining the young organization.

The party's platform stressed complete autonomy for Canada, with Princess Margaret reigning as Canada's first sovereign Queen.

Party organizers say a plan to have the exiled King Farouk become Canada's first governor of the Queen is still in the embryo stage. Farouk, they state, cabled Federalist organizers that he still fosters hopes of regaining his Egyptian crown.

Once Canadian autonomy is achieved a move will be made to annex the United States and Mexico, which will become the 11th and 12th provinces of Canada. Official dispatches have been sent to President Eisenhower's office to inform him of this long-awaited news.

The heads of the Federal party are depending on American pressure groups, realizing the advantages of being absorbed by Canadian industrial firms, to push the proposal through the House.

The University of Toronto library now possesses the only record of the controversial "humour" issue of The Varsity, 1951-52. The issue, containing the story of "Smith and Remedial Sex" was subject to censorship immediately after publication and excluded from all files.

Yesterday afternoon the editors of The Varsity presented a copy, in addition to several early files of The Varsity to the chief librarian, Mr. R. H. Blackburn.

The volumes presented were 1955-96 (complete), 1914-15 (complete), and several issues

Montreal: McGill students have protested the actions of their Student Council with regard to the Montreal tramway riots last December.

The council voted $5,000 to the Montreal Transportation Commission as an expression of regret for damages caused during the demonstration.

At the meeting, petitioned for by the students, a resolution was passed, instructing the student council president to inform McGill University and the public at large that the granting of the $5,000 was not a disciplinary action.

Nor was the granting of the $5,000 an admission implied or expressed of the guilt of those public-spirited McGill students who took part in the orderly demonstration before civic authorities," the resolution read. It stated that the five thousand dollar grant was intended to be a sincere reparatory move on behalf of those students who neither intended nor foresaw the consequences of these demonstrations.

Ithaca, N.Y.: "Down By Cayuga's Waters" isn't so far down this year. The Cornell Daily Sun reports that the famous lake beside Cornell University is rising to record levels this year.

Quebec: The Varsity Blues will have a chance to participate in a second winter carnival this year. Their hockey game with le Rouge et Or of Laval comes smack in the middle of Laval's carnival, the 10, 11, and 12 of February.

Toronto: No smoking will be allowed in the proposed new student common room of the Student Union Building of the Ryerson Institute of Technology.

The stress, according to The Ryersonian, will be placed on a friendly, cleaner atmosphere.

"We're trying to create a bright spot where the student will like to go, not a card room," said one instructor.

Halifax, N.S.: How shall we dress our cheerleaders? is the burning question in the student council at Dalhousie University, this term.

This year the girls had to wear Intermediate basketball uniforms, because of the dilapidated condition of their skirts.

One suggestion made is that the girls wear black pleated skirts and black turtle neck sweaters. The two boys would wear white ducks and white sweaters.

However, as yet, the Dalhousie Council hasn't enough money to purchase any new uniforms.

President's First Name Only Sure Knowledge Discovers Varsity Poll

Results of a poll conducted by The Varsity last night indicate that the average student's awareness of current events and facts of life on the campus is limited to a knowledge of the president's first name.

A cross-section of students was asked a series of questions concerning events and personalities of interest to university students. Two-thirds of the twenty-one students questioned had no idea of the identity of the SAC president, and not one of them could name the chancellor of the university, although there were some valiant guesses (Pearson? Massey?).

Over one-half of those asked could not answer the question, "How much a year do you pay to the SAC?" Five gave the correct answer—five dollars. A first year vic student exclaimed, "Holy Jesus, I don't know!" Another suggested "a couple of bucks". The rest took little interest.

Knowledge of the age of The Varsity was slightly better. One suggested thirty-five years, another fifty, and one explained that he "didn't read the big issue". Asked to name the snow queen of the winter carnival, many remembered that she was from Pharmacy, but few got as far as her last name.

To the question, "What is the name of the minister of citizenship and immigration who recently visited U. of T.?", one suggested Harris, while twelve claimed ignorance.

Six did not know when exams start, but only four could not give the name of the current play at Hart House. (One substituted "The Messmakers" for "The Troublemakers".) A St. Mike's student knew that exams start in eighty-three days or "eleven and six-sevenths weeks".

Results of the poll were tabulated as follows:

1. Who is the SAC president? 7—Shoemaker, 14—No idea.
2. How much a year do you pay to the SAC? 5—five dollars, 15—Don't know, 1—two dollars.
3. How old is The Varsity this year? 15—75 years, 6—Don't know.
4. Who is the president of U. of T.? 15—Sidney Smith, 6—Sid.
5. Who is the chancellor of U. of T.? 19—No idea, 1—Pearson, 1—Massey.
6. Who was crowned Snow Queen of the winter carnival? 6—Silvia Kilu, 7—Girl from Pharmacy, 8—Don't know.
7. What is the name of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who recently visited U. of T.? 7—Pickersgill, 13—Don't know, 1—Harris.
8. Who is forming the government in the Mock Parliament? 10—Liberals, 1—Liberals and C.C.F., 3—Conservatives, 7—Don't know.
9. What is the current Hart House play? 16—The Troublemakers, 5—Don't know.
10. When do exams start? 15—April, or 12 weeks, 6—Don't know, Do You?

Negro Barred Marfleet Talks FROS Charge

The Friendly Relations with Overseas Students section of the International Students Organization reports, in a news release, what may be, in its opinion, another instance of race discrimination.

Members of the society are currently contesting a case involving alleged race discrimination with a Dresden restaurant owner.

The society reports that at the pre-Christmas lectures given by Miss Dorothy Thompson, the audience was invited to attend a discussion group afterwards. A Negro student from the Gold Coast was refused admission on the grounds that there was no room, however, according to the student, he stood and watched a large group of people being admitted after him.

Other spectators claimed that the incident had the appearance of deliberate discrimination. The Varsity has not been able to gain any other information with regard to the subject.

Silvia Kilu, Snow Queen

Campus Profile

University of Toronto's newly crowned Carnival Queen is a pretty fair-haired girl who measures five feet, six inches in height. A good athlete, Silvia likes swimming, dancing, tennis and skating. She is also fond of music but expressed a preference for jazz rather than classical music.

Born in Estonia, she lived in Sweden for six years before coming to Canada, and graduated from Oakwood Collegiate in Toronto. Silvia speaks three languages; Estonian, Swedish and English. She also understands some German.

When asked why she entered the contest, Silvia said she was just told on Tuesday that her name had been entered as Pharmacy's representative the night before. "However, I enjoyed the week-end very much, although I don't feel any different at all," she said. "My friends seem to be more excited than I am."

A second year Pharmacy student, Silvia hopes to work in a hospital after she graduates. She finds her course interesting but hard. "I think the students at University are wonderful," she said, "I really enjoy myself."

When asked if she had a steady boy friend, Silvia laughed and made the standard reply, "No, not at the moment."

Working Their Way Through College

Mr. Halse interviews students seeking employment for the summer or for longer. The line extends daily from his office in the Student's Council building out to the side door, with several people scanning the notices posted up on the board. Who knows, you too may meet your destiny in the Halse of the unemployed? —VSP by Jim Feeley

When We All Must Earn Money

"Summer will be icumen in, Lulude sing cueu. And you muste bringe sum muneys in, Lulude sing cueu."

Thus said the anonymous poet way back before they had learned to spell English properly. But even if his spelling wasn't so hot, the old guy had the right idea, because as summer approaches, it is time to start thinking about a summer job, and, of course, the University employment service.

This service, which is now located in the S.A.C. building—old Observatory (south entrance),—and which is generally presided over by Mr. E. Halse, attempts to provide summer and part-time jobs for any University students who wish to apply for them.

Summertime

By TONY NOXON

Exactly how successful the service is in terms of figures is a closely guarded military secret, the statistics being kept down at 174 Spadina St. You probably don't want to know then anyway, but if you think your reporter is going to go all the way down there just to write a story on the employment service up here, well, he ain't.

It is no secret however, that the employment service does attract many employers to the campus to interview students.

Some of the big firms such as Westinghouse or Bell Telephone which hire many students each year are definitely interested in finding among them people who will take on full-time jobs on graduation.

Of course the students who get the best deal in this employment business are the uncultured engineers. "Blessed are the engineers, for they shall find jobs," as the old saying goes.

However, employers are also interested in the impractical artists, the theory being that anyone who can survive a University education can probably also survive working for Dandy Whalebone Corsets Ltd., or even Peter's Pumpernickel factory.

How does the situation look this year?

Well, considering the time of year, more companies are conducting interviews on the campus than ever before. At present Westinghouse, A. V. Roe, Bell Telephone, and Hydro are all making appointments for interviews.

A visit to the office might prove worthwhile if you have not yet got a summer job but it should be remembered that since jobs are coming in all the time, you may find a suitable job one next.

A word of warning to the uninitiated: After the exams, the employment office becomes very popular, and large numbers of students set up camp more or less permanently outside the door.

But in case you do find yourself at the employment office around May 15th, mine will be the third tent to the left.

Varsity Issues This Term

There will be twenty-seven more issues of The Varsity this term.

Starting next week, The Varsity will be published four times a week, on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. This publishing schedule will hold for four weeks.

There will be three issues in the week of March 5 to 9, and the final two issues will appear on March 12 and March 15.

CLAIM ORDERS FOR PC'S TO EMBARRASS LIBERALS

From Rotten Boroughs?

Here the student members of the Model Parliament debate policies in the legislative chambers at Queen's Park. Eye-witnesses at last night's sessions report the Conservatives passed a mimeographed sheet around with instructions on how to heckle and embarrass the government.

Rumour Documents Circulated Advise Conservative Members Heckle Mock Parl't & Gov't

Conservative members of the U of T Mock Parliament have been instructed to "embarrass the Liberal Government."

A mimeographed document of three or four foolscap-sized pages marked "confidential" is said to have been circulated to P.C. members telling them to "heckle" and "pound desks" to distract government supporters.

A copy of the document was in the hands of the leader of the CCF party, Al Millard, last night after the second session of the Mock Parliament currently being held in the Legislative Chamber at Queen's Park.

Millard showed a Varsity reporter the Conservative instructions after the session. The reporter called them "a plan for uniformity among the PC's, to keep them working together to discredit and confuse the government, and to prevent serious discussion on government bills."

Millard and Larry Levenstein, (leader of the Liberal government) refused to comment on the PC instructions.

"The page I saw repeatedly branded the Liberal government as a 'coalition' of the Liberals and CCF. It gave specific instructions on effective heckling to the Conservatives, so they could avoid the speaker's censure. They were encouraged to ask questions on Ottawa government policy, to 'embarrass the . . . government'." The Varsity reporter said.

"I believe the inside pages contained specific Conservative policy," the reporter said. "But the document was snatched from me just as I finished the first page."

Eye-witness George Brown (II Pre-Med) described the squabble: "I observed a Varsity reporter, the leader of the CCF party, the secretary of the Liberal party, with their backs turned, observing papers. At this point Ted Rogers (III Trin., president of the PC party), and an ex-president of the party, (now an Osgoode student), entered, pushed the aforementioned people aside and tried to obtain the papers. After some scuffling Rogers got them. There was then some heated argument. . . . The Osgoode student called Millard 'a thief'."

Several party leaders commented that this incident would "wreck the Mock Parliament." Another Varsity reporter saw the Conservative members all handing mimeographed foolscap-size sheets of paper to Rogers after the session ended.

A personal attack on Rogers, and the Conservative party in general, was introduced to the House near the start of the session. John Brevin (CCF, II Trin.) charged in an Act of Attainder that Rogers "has attempted to use this Mock Parliament (Continued on Page 2)

Student Union Stillborn But Favoured In Survey

Voting 21-1 at the SAC meeting last night rejected a motion to set up a committee to investigate the possibilities of erecting a Student Union on the campus.

Thus died — stillborn — another of the repeated attempts that have been made over the past sixty years to build a Student Union.

Student opinion ranging from a curt "couldn't care less" to a critical summary of student extra-curricular activities resulted from a Varsity poll conducted last night to assess what U of T students think about Student Union proposals.

A cross-section of undergraduates was asked for their opinions on proposals for a Student Union as put forward in yesterday's Varsity as to the desirability and practicality of the venture.

Half those polled hadn't read The Varsity, didn't know what a Student Union was, "couldn't care less", or were "caught by surprise".

Of those who had opinions, many showed a surprising interest in the project.

Most male students, though enthusiastic, commented on the effect that such a Union might have on Hart House. There were suggestions that it would be in direct competition with Hart House; others that it would be a decided advantage, in that female students would be diverted to the new Union and cease their inroads on Hart House.

Women students were enthusiastic. Said Nancy Buckles (I Trin) "Good idea. Especially for girls in non-arts colleges who are relatively out in the cold."

Joyce Cornwall (I Vic) " . . . should have been thought of earlier . . ."

Heart Operation: Student Blood Will Aid Tot

Responding to an advertisement in Friday's Varsity, forty-six Toronto University students came forward and offered to donate blood to a three-year-old girl who is about to undergo a heart operation.

The girl, Lynn Davidge, who is suffering from a heart condition due to two holes in the wall of the organ, will undergo an operation today.

The students, all of whom have agreed to be available during the eight-hour operation, have blood of the uncommon ORh negative group.

A family friend phoned The Varsity office last night to thank students for the immediate response. Names of the student donors, and information as to the progress of the operation will be available for publication shortly.

MILLS Rep of WUS as part of my job as representative of WUS to be responsible for the summer seminar program which is taking place this year in Europe. I would like to announce this to you and make you aware of the program which consists of a 1956 summer seminar in Germany, which will be preceded by five weeks of study tours in other parts of Europe. These five weeks will be for the purpose of acquainting students with living conditions in Europe.

The people taking part in this seminar are 35 Canadian students and 70 students from other countries except U.S.—Europe, Middle East, Africa and Asia. So that one-third of all the people on the seminar will be Canadians I would like to draw your attention to the very important part we will play on this seminar. Dates are June 12, leaving Montreal by ship and returning to Montreal on September 13. The study tours this year propose to provide persons with background of personal experience and basic understanding of European conditions, problems and attitudes.

Three students from the University of Toronto are to attend this program this summer, we will want to get the three most suitable students to represent our University. Qualifications call for good students with qualities of leadership, so that they will use their time well, so that when they return they will be able to do a good job for WUS in bringing back information. Whites, Kingsway In 3-3 Draw Great Team Effort For Varsity Kearney, Mills, Elik Count Goals

By JOHN BROOKS

The Varsity Whites came up with a great team effort at Varsity Arena last night as they battled league-leading Kingsway Lambert 0 to a 3-3 tie. It was one of the Whites' best performances of the year, and although we have said this before, it looks as if they are been-capable all year.

The Whites came out onto the ice at the start of the game and carried the play throughout the entire first two periods. The first line of Grant Mills, Tom Riley and Dunc Brodie was really flying, and at one point in the middle frame, they had the Lumermen bottled up in their own end for three minutes, with the puck not once leaving the Kingsway end zone.

Dud Kearney sent the Whites into the lead just two minutes after the opening whistle, when he scored from Ted Lotocki. The lead lasted until the last minute of play, when Ross Sneddon counted from Bob Hunter to even the count.

Brodie went off for interference at the 4:45 mark of the second, and Hunter scored from Crust and Burns to give Kingsway the lead. The Whites came roaring right back, and after Mills bounced a long drive off the post, he got the puck again and this time made no mistake. Riley was credited with an assist on the goal. Just before the bell, Clare Fisher, who came up with a great game, combined on a pretty passing play with Mike Elik, and just missed the corner from close in.

Grant Gordon trapped a bad pass in front of the Varsity net and dribbled a weak shot past Hugh Curry to send Kingsway into the lead again just after the final period got underway. After Kearney missed a close-in try, Elik's pass from behind the net hit a skate and scooted in. The assist on the tying goal went to Fisher.

Picken' Chicken whipped Lyndhursts 5-1 in the nightcap, to leave the standings as follows: Kingsway has seven, followed by Lyndhursts with four; the Chicks have three and Varsity two.

Skule, UC Top Interfac Track

SPS and University College continued their struggle for indoor track supremacy on Tuesday afternoon, with both sides breaking even. Bill Varey (PHE) kept up his winning ways by taking the featured senior 880 yards run in 2:03.9. Victoria's Gord Hueston was second, while UC distance man Ron Toop and Bruce Hughes finished third and fourth respectively. The junior 880 was won by W. Leslie (SPS) with J. Canzi (SPS) second.

SPS continued its relay supremacy against UC, edging out the Red and White squad by 8/10 of a second in the sprint relay. The Engineering foursome of Doug Mason, Don Shepley, Bill Gelling and Val Spring turned in a time of 2:14.8 for the seven lap relay, only 2.8 seconds off the track record.

The events carded for next Tuesday's meet will be the 220 yard sprint, the 1000 yard run, in both junior and senior classes. Starting time will be 5:00 P.M. sharp.

Vic Gals Take Badminton Play In Intercol Tourney

By MERLE OVERHOLT

The women's interfaculty badminton tournament wound up yesterday morning at the Carleton Club with Victoria College in first place and a skilled foursome ready for the coveted trip to McGill. A final rousing match between the top-seeded player Noreen Beasley P.O.T. III and Vic's Pru Smith, with Pru coming out victorious, avoided a potential tie by boosting Vic's score to 19 points with P.O.T. following close behind with 17.

The four who will be on hand to defend last year's championship when action gets under way in Montreal on the 10th of February are Noreen Beasley and Rhona Swarbrick playing first and second singles with Elizabeth Rorke and Mary Bodrug going after the doubles crown. Mary won her place on the intercollegiate team by defeating Pat Godson, third-seeded player of the tournament and a member of last year's triumphant foursome. Unfortunately, Pru Smith is ineligible to play in the best tournament because of her position on the senior intercollegiate basketball squad.

This year's interfac tournament was the best ever with a total of 35 players making a bid for top spot. A new scoring procedure was tried out for the first time this year and proved to be a great advantage to the individual colleges and faculties. The old system of a possible individual score of 30 points was salvaged in favour of one in which a game won meant one point only. With this in effect the college with the most girls entered stood a better chance for taking top place than the college with the star player.

All credit for this change in scoring and the smooth organization of the tournament goes to Noreen Beasley, a great moderator as well as an expert player.

Plans for the McGill excursion have the departure date as Thursday, February 9 with a full day of playing on Friday, a smashing banquet Friday evening, finishing up play and returning to Toronto on Saturday. If this appeals to anyone, you know what to do. Challenge in!

Skule, St. Mike's Tie To Share Cage Lead

In the tightest ball game this year, Senior Skule and St. Michael's A emerged in a 43-43 tie. The result of the game, played yesterday noon leaves the teams tied for first place, both with two wins and one tie.

In the first period, most of the scoring was done from the free-throw line, as the referees kept quite busy. The score standing at the second frame was 12-12 but Skule pulled ahead with four quick baskets. At the end of the third period, it appeared that SPS had the game in the bag with a 30-23 lead. This lead was maintained for a good portion of the last period until the minutes 1:58 slowly hacked away at the Skule lead, and with three minutes remaining they finally tied it up. Four quick points by Foran put SMC ahead, but Skule retaliated with four of its own to tie the game up again. The score remained deadlocked until Reagan was fouled with twenty seconds to play. His first shot went in, putting the Irish ahead by one; the second attempt was wide and Skule, grabbing the rebound, moved the ball up the floor and Larson, with a two-handed jump shot from 35 feet out put Skule ahead by one. Coming down the floor. The latter's first foul shot attempt was good, tying the score, but the second was wide and after an unsuccessful try on the part of St. Mike's to tip it in, the buzzer went to end the game.

High scorers for Skule were Webb, Skrzypek and Larson with 16, 7 and 7 respectively. For the double blue, Reagan was top man with 13, while Foran and Girdlestone sank nine apiece.

Gals Named To Volleyball Team

After trailing 33-11 at half time, the School of Nursing came from behind to edge Medicine by a 44-41 score in volleyball action on Tuesday night at the Lillian Massey Gymnasium, Kay Arnold and Marilyn McQueen were the stars for the Nurses, scoring 15 and seven points respectively. L. Demkow was high for Meds with ten. The victory gives Nursing its second win in two starts in Group IV action.

In a game played last night, POT Freshies defeated Vic Freshies 38-33. Winona Teft was tops for the POT girls.

An announcement late yesterday gives the names of the twelve girls who will represent Varsity in the Intercollegiate Championships. They are Noreen Beasley (PHE III), Honey Weisman (UC III), Joan Galley (Vic II), Marjorie House (Vic II), Sandra Grant (Vic I), Bev Davison (Vic I), Carol Green (UC I), Ligna Bandana (Deuts I), Bernice Rye (Vic I), Ada MacPherson (PHE II), Pat Shannon (Trinity I), Pat Dugit (Vic IV).

moving the mountain

If the mountain won't come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain.

In view of the fact that there were only seven people at the SAC last night, and that there have been about a dozen visitors all told during the rest of the year, The Varsity is publishing a more or less complete report of last night's SAC meeting.

This is your first chance to find out just exactly how your student government functions. Now you can discover what your representatives are doing for you . . . and what they are not doing.

Last night on campus there was a most rare happening: two student governments were in session at the same time. One the real student government and one a mockery of the government beyond the ivory tower.

The two form strange commentaries upon each other. In one we find a government faced with no real business or practical problems, exercising debating techniques to the point of puerility. In the other we find a body with a unique chance to make student government a reality, but without the initiative or imagination to do so.

Now, if we could only do something to combine them . . .

But on the contrary those people on campus who are most interested in "party politics" do not take the trouble to work for a real student government right now. They would rather indulge in petty bickering than support the students' council and take it out of the dish rag class.

And those people on campus who for some reason have landed in what is largely considered as a joe-job, a position on the SAC, show an amazing ignorance of parliamentary procedure, of the progressive planning necessary to accomplish anything, and a sheeplike tendency to sit and vote with the majority.

We'd just like to point out to the parliament-mockers that they are not only doing the campus a disservice, but losing an opportunity to get some hand-to-hand experience for the job of being prime minister.

a mock parliament

The privilege granted University of Toronto students of being allowed to use the legislative assembly chambers at Queen's Park as a place in which to hold their annual "Model Parliament" is one which few students taking part seem to appreciate.

They are fortunate, whether they know it or not, in that they happen to live in the same city and have open to them the facilities of the Parliament buildings. The least that can be expected of them is that they behave like civilized human beings and not like an irresponsible group of buffooning adolescents. When they are in session they should attempt to throw off their uncouth habits and behave with some sense of decorum.

At the first night of session, Tuesday, the students taking part displayed neither common good manners nor even a modicum of parliamentary etiquette. They thumped their desks like ill-behaved babies in high chairs; they interrupted one another's speeches for no other reason than to make each other uncomfortable and to try by sheer means of distraction to cover up the points being made; they flaunted newspapers and heckled each other in a way which could not fail to annoy and disillusion any spectators who might be present. In short, they showed greater dispatch at playing the fool than at getting down to business.

But this is not the worst. The most shocking thing is that these are the people who presumably are going to be Canada's leaders in the future; and the impression they left on Tuesday night was that the open propagandizing of party lines was more important than a sincere desire to debate, as intelligent, responsible people the bills proposed in the speech from the throne.

Dresden and Discrimination

Scapegoat For Canada

Is Dresden a Scapegoat? Are we overlooking weaknesses and prejudices in ourselves? Here Egbert Tertullien, a student in third year Political Science and Economics at St. Mike's, and a member reviews our attitudes to discrimination.

DRESDEN A SCAPEGOAT?

Is Dresden a scapegoat? This was a question which a group of students at the F.R.O.S. common room were trying to answer last Thursday. The consensus seems to be that it is.

Since discrimination that grows out of prejudice and ignorance is so world-wide, why then should poor Mr. McKay, the restaurant owner at Dresden be subjected to so many tests and so much publicity? Is it because he has failed to adopt the most subtle, not too readily acceptable discrimination policy of the rest of Canada?

Or is it because he, of all the others, wants "to protect his daughters" from the phenomenon of the coloured race? Could it be that we are looking at only one side of the picture, and are conveniently closing our eyes to the other? Does this attitude spring from a perpetual fear that the Negro, like the Jew, constitutes an economic threat to the white man's security?

NO SIMPLE ANSWER

Cogent reasons could be advanced to support any of the above probabilities. Yet, to answer any of the questions categorically and without qualifications, is to look at them from a short-sighted and shallow point of view. The real crux of the matter seems to lie much deeper than that, and any attempt to give a simple answer to a problem which is essentially so complex must be unsatisfactory.

Why was a Negro student from the Gold Coast refused access to speak to Miss Dorothy Thompson at Convocation Hall, when others after him were allowed the privilege?

Why does the Immigration Department look with suspicion on the coloured races in Canada? Does any one of the above questions give an adequate answer?

DISCRIMINATION DEVELOPED

Race intolerance is not innate. It is an attitude which develops through tradition, personal experiences, insidious indoctrination, ignorance, historical accidents, and the spread of plan; that the time has come when the brutal treatment and humiliating condition to which knowledge by misinformed or over-zealous writers.

It is perhaps not too unreasonable, although not justifiable, for the white race which has dominated civilization for such a long time to feel itself superior to the coloured races of the world—races some are pleased to call inferior.

But, despite the pride in the acquired superiority, if the white man fails to recognize the coloured races as human beings destined to play as important and useful a role in society as any other, and possessing the same rights and responsibilities, the same opportunities to seek a decent survival, it is because they have been made, and still continue to be made in some parts of the world, victims of exploitation, and instruments to serve the needs of the white race.

Their pride and sense of dignity have been so irreparably damaged (and for so long!), that it takes more than ordinary courage to recover from such a staggering blow at human dignity.

A DEBT OF THE WHITES

Looking back at this tragic scene of man's inhumanity to man, the white race should be quick to make amends for its sins. It should recognize that the fate to which Negroes, for example, were driven in the past, was one over which they had no control; that one should be born Negro, or Chinese, or Jewish, or Caucasian, is not a matter of choice but part of a Divine the forefathers of these unfortunate people were subjected, and from which their sons have found small relief, should be corrected.

Will the old order not change? Shall our philosophy of life be adapted to a state of affairs which is no longer commensurate with human dignity? If this is so, then it is impossible to be both intellectually honest and morally right.

FOR THE FUTURE

This great country of Canada has become, almost overnight, a world power, and her people have no less a role to play in her destiny. Only by free association of culturally different people can a wider tolerance and understanding be achieved.

The question of race intolerance quite often boils down to a study of mental health.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Institute Of Canadian Civilization!

The Editor
The Varsity

J. K. Spicer and H. E. leSueur are entirely right: an Institute of Canadian Civilization is needed.

The visiting foreigners must be given opportunity to get to know our system of government, our special problems (French Canadians, the Prairie Belt in Half-Bankruptcy, the Maritimes, the Eskimos, the Senate, the Cabinet-Parliament Relationships etc., etc., etc.), our achievements (unity, industrialization etc.). A two-hours-weekly course (50 hours total should about cover the complex in a very general fashion.

Actually, I don't see at all why such a course should be instituted for foreigners alone. Most Canadians know about as much about Canada and its system as it says in "Oh, Canada!" "the true North".

Fifty per cent of us don't even know "Oh, Canada!" Such a course in Canadian Civilization should become an optional "pass" course for all students.

However, establishment of an "Institute of Canadian Civilization," an integral part of the University, offering, be it one single course, even if assented to by the University, still would require much money; a minimum of $20,000. to $50,000. to start it off and Lord knows how much more later.

Still, money for such a purpose grows on trees: you only must want to pick it.

I find it out of this world that students of Toronto U do or strive to do other greater things than playing at mock parliaments and requesting the Administration to put up bulletin boards. Still it is disappointing to find that J. K. Spicer and H. E. leSueur try to push the matter on somebody else. Let them write out their proposal in all detail.

This would mean that the contents of the Sorbonne course would be given, compared to those in other Universities, that all the expenses would be investigated, that the ways and means of obtaining money would be indicated and all other detail brought out. Having spent, let's say, 40 hours, the memorandum should be presented to the SAC for its presentation to further instances. Let the SAC worry their heads about it from then on.

Whoever would bring about the "Institute" and the course would have done a great service to Canada; it is not too often that anyone can claim to have contributed to the general good. So, go to it, J. K. Spicer and H. E. leSueur, and may you succeed!

Welcome Cloudburst At Crest

Kiss Me Katerer

The Rainmaker, playing this week at The Crest, contains within its small, plain frame the highest attributes of comedy. It is a comedy of truth more often than caricature. Its people belong to the Main Street of every insignificant Mid-Western town but Richard Nash has neither put a stylish cut into their homespun nor lost himself in a surface observation of its coarseness and monotony. He has penetrated to the richness in its simplicity and in that perception lies the success of his play. His moral is a commonplace.

Through Lizzie, his heroine, he tells us that man must be a dreamer but that his dreams must find themselves in reality—not in the stars, nor in the dust, but "somewhere in between." His play is laced with the Eliot symbolism of drought and deluge. From the deserts and seas of the personalities about her his heroine, painfully identifying herself first with one and then with the other, finally comes to the realization that in her is the proper intermingling of the two.

In his direction, Henry Kaplan puts continual emphasis on the contrasting elements. The sharp hot light, the drab attire and the dry quick speech and movement of the eternally sensible Noah are in vivid opposition to the grandiloquent motions and manners and the dark, cool sky that the Rainmaker brings.

Both William Needles and Kate Reid in their roles of father and daughter give beautifully perceptive performances. Mr. Needles emanates the serenity of a man who has found himself and the sympathy of one who watches helplessly as his own struggles are repeated and intensified in his daughter. Kate Reid as Lizzie Curry catches the essence of a character that could very easily have eluded portrayal. She finds beauty in a plain girl but never loses the pathetic appeal of her plainness. It was a magnificent performance, one to which the audience couldn't but respond.

Robert Shirriff as the Rainmaker was unfortunately not so successful. He produced a fascinating character who both disgusts us with his excess and attracts us with his sincerity. However, in spite of the height and power of Mr. Shirriff and the drama of his Mephistophelian gestures we are too often reminded of the mundanities of timing and variation of tone; his deficiencies were highlighted by the more perfected performers that surrounded him. For each of the minor parts was well realized, John Sullivan as the elder brother, Noah, was particularly notable. His only failing was not his, but the playwright's responsibility. In Noah Richard Nash has created a role which surpassed the bounds of his play and whose reality at the conclusion had to be abandoned for the sake of the dramatic action and the proverbial happy ending.

John Wilson's set sprawled in quiet untidiness over the whole of the Crest stage. The extensions of the Crest's proscenium arch were cleverly utilized to form three separate scenes. Such a device allowed scenes to play concurrently and was usually effective. When we compact our impressions into a whole we can conclude that it is a whole in which play, actors, direction and setting have combined to result in an experience which, if it does not open new worlds, at least enables us to better understand our own particular small one.

Sylvia Kifu, (II Pharmacy) this year's Carnival Queen, will go through the rounds of the campus today with some of her entourage. Object—selling tickets for the UC musical "Kiss Me Kate," playing at Hart House, Feb. 13 to 18. Others on hand will be: Myra Keskula (SPS); Barbara Gratton (St. Mike's); Doreen Fogarty (P&OT); Estelle Fleisher (UC); and Janet McRae (V.C.). Between 1:00 and 2:00 p.m. they will call at the JCR in UC, St. Mike's Coop, Vic Union, Trinity Buttery, and the Hart House Dining Room.

Get Literary, Kids!

The judges for all categories in The Varsity literary issue have now been announced. Earle Birney, Canadian poet, will judge the serious verse category and Max Ferguson (more commonly known as "Rawhide") will judge the light verse.

Other judges are: Robertson Davies, short stories, Robert Weaver, essays and articles, and Ken Bell, photography.

Earle Birney is now a professor in the English department of the University of British Columbia. He formerly taught at the University of Toronto and was instrumental in establishing a course in creative writing here at that time. He is one of the few Canadian poets to have several books of poetry published, among them, Trial of a City.

Max Ferguson is a graduate of the University of Western Ontario, where he wrote for the Western Gazette. He is most famous for putting on the air, mainly the CBC's, things that sent directors and advertisers running out for their scalpels. The disc-jockey satirist is now living and working for the CBC network in Halifax.

In view of the many mid-term tests which have been due in January, the editors of The Varsity have extended the deadline for contributions to the literary issue to Friday, February 3. There will be no further extensions.

Any writing or photograph of a bona fide student is eligible, whether or not it has been previously published in a student publication. Entries should be delivered to The Varsity office, basement SAC Building.

Smoke Control

27 Tons Of Soot A Month

By MARY JANE ROWLEY
Varsity Staff Reporter

Smoky View

It has been estimated that 27 tons of smoke per square mile fall on the U of T campus every month. But this picture is not completely accurate as in some areas 257 tons per square mile fall while in others it is far less than a ton.

The majority of people, certainly all of us, are most particular about the quality and cleanliness of our food and drink. These same people, however, take practically no thought for the air they breathe.

It is estimated that the average person consumes 2.7 lb. of food per day, 4.5 lb. of water, and 30 lb. of air—often smoke-filled.

Beside serious and occasionally fatal effects to health, smoke also causes grave damage to textiles, metals and clothing. Smoke, to use the general term, corrodes metals and dirties laundry, paint and buildings to the cost of fifteen dollars per head a year. One has only to look at the houses surrounding a railroad roundhouse to note one aspect of smoke damage.

What exactly causes smoke? Where fuel is the source of smoke, there are several factors to be considered.

First, incomplete combustion or burning of the fuel due to lack of sufficient preheating.

Secondly, a poor or irregular system of firing produces smoke.

Finally, and most important, much smoke is being produced now through the unavoidable use of fuels in furnaces that were designed for different types of fuel than those now available.

Smoke falls into three categories.

First there is the "heavy stuff"—the stuff that "comes down." This falls in the vicinity of the place from where it comes—trains, apartment buildings, houses and industries.

Secondly there is the very fine type of smoke. This kind is so small that it doesn't fall. By itself, it can't be seen. By far the most dangerous of this type is sulphur dioxide fumes.

During the great London, England smog of 1952, it was estimated that four thousand people died in five days because of the SO₂ fumes. This same type of smog that is found in Los Angeles affects the respiratory tract.

In 1925 an international incident was caused when the farmers of the Columbia River Valley complained that fumes from a consolidating mining and smelting company at Trail B.C., were drifting south and causing serious damage to forest and farm lands.

Substantial damages were awarded by an international tribunal. This led to an investigation by the National Research Council of Canada after which $13,000,000 was invested in equipment which enabled the excess SO₂ to be converted into Sulphurous and Sulphuric Acid.

Finally, under smoke are classed the invisible gases and vapours. These also corrode metals, but there is a more serious effect. In the familiar traffic jams, there is a heavy leakage of Carbon Monoxide gas from cars that are standing motionless with their engine running.

Finally, what means of prevention are there?

This view, taken one week after that at left, shows the Manufacturers Life Insurance building all but obliterated by smog. The photos were taken at the same time of day.

—Photo's Courtesy A. M. Fischer

The most practical means of preventing heavy smoke is the installation of equipment which permits the complete combustion of the fuel.

This has been conclusively proven as in the case of an industrialist on Bathurst St. who voluntarily installed $35,000 worth of equipment. This resulted in the removal of three tons of dust per day from the atmosphere. For the very fine particles, wind and rain will remove a certain amount of it. The most valuable weapon, however, is vertical turbulation. This is a situation whereby currents of warm air move upward carrying the fine particles with it while cooler air moves in to take its place.

Frequently, this phenomenon is prevented from taking place by a blanket of warm air over the smog. This forces the smog to spread out and remain in the same vicinity for lengthy periods of time. Experiments with static electricity and sound waves which cause the smoke to disperse have been successful but these methods are too expensive to be practical.

In 1949, a committee was organized to combat by ordinance and by-law the evils of smoke.

Prof. E. A. Allcutt, head of Mechanical Engineering here on the campus, was elected chairman of the committee, the Air Pollution Advisory Board.

This organization has obtained legal jurisdiction over all industries and buildings in the city. Although it has no authority over trains and steamships, it works in close connection with the Board of Transport. Steps are being taken to limit the smoke from trains and steamships.

But most impressive of all, the Board has succeeded in reducing the amount of smoke here in Toronto in some areas to less than a third of what it was formerly.

Photographs above and right were taken in downtown Toronto on two successive weeks. Views are looking south down University Avenue. In this picture, there is little smoke.

I especially want to bring this to your attention so that when you go back to your individual student councils you will be able to interest your own students in your own faculties to apply for these scholarships. Applications must be in by February 1st, at the SAC office, and we hope we will have as many students as possible applying for the program, so that our selection will be a good one.

Question . . . Mr. Mills, who are the people leading the various groups in Europe?

Student Elected To Caput

Mr. Shoemaker reported from the Caput-Liaison committee, that the president of the Students' Council in future would be invited to all meetings of the Caput. Mr. Shoemaker presented the hope that in future the student representative would be given a vote.

Now, if I might take a few minutes to outline what this means in relation to SAC— the first point is preamble and applied to student opinions. Second point regards the feasibility of having SAC representative to Caput. Caput has access to student opinions, and can make fair and just decisions regarding student matters. From now on we have a great responsibility as members and part of the judicial body in expressing student views. Student councils have attempted to have their views represented in Caput and we now are finally able to achieve this as a result of your efforts up to the present. I am proud to report this to you.

I would like to move that we extend our appreciation to the administration and president of the University for taking this step for the SAC. Motion seconded. Carried.

Chairman— If no further discussion on this item, shall we Robinson— The seventh meeting of the Publications Commission was held in the Council Office on Monday, January 23, 1956, at 1:15 p.m. Mr. Shoemaker was in the chair.

ROLL— Mr. M. Shoemaker, Mr. R. Brown, Mr. A. Tough, Mr. D. Wood, Mr. E. Schofield, Miss W. Michener, Miss A. Keene, Miss D. Haas, Miss A. E. M. Parkes, Mr. E. A. Macdonald.

BUSINESS— Mr. Tough, co-editor of Torontoniensis, stated that about 880 subscriptions had been received for the 1956 edition of Torontoniensis and that 75% of these subscriptions were from the members of the graduating class.

Mr. Macdonald reported that the amount of $4,056.50 had been received in the office for Torontoniensis sales. Of this amount $196.50 was for the 1955 edition and $3,860.00 for the 1956 edition. This is compared with an estimated income of $4,500.00 for subscriptions. Space contracts have been signed for $4,085.00 to date; $4,500.00 has been estimated to be the amount to be received. It seemed likely in both cases that the estimated amount would be obtained.

Mr. Brown, co-editor of The Varsity, presented a report to the committee.

Mr. Macdonald, reporting on costs, stated that an eight page edition of The Varsity would cost to print—$267.75 as a 4-page would be $155.19

He felt that in his opinion it was a sound business proposition to print an additional 6 issues.

Mr. Shoemaker asked if the budget was likely to be exceeded in any particular.

Based on the expense to date we should be well within the estimated expenses.

Haas—Keene: That we recommend to the Finance Committee that 4 additional 4-page issues of The Varsity and 2 additional 8-page issues of The Varsity be published.

Upon motion the meeting adjourned.

I move the adoption of this report as read.

Chairman—

If there is no discussion regarding the report of the Publications Commission—All those in favour of the adoption of the report . . . Carried.

BUSINESS—The Publications Committee recommend that 4 additional 4-page issues of The Varsity and 2 additional 8-page issues of The Varsity be published at an approximate cost of $1400.

While the cost of these extra editions were fairly firm, the income from advertising revenue was indefinite. Up to the end of December The Varsity had an average daily income from advertising of $227.

Professor Hennessey said this decision actually means spending an additional 200 to 300 dollars more for the extra issues of The Varsity.

Haas—Shoemaker: That The Varsity be authorized to publish 4 additional 4-page issues and 2 additional 8-page issues making 86 issues in all rather than the 82 on which the budget was based.

Mr. Shoemaker presented a bill from NFCUS asking that they be paid a total of $94.65 for expenses incurred a year ago. This included an amount for accommodation and food for delegates to the regional conference $52.10; refreshments at the regional conference $49.05; a telegram of .60; a photograph of the regional conference and a frame for a picture $2.01.

The committee approved of the payment of $40.61 of this account but decided they would write to the national office to get an account of the $49.05 concerning the expenses of Peter Martin for the general conference as he was an officer of the national NFCUS at that time.

Upon motion the meeting adjourned.

MOGAN . . . Last year's council moved that $75 be paid. The question now is whether we should pay the $95.

Motion for the report was passed. No discussion. Carried.

EAC Committee

Report of the External Affairs Committee read by Diane Haas.

The eighth meeting of the External Affairs Executive Committee was held in the Council Office on Wednesday, January 25, 1956, at 1:00 p.m. Mr. Shoemaker was in the chair.

ROLL— Mr. W. Smyth, Mr. E. Schofield, Mr. M. Shoemaker, Mr. J. Burbidge, Mr. H. Mills, Mr. H. Littel, Miss D. Haas, Miss K. Leonard, Miss M. Nash, Miss D. Lough, Miss A. E. M. Parkes, Mr. E. A. Macdonald.

BUSINESS— Mr. Smyth reported on the regional conference of NFCUS at Hamilton last weekend. He said it was a good conference and that the Toronto delegates had ideas about what they wanted done and had constructive criticisms. They received a good idea of the position NFCUS was in at the present time. Toronto felt that there should be more emphasis placed on the co-operation and communication of Canadian students. The Ontario Regional Conference cannot lay down policy for the national organization but it did make recommendations. These were also made to streamline the national conference for next year by having literature on the problems of NFCUS sent out early; students being asked for any resolutions for the conference at an early date so that they may get on the agenda; writing reports to be submitted at the conference; commission structure be arranged; and a seminar to be held in connection with the conference.

The scholarship campaign will be transferred from the student chairman to the national office.

With regard to the Student Discount Service, this is a local plan to be handled by each university independently.

A sliding scale of voting was recommended. Universities with a registration of over 5000 get 3 votes if they send 3 delegates; those between 1000—5000 get 2 votes if they send 2 delegates; and under 1000 one vote.

It was also said that an advisory board is being looked into by the central office.

Mr. Mills reporting for WUS said that a summer program was under way. Applications would be in by February 1st. Mr. Mills will report on the summer seminar program at the Council meeting.

Miss Mary Lou Nash stated WUS applications for the WUS seminar must be in by Friday of this week. There were not many applications to date and the seminar is scheduled for the 3—5 of February. There has been very little publicity of the seminar in The Varsity which may account for the lack of interest.

Miss Lough reported that there had been a meeting of the group going to Montreal (the Carabins) on Tuesday. This group leaves Thursday, February 2, on the 4:00 p.m. train.

Mill—Leonard: That at the Council meeting the representatives of the individual faculties and colleges be informed of the duties of their representatives to the E.A.C. and be asked to determine that their representatives are carrying out these duties.

Upon motion the meeting adjourned.

Controversial Student Topics

Adoption of report moved by Miss Haas, seconded by Schofield. Is there discussion of the report? Schofield —

It might be interesting to the Council members to hear that Toronto got the other colleges to endorse NFCUS unity policy. We wanted to emphasize the unity and welfare of NFCUS at 1956 initial conference. At the last SAC meeting I outlined how Mr. Smyth and myself felt about the status of NFCUS and I presented the position of the others. After two years we finally got this motion passed and its endorsement of our policy. A sliding scale of voting was recognized.

It is interesting to note this motion was passed by Carleton, one of the smaller colleges and other small colleges could not very well speak against it. I might mention that we received news re: travel tours to Europe.

Decided a complete report be sent around to member universities within 10 days.

I think it was a very worthwhile conference.

Burbidge —

Mr. Chairman, if I may mention WUS orientation seminar. I would like to stress these meetings held each Wednesday afternoon in Room 37, UC. I attended one last week and I learned a lot. Anyone who is interested in going to Europe would profit from these meetings.

Mr. McPherson —

Thanks to Mr. Schofield and his committee for work in McMaster.

Mr. West presented progress report on debating.

Blood Campaign

Flaherty —

Report on blood campaign. Suggested that the SAC reps turn up as a group to give blood. We would like to know if we have an anaemic SAC or not. Will give you time to think it over. Report on University Settlement.

Mogan —

Moves that SAC put $175 at disposal of Settlement to publish a Settlement Skyliner.

Library Hours

Progress Report on Library Committee

Wallace —

Meeting was held regarding library late hours. It was proposed that the Library remain open until 11 p.m. It was remarked by Mr. Blackburn that although the smoking room remained open until 11, only about an average of 4 persons of the student body used the smoking room during the evening. Stacks are closed at 20 to 10.

Mogan —

Suggested that the Wallace room and reading room be left open with only a skeleton staff of 4 policing, no books allowed to go out.

E. A. MacDonald —

Proposed that Mr. Blackburn be invited to attend the next SAC meeting to give an account and answer questions.

Typical Reactions

... And The Varsity will be able to publish six issues more than planned this year. So the Publications Commissioner, Tom Robinson, reported to the SAC last night. Reactions of boredom, horror, and mystification are seen on the faces of various SAC members after this interesting little piece of information. Tom Robinson quietly continues his report. —VSP by Paul Kyselka

The Bookstore

Progress report of Book Store Committee — Role of staff.

Purdy —

Each summer the professors are asked to submit a list of the books required and approximate enrollment in class, so that bookstore will have textbooks on hand. Staff, however, does not cooperate. It was suggested that each Faculty head be reminded to urge their staff to submit this list to the bookstore in summer, in preparation for fall.

It was suggested that a filing system be kept of the running stock. This would help people find what they're wanting to buy. Now they are not arranged in any order. Which discourages students.

Self-service was suggested in the bookstore, and it was felt that this was impossible in the present building, but that plans are underway for a new building.

Mogan moved the adoption of the progress report on bookstore.

tee for the AVR of three members.

New Business — An amendment was tabled to change the method of endorsing cheques for the SAC.

Sevenpiper —

Proposed that a student union committee be established.

Discussion —

Student union would take student interest away from Hart House, JCR, Vic Union. Would be inaccessible to people (Grads) who would need it. Other faculties have their own coffee shops. Plans are being laid for a Women's Athletic Bldg. beside Falconer Hall with some office space. Ground for this was to be broken in 1955. Field house suggested would be better.

Proposals for Student Union were defeated as impractical and impossible at the present time.

Meeting was adjourned.

'Barren' North Said A Myth

That the Arctic is not the barren waste most people think it is was well proven at last night's meeting of the Hart House Exploration Society, said biologist Bristol Foster.

Foster (U of T graduate student) addressed the meeting and illustrated his talk with coloured slides of the flora and fauna of Fort Churchill and the surrounding area, which showed this area to be rich in plant and animal life.

Next weekend, eight members of the Society will depart on an expedition in the Algonquin area. Temperatures are expected to reach 20 below zero. This is said to be a fine way to keep cool, a club spokesman said.

THE foundation of the Women's Union in Cambridge has been greeted with every reaction from caucalls of derision to enthusiastic cheers, and the opposition has not been by any means exclusively from the individual and disinterested, jealously guarding his privilege. Many women have felt—voicing the fashionable, I never asked to be emancipated attitude—that a separate Union would prove merely another instance of aggressive and ill-tempered feminism if the ideas of its President are anything to go by such objections should be resolutely overcome as the Women's Union gets under way.

Harriet Thomson

Harriet Thomson came up to Cambridge a year ago from Toronto University to read Part II Physics. Guiding her in the quite different atmosphere of Cambridge was supplied at the interchanges facing Cambridge women and presented at once with an general and effective that characterizes her to do something about it. The result is her connection with the Women's Union.

This gave her an opportunity to see England from a slightly different standpoint from that of the conventional tourist. Harriet's touring is rarely of a conventional kind being mostly done with the aid of a Vespa whose strength of character equals that of its owner. Belief has become a matter of expediency with their friends. She feels that so far from making a fuss about the use of women in public and prejudices which can only be effective if they are ignored, sitting from this corner interest in the Women's Union is based not on a

Death Penalty Abolished By Second Mock Session; 99 Year Penalty Defeated

The Mock Parliament went into its second session last night. Nominated speaker of the House for the evening was Mr. E. Rose.

This session of the Mock Parliament made up of U of T students was held in the Legislative Chambers and was attended by about 30 interested spectators.

The Liberals put forth their second bill amending the Criminal Code of Canada to abolish the death penalty and to substitute life imprisonment in cases of murder and high treason.

The Minister of Justice, Stephen Borins, for the Liberal Government, made clear his party's policy when he said that the death penalty "is vindictive and does not lead to a reform, since you cannot reform a dead man."

To this speech PC leader Ted Rogers replied "This is a political football."

Rogers said students were not capable of judging on matters upon which even experts could not decide. He called the bill an act of expediency by the Liberals who were "uttering Socialist bills."

He further cited Liberal inconsistency, pointing to the fact that the Liberals of the U of Western Ontario were bringing forth a bill with exactly the opposite opinions.

Rogers voted for the bill on religious grounds and declared that each member of his party was voting according to individual belief. After some bandying between CCF and PC members, Prime Minister Levenstein expressed the belief that nothing was outside the scope of student discussion.

CCF Member Borovoy charged that the Government has participated in the rape of our national resources, the perversion of our sense of decency and the murder of the chances of democracy in the countries of South East Asia, through party support of the Colombo plan. Since they did not want to be charged with murder they put forth this bill out of pure self-interest; the CCF party on the other hand would support it for the sake of its moral justifications.

The bill was voted upon, with the "Ayes" getting the majority. The second clause of the bill, "that the death penalty should be abolished" was debated, Hanson, for the PC's, moved that an amendment be made to this clause with the addition, that those convicted of high treason should serve a life sentence of no less than 99 years. This amendment was defeated 42-47.

The clause "life imprisonment should be substituted for the death sentence" was left unamended after some debate; thus leaving the bill passed and unamended.

The House was then adjourned until Thursday night.

Various observers expressed the hope that there would be less of the heckling that pervaded the atmosphere last night.

Harriet In England

Toronto Girl Makes Good

By CATHERINE OLVER

History has been made at Cambridge, England, and by a Varsity grad. Harriet Thomson is first president of the new Cambridge Women's Union.

Harriet Thomson, ST4, is a well-remembered Toronto graduate. Few people have combined her academic brilliance (I, 1 in M&P) with her talent for getting mixed up in things.

While at Toronto she was a leading light in U of T and UC debates, the UC Player's Guild and in student government, and crowned her achievements here with the Moss Scholarship.

Now at Cambridge, Harriet is combining Physics with the same kind of extra-curricular life. Her Vespa, Betsy (remember Roman Holiday) is widely recognized outside lecture halls. She toured last summer in "The Lady's Not For Burning." Now she hits the headlines in the Cambridge Varsity (student newspaper) as founder and first president of a Women's Union.

This is not a women's union as we understand it at UC and Vic, but primarily a debating union, and also "a social meeting ground and a centre of ideas."

Harriet was appalled at this lack among Cambridge women, and set about to do something about it.

Last November, she was the first woman ever to speak at the Presidential Debate, a star-studded event in which presidents of student unions from leading British universities take part. The debate was broadcast over the BBC and Elizabeth Endicott, ST5, sent an enthusiastic report from Oxford.

Speaking against the motion that University Education is a myth Harriet raised loud laughter with "What have I been pursuing for six years? Is it a myth?" and again with "Now before I proceed — is it water?"

The motion is decided by the volume of support for the ayes and noes, but on this occasion it was carried by the chairman's vote in face of equal cheers from both sides. So in spite of brilliant opposition from Toronto, Cambridge students have pronounced University Education a myth.

Vicious Rehearsal Attack Rips Vic Head's Shoulder

Victim of a vicious attack in a dark college corridor last night was former principal of Vic College, S. S. Nelles.

He suffered a bayonet wound in the left shoulder.

Challenged by bayonet-wielding Private Willis and asked to buy a ticket to the forthcoming production of Iolanthe, the former dean indicated by his silence his refusal, whereupon he was stabbed.

The wound is marked by a gash in the shoulder of the canvas portraying the dean in his robes of office, which hangs along with others in Vic's corridors. The dean himself has been dead for years.

NO BILLS PASSED

Heated Debate

Time, Party Bickerings Defeats Parl't Purpose All Over For The Year

No legislation was passed at last night's third Parliamentary session in the Ontario Legislature. The session ended in deadlock.

Shortage of time was the major difficulty. The Liberal government's third bill, abolishing whipping as punishment, failed to reach a final vote before adjournment, and their fourth bill, on a government-sponsored health-insurance plan, never reached the floor of the House.

Students were representing their parent parties in the final sitting of University's yearly Mock Parliament.

Conservative private member's bills, advocating revision of Canada's divorce laws and a Canadian Bill of Rights failed to reach a third reading.

Whipping "is revengeful," said Minister of Justice Steve Borins (IV UC) in introducing the Government bill. "The job of punishment is to be rehabilitative rather than retributive."

Borins explained that this bill, which would abolish corporal punishment in all Canadian prisons, was a first step in a full-scale prison reform. Eventually, offenders would be segregated into maximum, medium and minimum security institutions. If you whip a prisoner, "you can't make him confident in himself," he said.

"This bill is the only thing the Liberals and the Socialists could agree on," replied Ted

How many liberals became antagonized to society due to whipping as boys?" he asked. (Continued on Page 2)

Discuss, Deny 'Discrimination' Termed 'A Misunderstanding'

By DOUGLAS STEWART

In yesterday's Varsity an article appeared on the editorial page implying that discrimination was practiced at this University.

The article in question included this paragraph: "Why was a negro student from the Gold Coast refused access to speak to Miss Dorothy Thompson at Convocation Hall, when others after him were allowed the privilege?"

An hour after the paper appeared on campus, President Sidney Smith telephoned Bob Brown, co-editor of The Varsity to discuss the matter. President Smith said that he was the doorman and that he was completely responsible for anything that occurred there. But no person was refused entry, he emphatically stated. "Miss Thompson said that she must see them all," he said, "and not one person was refused entry."

"You can quote me!" said Dr. Smith. "I've got faults, but that's one thing I'm sensitive to. This is not fair to the University. Not one person was refused entry. I am personally responsible."

Following this conversation, the student referred to was contacted by a Varsity reporter. He was emphatic in his denial that Dr. Smith stopped him at the door. "Someone else told me that the room was full. So I waited for a few minutes and saw four others let in. I didn't want to cause a commotion so I went home and went to bed. I really think that somebody just made a mistake," he said.

Egbert Tertullian, author of the story, was then reached by phone. He said that he had looked further into the issue and thought that some student had simply made a mistake in his estimation of the seating capacity of the room. "After further investigation," he said, "I have been led to think that there is no discrimination but only a misunderstanding."

Fate Of NFCUS In Wind At UNB

Fredrickton, N.B. (CUP): The University of New Brunswick withdrew from the national student federation for twenty minutes last Wednesday night.

The Students Representative Council of UNB first defeated a motion to pay the second instalment of the 50c per student NFCUS fees. This would have automatically meant the withdrawal of New Brunswick from NFCUS.

The Students' Council action was taken in an attempt to eliminate a $500 deficit in their council budget.

But twenty minutes later the council voted, 12-11, to honor their agreement to support NFCUS, and passed the NFCUS fees item in the budget.

The Brunswickan, student newspaper at UNB, reports that a campus petition to reconsider the decision is "in the wind," and a student referendum on the issue could result.

The NFCUS dispute comes on the eve of the Atlantic Regional Conference of NFCUS, to be held on the UNB campus January 29-30.

Salaries Higher, Job Prospects Better, Says Bradford

Salaries of students graduating this spring run 8% to 10% above those of last year, said the University Placement Service's Director, Mr. J. K. Bradford.

The demand which last year resulted in 4,000 campus interviews is still running high, he said. Up to today, 174 companies have indicated that they were looking for university graduates, while only 134 companies were interested last year at this time.

But Mr. Bradford said that he did not think enough students were aware of the university-maintained employment center.

He said "the number of liberal art graduates who do not come to us for help in obtaining a job is rather astonishing."

Mr. Bradford said that 90% of the hopeful grads who came to see him were successful in finding jobs.

All prospective employers are assigned interview dates. Well before these dates, a bulletin on the employer, the type of job, and the date and place of interviews is sent to all the employment bulletin boards in the University.

The student signs an interview list—usually kept at the Placement Service office at 5 Willcocks St. for any jobs that interest him.

In March the system changes. All students still unemployed are advised to register personally at the employment service, which will then try to fit the applicants to the jobs available.

"I advise graduating students to start looking for jobs soon," said Mr. Bradford. "Employers come earlier every year to the campus," he said.

"Not that coming earlier gets the employers anywhere," he said. The students want to wait until late in the year to hear all the offers."

Mr. Bradford suggested that the demand for arts graduates is on the upswing, although the biggest shortage of grad's is still in the engineering faculty.

There are good opportunities available for prospective graduates in every course, he said. He also said that women also had a good selection of jobs to look over, even though employers did not like them as well as males for some positions because they were too liable to leave to get married.

Absorb 'Canadiens'? Approve Student Failure

Topic of HH Debate

"Assimilation is the only hope for French-Canada is the topic of the next Hart House debate. The debate, held next Wednesday at 8:00 p.m., will have Senator

Jean-Francois Pouliot as the Honorary Visitor. The newly-appointed Senator was for many years a fiery representative of a Quebec constituency in the federal parliament.

The speaker will be Clyde Batten III UC, a former editor of The Varsity. The motion will be supported by Ralph Saunders, III Vic, and Moishe Reiter, III UC. The opposition debaters are R. Kilmovski, III Meds and L. Pierre, Grad School.

A Test That Tells How "Fast" You Live

Are you chugging along only half-alive or living at abnormal racing-car speed? Your BMR (basal metabolic rate) -- the lowest rate at which your body converts food into energy -- will tell you how "fast" you're living (too fast or too slow means something's wrong).

February Reader's Digest shows you how BMR works, and how this test gives doctors clues to your state of health. Get your February Reader's Digest today: 38 articles of lasting interest condensed to save your time.

Kingston—(CUP)—The Queen's Journal has been conducting a poll of students' reaction to the dismissal of eighteen sciencemen after failing seven of nine Christmas exams. Although the decision was approved by the student body at large, most students felt the faculty should have informed those dismissed during the holidays to save them the cost of returning needlessly to Queen's.

Some students thought that it was a good idea to dismiss them now because it would save them further expense; and let them realize that they are not suited for engineering. Others felt that it was highly possible for some people to fail at Christmas and still pass in the spring.

One faculty member felt that since the students were paying for their education they should have the chance to finish out their year.

Arrange New Type Forum Held On Sunday Evenings

A new method of holding the ever-diminishing Sunday evening church congregation has been put into operation.

Every Sunday evening, the minister of Bathurst United Church is conducting an open forum to answer questions dealing with "issues vital to the present-day life".

Gordon Domm, minister of the church said: "TV forum programs, and entertainment generally attain professional standards churches cannot match. But Television cannot create the quality of personalized audience-participation possible with a 'live' audience, and neither can it provide the atmosphere of worship that a church does."

Questions which the minister feels qualified to answer without further consideration are answered on the spot. Other questions call ing for further research are held over until the following Sunday.

University students have been invited to attend future meetings, where they can give any questions to sidemen. The forums begin at 7 p.m.

Time, Party Bickerings

"The Liberals will not succeed either here or in Ottawa."

Fifteen minutes of the session were lost when Hal Jackman (I Law), a Conservative, asked for extra time to finish a speech. It was found that 44 Conservatives had voted, although they only held 42 seats. "The Conservatives are masquerading as Communists," a heckler shouted.

Adjournment was closed when the bill came up for final approval. After five divisions, no decision had been reached. As the House was past its time, adjournment was called.

A Canadian Bill of Rights was proposed by Conservative Gary Cooper (IV Trin). "Consideration of human rights was not looked into in the British North America Act," he said. The Bill was the same as one proposed in the Federal House by Conservative John Diefenbaker.

"The parasites of the people—the big businessmen—have presented this bill," said a CCF speaker. When the time for private member's bills ran out, the bill had not been passed.

Relaxation of Canada's divorce laws was proposed by another Conservative member, Bob Saunders (III Vic). The bill was also not passed because of lack of time.

ICE AND BASKETBALL BLUES AWAY

Pucksters Visit Quebec Expect Rough Welcome

Quebec's Coliseum will be the scene of a fair amount of blood-letting this evening, if things go according to the pattern laid out in past weeks by the Rouge et Or of Laval.

Varsity's ice Blues, no mean men at the rough game themselves, may find the Lavalians a little wilder than last Friday night when they dumped the Blues from the league lead by the slimmest of all margins.

Two weeks ago, when McGill Redmen invaded the Coliseum, besides losing 6-2, they found themselves overwhelmed by a rash of penalties for just about everything in the book; while the Carabins took on Laval last Sunday and promptly set a league record for penalties.

Referees handed out 81 minutes in the sin-bin to players from both clubs in that game, 36 to Laval and 45 to the U of M. Eighteen minors, seven majors and one misconduct were the fines, and three of the majors came with less than twenty seconds left in the game. The score was incidental: 5-0, Laval.

At home in Toronto the Blues are generally favored by honest referees, and little of the roughness is exhibited in front of the home officials. But in Quebec, where they love this sort of thing, the game is not the same without at least forty minutes in penalties. Thus the Blues can expect to see everything except the kitchen sink thrown at them tonight in the Coliseum and tomorrow night in Verdun.

Undoubtedly they will be able

Three Straight For Jr. Skule

By ARNE ENGLANDER

SPS Juniors rolled to their third consecutive win yesterday afternoon when they downed University College Juniors by a lopsided 72-30 count. The loss was the third in as many starts for the Artsmen.

Jerry Wojdon topped the Skule scoring with 14 points while reliable Hank Galta chimed in with nine. The bespectacled Wojdon tallied the bulk of his points by driving around his check and going in for the lay-up. Galta's outside shooting was mainly responsible for his total.

Danny Turack and Bernie Nisker were high for UC with nine and eight respectively. Turack scored his from close-in while Nisker used a good jump shot from 15 feet out to rack up his hoops. Nisker also did a fine job on the boards.

The Engineers were superior in every phase of the game—shooting, passing, rebounding and defensive play. It wasn't unusual to see them going three or four shots without a miss. They executed some pretty passing plays to get a man free and in position for an easy shot. Wojdon, Bill Fraser, Dave Primavera and Serge Pellegrini constantly outrebanded the opposition. On defence, Skule bottled up the UC attack before it could get started and frequently intercepted passes in front of UC's defensive basket. Dick Jaworski and Wojdon were especially prominent in this regard.

Skule led 21-10 at the end of the first period and 48-21 after the second. Jaworski hooped six points in the second frame to lead the Engineer onslaught. Wojdon potted three straight buckets to lead off the third period and the Engineers went on to score 24 points with only a nine point response from UC. This made the final score 72-30.

to handle this extracurricular activity, while finding the range behind Raynald Lavoie, the league's top goaltender, and do a vengeance act on the Rouge et Or night in their own back yard.

This, added to a victory tomorrow night in Verdun against the Carabins, will mean a tie with the Quebecois for first place. That will leave the Blues in a considerably stronger position to face three home games in the next three weeks, against all three members of the opposition, and further cement their drive for their second Queen's Cup in as many years.

Coach Jack Kennedy has been fortunate in having no injuries to impede the progress of his club, and will dress the same crew that bested Laval in every department except the scoreboard last week. Only change will find Al Fleming in goal tonight against Laval, and Al Cecutti tomorrow when the Blues test the Carabins.

The lone squash game saw SPS III blank Trinity in two games, with the third defaulted.

Aggies Trample Blue Wrestlers

The Ontario Agricultural College defeated the U of T wrestlers Wednesday evening at Guelph in a dual meet.

The Intermediates, showing a lack of experienced men, went down to defeat 38-5. John Graham gained the only victory pinning his opponent at 2:00 seconds of the first period.

The Seniors came closer losing 21-14. Freeman Roth, Rae Smith, Ben Hoyer and Wally Kamakihara won their respective matches.

Can Hoopsters Do It? Meet UWO, Assumpt'n

Just how good are the University of Toronto Basketball Blues? This question should be answered by Saturday evening when the Blues will have completed their toughest road trip of the season. This evening they face the strongest competition in the league when they battle the Mustangs of the University of Western Ontario in London. Saturday night will find them in Windsor against Assumption College Purple Raiders.

This weekend could make or break the Blues. A double win would put them ahead and running over the rest of the squads in the college cage loop. Their biggest task is to bump off Johnny Metras' Mustangs on the Mustangs' home court. To do so Varsity will have to stop Ray Monnot, Chris Ellis and John Given. They have been scoring in the double figures in all the Western games to date. Monnot is 6'6", Given 6'5" and Ellis stands at 6'3". So the Blues big job will be to keep these men away from the backboards.

Saturday evening they'll be in Windsor where Toronto will try to repeat their early season 74-67 decision over Assumption. Their task will be somewhat more difficult this time as very few teams walk off the Raider court victorious. Western managed to edge out a close 76-66 victory on Saturday, the first time Assumption has been beaten at home in a good number of years. To win the Blues again will have to stop little Howe Tramo. The Niagara Fall collegiate product was the Raider top scorer in the Hart House encounter here two weeks ago when he threw in 13 points in a losing effort.

The Blues have been practicing hard this week for the big series and with the exception of Al Vanhulls who twisted his ankle in one of the sessions, will be at their playing best. Vanhulls may see some action if his ankle gets better before game time. Toronto have held most of their quarters this week at the late St. Michael's College Gymnasium in an effort to become accustomed to the big floor at both Western and Assumption. To improve their play, they have held a few scrimmages with Newtown Motors. Before the Assumption game at Hart House, coach John McManis had been criticised through the student newspaper for the result of Toronto's lack of a first victory in eight contests. McManis hopes that history will repeat itself this weekend.

Whites Can Climb THL Ladder Battle Slumping Lyndhursts Victory Can Mean Second Spot

With the hockey situation as far as the Whites are concerned definitely looking brighter, the revitalized Varsity crew takes on slumping Lyndhurst Motors in the opener of tomorrow night's feature at Varsity Arena. A victory, coupled with a Lyndhurst win over Pickin' Chicken, would shoot the Whites into second place, a position they have failed to gain all year.

Varsity finally presented with some good refereeing, held the power-packed Lumbermen to a 3-3 tie Wednesday night, while Pickin' Chicken, the most surprising club in the league, wallopped Lyndhurst by a 4-1 count.

Coach Jack Wheldrake has been finally blessed with a full turnout of players for the past few games, and with solid bench strength, the Whites seem to have shaken their old nemesis, the third-period blues. Although they did slow down a bit in the third period on Wednesday, the squad was really flying throughout the first two cantos, as they kept pace with Kingsway all the way.

Wheldrake seems, at long last, to have hit with a pair of top-rate lines. The way that Grant Mills, Tom Riley and Dunc Brodie started off the last game, it was plain to be seen that somewhere along the line, the Whites have found that extra effort necessary for a winning team.

The number two trio of Clare Fisher, Dud Kearney and Mike Elik was producing a brand of hockey that would make any coach happy. Back on defence, the story was much the same. John Tullon and Ray Savary provided the bounce, while the heads-up play of Lorry Stacey and Ted Lotocki left nothing to be desired. Between the pipes, Wheldrake certainly has no worries. The play of big Hugh Curry has been nothing short of sensational and this, coupled with his great team spirit, has been a boost to the squad.

Spelling out on the forward lines were Don Borthwick and Greg Bourassa. Borthwick missed a great chance from close-in early in the game against Kingsway but Jim Cruickshank came up with the best save of the night to rob him.

Saturday's game goes at 8, and with the improved brand of hockey the Whites are producing, it would be well worth your time to sit in on a few of these games.

YWCA On Top Our Gals Lose Accuracy Weak

On Wednesday night the Varsity Intermediates lost a hard-fought and close game to the Y.W.C.A. team. The Y. seemed to be able to keep an edge in the second night from the start, but the Varsity gals showed superior team co-ordination and play.

The game was fast and almost even in the first half, with both teams equally matched. Opened by a spectacular shot by Georgia Brock, the second half moved into a fast and furious last quarter, when time ran out on the Intermediates, who were trailing by one point.

Outstanding for Varsity were Joan Bond and Arlene Seaman, both guards, who, with brilliant interceptions and excellent passing kept the Y. score down and co-ordinated the team plays. Georgia Brock netted some very nice baskets and Judy Wicks' fast hook pass was very effective on the forward line. High scorer for "Y" was Barbara Black.

In their first game since coach John Hansford made the final cut in the team, the Intermediates made a very good showing, although the accuracy or lack of accuracy in the forward shooting seemed to be the reason for the loss. In a real league for the first time this year, the Varsity gals stand a very good chance. The Intermediate schedule is the best ever, with a total of eight games, two of them away.

Those who are on the team after the final cut are: Georgia Brock, Jackie Davies, Rosemary Burns, Gill Segond, Judy Wicks, Ruth McIntyre, forwards and Joan Bond, Arlene Seaman, Edith Penhorne, Barb Campbell, Katherine Mutch, Beth Hodgson, guards.

Vic Girls Down Phys Ed 3-1 Jackie Wickware Scores Two

The previously unbeaten P.H.E. hockey team bowed to Vic I by a one sided 3-1 score in the noon day girl hockey attraction at the arena yesterday.

Vic was in control throughout the game and continuously kept the play in the Phys Ed end. The poor P.H.E. defence was unable to clear the puck from its own zone with the result that their forwards didn't have many opportunities to penetrate into the Victoria gals' end.

Jackie Wickware started the scoring for Vic in the first period when she counted two goals on breakaways. These goals seemed to unnerv the P.H.E. girls and throw them off their stride. For the remainder of the period Vic kept the pressure on and often came within an ace of scoring.

In the second stanza Vic lit the red light for the third time, when

By MERLE OVERHOLT

Coming Up

The story from the Interfaculty Office is that Athletic Night fans are in for a first rate show next Friday, February 3rd. As well as a double basketball show with Queen's Golden Gaels the visitors, there will be senior intramural boxing as well as a special feature. This added attraction is a forty-five minute exhibition by a group of frogmen. This demonstration will be put on twice during the evening. Included in the show will be underwater rescue methods, spear fishing, use of pest equipment, etc. And just in case it's a warm night and you wish to cool off, the hockey Blues take on University of Montreal in the Carabins first appearance here this season.

Donna Lough scored on a pretty manoeuvre. That goal pretty well iced the game for Vic.

In the exciting third period, Nancy Doub made the lone Phys Ed tally with an assist by Ada McPherson. The play was wide open as P.H.E. endeavoured to score two more goals and bring about a tie game. Phys Ed took out their goalie with a minute to go but weren't able to notch the two goals they needed.

It was noticeable that the Vic team managed to pass the puck better and have stronger shots on the P.H.E. net than were fired on their own net. The Victorians continually raised the puck, using the tactics that are generally adopted by boy teams.

Joyce Kleinfelder, in the nets for the victorious Vic girls, performed brilliantly and handled all but one of the P.H.E. shots with ease. She was beaten on a shot that most girl goalies wouldn't have stopped. Hats off to Joyce.

a farce by any means?

To learn parliamentary technique is a must for the politicians of tomorrow. But when the politicians of tomorrow are the students of today, we feel that they should be more interested in the pros and cons of legislative problems than in furthering their convictions "by any means."

A moderate amount of heckling, a few jokes, and some minor irrelevancies may well be necessary to liven up the proceedings, but if debate consists only of this sort of thing, then the Model Parliament could well be termed a farce.

second step

Representation of the student body on the Caput, announced yesterday at the meeting of the Students' Administrative Council, is, we believe, the second most important event in the history of student government in this University. The first one was the beginning of student government.

This means that at last, after a long struggle, the student body will be able to present its views before the supreme disciplinary body of this university.

The student representative, who will be the president of the SAC, will be a non voting member of the Caput. We feel this is good. SAC President Mike Shoemaker suggested that perhaps someday the student representative may become a voting member and we feel this is unnecessary. And afterall, the whole student body should not be assessed as being worth as much as a dean or college president. More, or less, but please, not exactly the same.

But The Varsity joins the SAC in extending its appreciation to the administration and the President of this University.

In some other Universities a representative sits on the equivalent of our Board of Governors, the policy forming body.

Might we, with due appreciation for the step now taken suggest this as the next step in the evolution of student government.

to bed, to bed

We hear by the grapevine that someone down at City Hall is proposing a 9:30 p.m. curfew be imposed on all teen-agers to prevent them from walking the streets at night and "getting into trouble."

This rather smacks of a famous campus women's dean, who is reported to have said: "I don't know why young people spend so much time outside saying goodnight to each other, when they could be so much more comfortable in bed."

By all means let us have our 9:30 deadline. Let us revive the good old medieval custom of a bell-ringer in soft velvet cap, tights, and pointed shoes walking around crying: "nine o' the clock, and all's well." Padding softly around the darkening streets he could approach young couples and ask them for their birth certificates.

Just think of the consequences. Instead of getting a birth certificate at the age of 21 in order to drink, everyone will now get a certificate at 20 in order to be able to walk the streets and park in cars. We will no longer be bothered with these young hooligans wasting their time in theatres and concert-halls. The residences will not have to concern themselves with deadlines.

What a wonderful idea.

Tory Embarrassment

The document printed below is the first section of mimeographed report handed out to Progressive-Conservative members of the Model Parliament. When the CCF leader, Al Millard, and a Varsity reporter were given a copy of this instruction sheet Wednesday night, several Conservative leaders attempted to obtain the document from them by force.

CONFIDENTIAL

TO PROGRESSIVE-CONSERVATIVE M.P.'s

GENERAL

In face of a Liberal-Socialist Alliance, we are the official opposition.

The Liberal Bills are essentially whitewash, and represent the adoption of the Principle of Expediency in order to gain power.

Because of this we feel we should relegate the Government's Bill—the Penal Code, and Health Insurance—to a secondary role in debate. Remember this is the federal Government. Debate can and should be directed at shortcomings and faults of the federal Liberal administration, and need not be restricted to the bills.

Our aim at all times should be to embarrass the coalition, and in particular the Liberals.

As far as the Liberal's allies, the Socialists (CCF), are concerned, the best we can do is to virtually ignore them in debate.

IMPORTANT

We Must Act as a Group

1. When a Conservative rises to speak, give thunderous applause.
2. Give Conservative speakers plenty of encouragement, and applaud frequently throughout their speech.
3. Make life miserable for the Liberals. Heckle frequently when one of them is speaking. However do not make too much noise. Our aim is to embarrass the Liberals, but we also want a good Parliament.
4. The same applies to the Socialists—but concentrate on the Liberals.
5. Use laughter against the Government—laugh at them frequently.
6. Use jokes and humour in your speeches against the Liberals, but keep it clean.

IMPORTANT

The following lists of shortcomings against the government, both on the campus and Federal fields, are meant only as suggestions for your speeches. Doubtlessly you will have your own ideas also.

The list of questions, to be used during question period, are also suggestions. You will have many more to add.

Remember, embarrass the government.

1—CAMPUS ISSUES AGAINST THE COALITION

1. Liberals stand (they say) for the individual and Socialists for Collectivization—both have abandoned principle for expediency to gain power.
2. Betrayal of both parties to their voters who did not vote for coalition.
3. Hypocrisy of both parties in denying there would be a coalition before the election—"no deals" they said.
4. Obvious fear of both parties to take a stand on popular Conservative platform—govt. bills whitewash to keep Socialist support.
5. Liberals and Socialist claim they are not bound by their party policy. Yet both fought election on party platforms—Hypocrisy. Conservatives do follow party policy, because we are the only campus political club represented on the party's National Executive, and thus help create policy. We are only campus party which pledges to carry out its election platform.
6. Reform of the penal code was not mentioned during the election.
7. Failure of government to introduce legislation to aid students.
8. Alliance of Liberals and Socialists amounts to political adultery.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Information On Party Policy

Editor, The Varsity:

Certain extremists have charged the Conservative Party with distribution of documents inciting members to create a disturbance. There is nothing in these documents but information on party policy. Are the Liberals jealous of Conservative organization? They seem to lack it.

Why were the names of Cabinet Ministers kept secret? Would it be that the many Ministers know nothing about their departments, and are afraid of embarrassing questions?

Copies of the speech from the throne were not distributed. The Conservative caucus room was not arranged for. The Liberals have failed to provide bills that are conducive to stimulating debate.

All this smacks of disorganization or indifference. The two parties in "coalition" have displayed childish pettiness in combining against an individual rather than a party as a whole to the detriment of the Mock Parliament.

Tony Grey, II Trinity.

Ed. Note: For information on Conservative Party policy, readers are asked to consult the document in question which is reprinted immediately above on this page.

Tomb, Please

Editor, The Varsity:

What has happened to the main library? Instead of developing the proverbial atmosphere of a tomb that is so conducive to studying, it has become a social centre, a meeting place, a coffee shop without coffee. Students no longer attempt to keep their voices down to a soft whisper; instead they greet each other in full voice. Indeed, even the stacks, hitherto uncontaminated by the "socializers", has been invaded by graduates of the Wallace Room. Instead of "table-hoppers" we are now beset by "carrell-hoppers".

The offenders so far have been limited to the "dirty looks" and verbal requests of those "who actually come to the library for study

In answering my query, be honest dear, I want to know what brings you here. Is it to waste some time, get a man, Or part of a bigger, nobler plan?

I get annoyed when you remember to forget Ignoring means increasing your social debt And licking a pale green peppermint Say, "We want intellectual enlightenment.

We're here to learn, improve the mind; Though if the men aren't totally blind Other benefits might accrue: Besides, what's it matter to you?"

You graduate, you HAVE to teach Little brats whose minds you reach With attitudes of a lot forlorn, And thus the cycle is reborn.

Men, be warned of such as these False, painted, poiting sytheses. Free yourself, you can do no worse. Ditch the bitch, take out a nurse!

Paid Up

Everything costs money these days, meals are no exception. At least Hart House meals are reasonably priced — relatively speaking.

Hart House Kitchens Display

Pies

Every hour as classes are emptied, there is a general surge of the campus male population towards Hart House. It is not that there is a fun side in the Art Gallery, but the pies are another milk-aficionado's dream of the Great Hall. At this time over 300 students swoon down on the kitchen staff, and after an average day over 1000 meals have been served.

Meals have been prepared in the Great Hall since 1919, making it 37 years that students have stood in line before the cashier. Before the war 400 to 500 meals were consumed but for a few years after with the great increase in enrollment, a high of 3400 meals were served. What does the student think of the meals at Hart House? "Quite good," is the general opinion. One newly-married student said, "Don't let my wife hear this but the cooking here is what keeps me going." Her cooking is all in the can."

By PATT CHARLEBOIS

"It's the best place around the campus that I know of," said one reviewer. "Consuming a large piece of apple pie — all the guys usually eat — I like it. The prices are good. I like it."

"It's pretty crowded sometimes though," offered another student an engineer, "and you have to wait in line. But Al here and me make it pretty fast before the rest of the guys come." Most students found it convenient and agreed that the prices helped keep their expenses down. At the same time a kitchen staff of around 50 persons watched the results of hours of concentrated turning and effort. Wearing white smocks and neatly filling shelves, the staff goes about the work which some of them have been doing for over 8 years. A grey-haired woman behind the counter said, "I guess you could call it food unlimited. We make it, prepare it, put it out on the shelves and watch it go."

Altogether that would make an engineer proud. Gifted in pies, white smocks, hooded in vests, aproned, oven doors, and stirred pins, while the aroma of cooking notes pervades, carrots and more carrots, and potatoes, chopped and given to the peck.

It said this into an average two-hour long 2 or 4 cases of change, a couple of baskets of carrots, 123 lbs. of raw peas and 40 to 50 gallons of milk. Pies especially seem to be a specialty of the kitchen. They are washed and garnished until the finished product is ready and then pushed out to the cafeteria shelves on high carts.

The kitchen does not only make students' meals but prepares all the food served in Hart House.

This includes the Truck Shop and the Arbor Room. Also there are special events like parties, Invitation Dinners and Receptions.

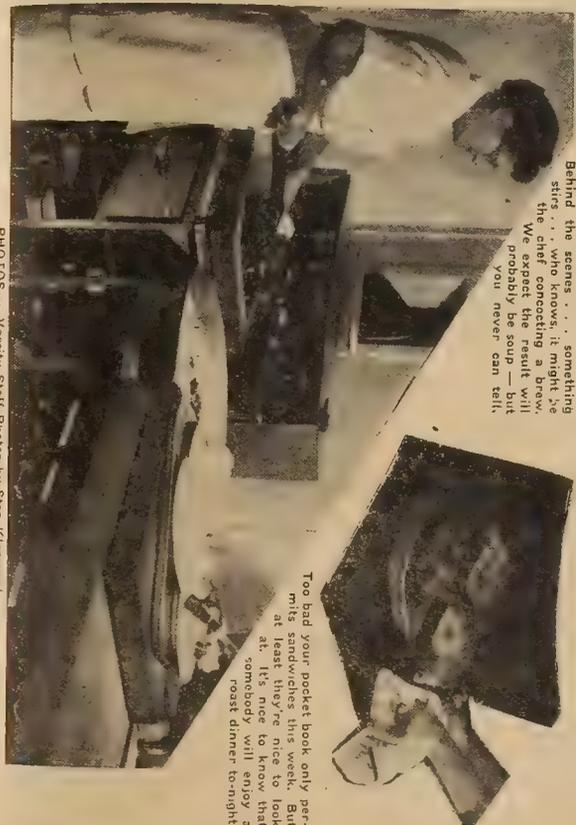

In charge of all this is a slim, neatly-dressed woman named Miss Eames. Miss Eames takes a vivid and enthusiastic interest in her work. She pictured herself and her staff as a manufacturer and merchandising unit in the serving of food. Miss Eames wondered why more students did not come and take a look at the kitchen and how it works. She thought that men would probably be surprised to see that, "we make pies in the same size pie plates as their mothers do."

The engineers especially, she thought, would be interested in the kitchen equipment, and she extended an open invitation to all students to tour the kitchen. Simply come to the Dining Hall office, and it will be a pleasure to show you how everything is prepared," she said.

One For Each Of Us

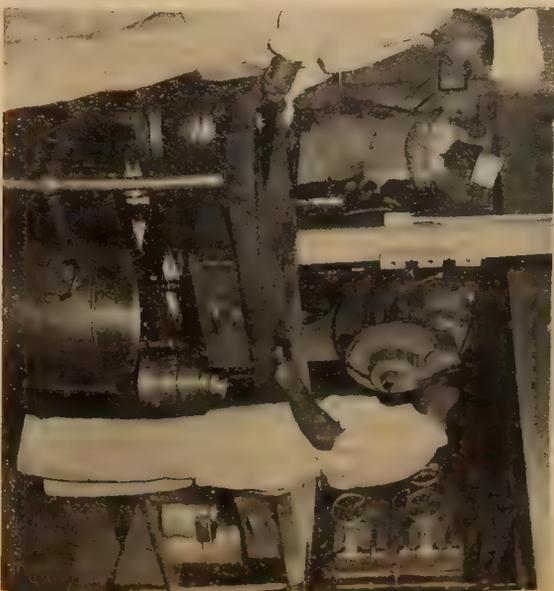

Behind the scenes... something stirs... who knows, it might be the chef concocting a brew. We expect the result will probably be soup — but you never can tell.

Too bad your pocket book only permits sandwiches this week. But at least they're nice to look at. It's nice to know that a good sandwich will enjoy a good dinner to-night.

Hamburgers and the works. Someone has to cut up the condiments. We've never yet had peppers with our burgers, but they're plenty hot, just the same.

Plenty of modern equipment here. It looks like...

HH Sunday Eve

NICHOLAS GOLDSCHMIDT, the Conductor of the Opera School Chorus of the Royal Conservatory, will lead his group at this Sunday Evening's concert in Hart House.

The works to be performed are Gloria, by Vivaldi, and the Coronation Mass, by Mozart.

The performance, which begins at 9:00 p.m., will be held in the Great Hall of Hart House, is open to all students of the university.

The organist is Dr. George Brough, and soloists include Anne Stephenson, Joan Maxwell, and Florianne Cotnoir.

Orchestra For Hire

Symphony Goes To School!

To prove that there's no need to let a good thing die, the orchestra from Skulenie has kept in practice during the last few months and on Wednesday made their first public appearance since Skulenie closed, at the Hart House Wednesday noon-hour concert.

The band, consisting of two altos, two tenors, three trumpets, three trombones, piano, bass and drums, is led by Billy Steigbel, the musical director of Skulenie. Comic interest (seemingly essential at all SPS affairs) was provided by MC Jim Vasoff, in the role of the typical bopster with beard moustache and tartan hat. The music, however, based on the music of the 19th century, featured the sounds of the Swing Era rather than those of modern jazz.

A band of student musicians such as this can be only as good as their individual techniques permit. But it's possible to be a great deal worse — the best individual musicians may play together abominably.

It is to the credit of the Skulenie orchestra that they play together as well as their technical abilities allow them. What faults there were, in other words, were mostly individual — the sections were well balanced in tone and dynamics both internally and with respect to one another. To these ears the sax section sounded the best. The violin solos were creditably done, though not without some tremor and trembling.

Finally a suggestion — the use of using exclusively stock arrangements, why doesn't the band give an opportunity to musicians around the campus to write for them. In all events it was an auspicious comeback debut.

The band is available for dances — lets hope it gets lots of jobs.

SAC PRESIDENT ON CAPUT

Point Of Order

Here Steve Borins, Liberal, rises to address last night's meeting of the Model Parliament. The session was enlivened by charges that the Conservative Club was attempting to disrupt the Parliament.

—VSP by Jim Feeley

Shoemaker Appointee Of Caput To Sit On Disciplinary Body

Students of this University are now represented on the Caput, the supreme disciplinary body of the University.

This was announced at Wednesday night's SAC meeting, when Students' Council President Mike Shoemaker announced that the Caput had decided to appoint the SAC President to its ranks.

According to a decision reached on Jan. 14, the president of the SAC will attend all Caput meetings if he so desires. Agendas of forthcoming meetings will be forwarded to the president to enable him to prepare material and determine policy. He will have full speaking rights on the Caput, but may not vote.

In an interview with The Varsity, SAC president Mike Shoemaker said that student representation is to be tried on a trial basis for the remainder of the year and during next year. He said that it is the sort of thing last year's president Bill Angus had campaigned for strenuously but that it "goes further than our actual request which was just for representation on issues directly affecting the students."

In discussing the implications for student government, Shoemaker said "I think that it is a big step in creating more responsibility in the SAC."

"This is an historical moment," he cried, "We will hold it like freedom of the press."

The most recent requests for student representation arose over a year ago, when the Caput imposed a fine of $4,000 on the Engineering Society and suspended its constitution because of its implication with the Freshman engineering riots a year ago last September.

Student protests over his action resulted in the revitalizing of the SAC-Caput Liaison Committee, and an increase in student representation on that body. Continued student requests were later met by the appointment of Shoemaker to the Caput itself.

'Rogers At Fault'

Bob Fenn, President of the Political Economy Club, and Duncan Campbell, Secretary, wrote this letter immediately after the third Mock Parliament session.

In the light of the fiasco which has developed, several questions need asking, and answering. The primary question is can we ever hold another Mock Parliament? This is doubtful. The student body, quite rightly, has regarded the present parliament as a joke. With this atmosphere it is a foregone conclusion that interest in any future parliament will be greatly reduced.

The second question is: why has this situation arisen? It has arisen largely because of the irresponsible attitude of certain individuals, who have no sincere desire to see a good Mock Parliament. Mr. Rogers is the individual most responsible for this situation. Prior to the session, he consistently disrupted the attempt of the Mock Parliament committee to come to a reasonable agreement. After that agreement had been reached, and approved by him, he repudiated it. Throughout the negotiations, he resorted to the slander of his opponents and did not scruple to utter lies. With this background, the Mock Parliament convened.

His actions and the actions of a small segment of his party have been obvious to all since the start of the session. His tactics have been to use excessive heckling, to talk on anything but the bill at hand, and to thump his desk like a berserk Maori. He and his segment have deliberately disregarded the rules of order and procedure. The lowest point was reached when he forced five divisions in a row. Each vote was exactly the same and this pointless filibustering aptly highlights his irresponsibility.

While it is true that the other parties did not conduct themselves with complete decorum, it was obvious to any observer that the Conservatives were much more at fault in that regard. It is also true that the Government bills were not as debatable as we could have wished to see them but more opposition could have been provided.

Unfortunately, we can find no constructive suggestions to make. No matter what arrangements are made, they can be effectively ruined by anyone who wishes.

A sensible Mock Parliament depends on the full cooperation and complete sincerity of all four parties. Any minority which wishes to disrupt the Parliament can do so. There is no way to prevent it, short of physical force.

If there are to be any future Mock Parliaments, there will have to be some grave changes in attitude by many of the student "politicians" on this campus, especially those who seem to dominate the Conservatives.

"Whip" Plan of Conservative MP's Is Revealed at Commons Session

Progressive Conservative members tried unsuccessfully last night to hush up a party plan to whip their members into political line.

The Progressive Conservative scheme was based on the floor of the Ontario Legislature here last night when Allan Millard, a CCF member, read aloud a "confidential" document belonging to the PC's which he had secured from an undisclosed source.

However, neither the PC scheme nor the parliament will affect taxpayers—it was the third and final night sitting of a "model parliament" being carried on at Queen's Park by students of the University of Toronto.

The students were elected to the party at a University student election last fall.

Millard, last night, arose midway through the sitting and said that he had a document of importance which he wished to read.

Several Progressive Conservative members jumped up in quick succession in attempts to forestall the reading.

Someone in the hubbub cried from the PC side of the house: "We don't need to be afraid of smear tactics."

The Progressive Conservatives' energetic, sarcastic-tongued chief-tan, Ted Rogers, objected that the information Millard planned to read was "confidential".

John Gamble, another PC front-desk man, shouted across the floor, "thief!"

But getting the nod finally from

Speaker-of-the-House E. E. Rose, Millard read the document, only to be heckled and interrupted so often that Rogers at last proposed it be read by the House clerk.

The PC document reminded its members:

1. That the Government formed was the result of a Liberal-Socialist coalition (taking over because the PC majority was not large enough to permit forming a government).

2. That the chief aim of the PC members as official opposition was to "embarrass the Liberals and ignore the CCF".

3. That they should heckle loud and often.

4. That they should laugh at the coalition frequently.

5. To applaud "thunderously" each time a PC rose to speak.

6. To make jokes but keep them clean.

7. That the Liberal-Socialist "coalition" amounted to "political adultery".

Millard denied the charge of coalition between CCF and Liberals, made by the PC's. "They apparently work on the presumption that a lie if it is big enough and told often enough will soon be believed," Millard said.

Millard said that if the students composing the mock parliament were the leaders of tomorrow, "intelligent and principled men will have nothing to do with politics."

He said the ethics involved in putting the matter before the house were of grave personal concern to him. "They (the PC's)" he said, "wish to discredit the government and throw it into disrepute."

Conservative MP Gary Cooper threw the allegations back in the Liberal-CCF laps. He called the reading of the PC scheme a "smear tactic" turning the house into a circus and a zoo.

"Give me anarchy, give me death, but God save me from a Liberal-CCF coalition such as this," Cooper thundered.

The whole question, Cooper charged, had been raised by the Liberals to cover up their own incompetence at forming a government, a clause in the orders reminded PC's not to do anything which would endanger the success of the parliament.

Operations Research Course Plans Second Series In Oct.

Unanticipated interest in the Business Administration's tentative course of Operations Research has led to a doubling of the attendance limit.

The course, instituted as part of the Administrative Development Program of the Institute of Business Administration, U of T, is intended to acquaint management with the nature and usefulness of operations research and its suitability of application to management problems. Topics include case histories illustrating linear programming, capital equipment policy, the use of computers, inventory and production scheduling, and "waiting-line" problems.

The original limit of thirty participants was raised to sixty and the course is being conducted in two sections. Professor T. C. Graham, Director of the Institute, of the Toronto goal posts. There is no constitutional ruling whereby such an offense is deemed illegal.

The prosecution manager of the Student Court will recommend an amendment to the constitution whereby members of the AMS who cause financial loss to the university will be held responsible.

plans to repeat the series in October for those who could not be included in the current series.

The course is being conducted by Drs. P. J. Sandiford, B. Bernholtz and W. Shelson of the Operations Research team of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Ask Gov't Aid Bill Is Tabled Bottom of List

Ottawa — (CUP) — A resolution asking government aid for students, introduced by a Liberal back-bencher, was talked out in the House of Commons on Friday.

A. H. Hollingsworth, Liberal, York Centre, urged the introduction of legislation setting up a national system of bursaries and scholarships. He estimated 20,000 Canadian students needed financial help to get a university education.

The introduction of the proposal was sparked by NFCUS. The student body has for some time past attempted to have the government consider aid to students.

No vote was taken on the resolution before adjournment, which means it will go to the bottom of the private members' list and is unlikely to come up again for discussion at this session.

Mr. Hollingsworth stated he was asking for student aid through national bursaries and scholarships. The money, he said, for such a scheme would have to come from the federal treasury. Any plan, he continued, would have to be developed with full regard for provincial rights. An embryo plan existed at present, he said, with the provision of federal aid for provincial bursaries.

Intermediate support for the resolution was received from all opposition parties. Favorable speeches included those of Opposition Leader George Drew. Prime Minister St. Laurent was an "interested listener".

Mr. Hollingsworth said his plan was not designed to assist brilliant students who could afford a university course. It would help those who could not otherwise attend a university. Such help to veterans after the second world war had returned much revenue in higher income tax from better-paid, university educated men, he said.

Fire Strikes University New Structure Gutted

A well-known university building was gutted by fire here Friday night. At approximately 12:10 a.m. the Winter Carnival igloo, home for a night of two engineers, burst into flames.

It is not known exactly what caused the fire.

The flames took hold of the wooden structure supporting the snow on the outside of the igloo, melting the snow and bursting forth with a great hissing sound.

The fire burned approximately fifteen minutes, with the melting snow dripping inside and bubbling in the flames. At 12:25 the roof caved in, smothering the fire in the centre of the igloo. The wood on the side continued to burn.

At 12:27 a truck and a car arrived on campus from the Adelaide and College Streets Station of the Toronto Fire Department with siren screaming and red light flashing.

Four firemen ran a hose out to the igloo and successfully extinguished the fire within ten minutes. One of the firemen chopped the remaining embers of wood with an axe and threw the charred boards out onto the snow.

It took the firemen two minutes to answer the call placed by the University of Toronto policeman on duty. The policeman had been directing traffic from the COFC ball taking place in Hart House at the same time.

Alas!

Desperate Offer Fails Eds Want To Be Led But Dislike Business

The Varsity has refused a desperate plea of P. E. Taylor, noted Toronto industrialist, to sell the university student paper to him for $23,000,000.05.

The decision was reached after an all-weekend conference between Taylor and the co-editors of The Varsity, Wendy Michener and Bob Brown.

"I've just got to buy a newspaper," blubbered Taylor, obviously distraught. "All my life I've wanted to own a newspaper — as a boy, I got endless hours of fun by cutting paper dolls out of them."

Taylor said that since The Daily Star had turned down his offer of $21,000,000 for their paper last week, The Varsity was his only chance to purchase a great Toronto daily. The Varsity is Toronto's second largest morning daily.

The Telegram and The Globe and Mail are already owned by Taylor's arch-rival fellow millionaires, and the prominent industrialist wanted a chance to answer back at "all the nasty remarks that they've been making about me and my brother George," said Taylor.

But Varsity Editors Brown and Michener were firm in resisting Taylor's offer.

"We couldn't stand to lose our independence," the editors said. "For years The Varsity has been under the thumb of the Students' Administrative Council, our publishers, and we couldn't bear to get out from under now."

Taylor protested that The Varsity would become equally dependent under his ownership, and that the editors would soon become as attached to the thumb of Big Business as they were to that of the SAC

"But it just wouldn't be the same somehow," the editors said. "We'd be lost without that bi-monthly brain washing that we get at SAC meetings."

Taylor almost won over the editors at one point, when he promised them absolute guidance in their editorial policy.

"You won't be able to print a word I disagree with," said Taylor.

The editors said that they liked this, because it was just like the set-up they were used to under the SAC.

"If we got our freedom," said Co-Editor Michener, we'd be lost. We just wouldn't know what to do if we didn't have somebody looking over our shoulder all the time."

But Taylor spoiled his chances when he added: "All your staff will be amply paid under the new set-up."

After this, the editors were adamant in their refusal to sell. "Our staff," they said, "work out of sheer love for the students. They would consider it a prostitution of their art to be paid for their work."

"Every university student," said Michener, "knows that work for which one is paid, is dishonest."

The editors refused to relent, even though the tearful industrialist plied them with offers for private pent-houses, six new telephone lines for the office, a dozen typewriters, and Marilyn Monroe as a private secretary for Brown.

Taylor became desperate at the last minute, when he realized The Varsity's integrity could not be bought. In a frantic last minute effort to get control over the paper, he offered to buy the editors the whole university for their private use.

"Hell no," said Brown. "What would we want with the damn place?" (Continued on Page 8)

Howells Talks On Man Questions His Origin

A new approach to the question of man's origins was outlined to the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday night by W. W. Howells. Speaking on the "First Men" Dr. Howells, Professor of Anthropology at Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, told of recent discoveries that have given a new approach to scientific thinking in this regard.

The man-apes of South Africa, first discovered in the time of the last world war, have shown, said Dr. Howells, that man was a walking, small-brained animal related to the apes. What makes man different from his closest relatives, the apes, he said, was his upright posture.

The first South African find in 1924 was the skull of a small child, about six years of age, which had teeth the size of an ape's, but in the style of humans. But this was only the first in a long train of such finds, said Dr. Howells.

The climate of South Africa, he said, is right for the fossilization of these objects. Underground lime caves in which animal bones have collected, have given up unusually large quantities of these fossils. A schoolboy contributed one of the most important finds, the skull of a new species of "human ape".

The South African scientists, reported Dr. Howells, have a unique method of digging for fossils. They simply dynamite the rock from the caves and pits, then lug the chunks back to their labs and break out the fossils.

It has been found that these primitive man-apes, though related to the apes, hunted them and used weapons to kill them and then smash open the skull or brain case to extract the brain for their meals.

Indonesians To Visit Toronto

Four Indonesian high-school teachers are currently visiting Toronto this week as part of a four-month tour of Canada to study this country's educational system.

Mahd, Noerman, one of the four teachers, said last night that he and his three associates will see something of the educational set-up in Toronto at all three levels, including religious and separate schools. They will also spend some time at OCE.

Under the act introducing compulsory education passed in Indonesia last year, the aim will be for all Indonesians to partake by 1960, Mr. Noerman said.

He added that this would be a tremendous job, but already preparations were under way to augment the supply of teachers and to build schools.

Turbulent And Stale - Mated Parliament

The Editor, The Varsity:

Now that the turbulent and stale-mated mock parliament is over, there are some interesting and noteworthy conclusions that can be drawn.

In the realm of political manoeuvring, the P.C.'s were supreme; as regards badgering, hawking, and willful white-washing, absolutely peerless. As a matter of fact, I suspect that six feet beneath a shell crater near the ruins of the Reichstag in Berlin the rotted bones of another right-wing prototype rattled with joy at the proceedings, and sent blessings and encouragement to their disciple on earth. Democracy was dealt a harsh blow. In three full sessions the democratic elements in the parliament, united and in a majority position, accomplished virtually nothing in the face of Conservative blockage. What were the Liberals' mistakes?

In the first place, the Liberals entered in a spirit of naivety and sincerity. Since this sincerity was confronted with hypocrisy and sneering, it was doomed to failure. The published list of Conservative instruction to M.P.'s failed to contain the most obvious devices used:

- 1. Lie often and loudly. Write down all lies told so that they will be consistent.
2. Watch our leader's hands for signals on what to do. (Quiet humming of "Kanada Uber Alles" is recommended.)
3. Be prepared to shift policy continuously as our leader directs. To facilitate this, develop a personal hatred of and contempt for the members of the government.
4. In front of members of the press shake hands freely with anyone around. Use such phrases as "After all, the opposition is expected to oppose," and "Us use obstruction methods? Gosh, gee whiz, mercy me, we'd never do such a nasty thing!"

Yes, the old relics of the past actually defend their tactics with cries of self-righteousness. One is supposed to picture them as a group of holy and duty-bound Vestal Virgins ascending to the altar of purity and spewing forth gems of beneficence. Well, you agents of monopoly, United Empire Loyalist throw-back tradition, and parasitic thought, go back into the confines of your plush private clubs. Revamp your methods so that you may someday be fit to sit in Houses of Parliament. But if you persist in your ruthlessness, know that democracy will not be thwarted a second time. If ever the Liberals are attacked on another stupid and unconstructive level, we will not allow ourselves to be led on and on. The counter-attack will be fair but decisive. In the future fire will be met by fire.

WUS Plans Tour, Study In Europe

Each year 35 Canadian students are sent abroad by the World University Service to attend a Summer Educational Program. Students from many other countries also take part in the seminars and study tours. This year groups will visit either Germany, Greece, Spain and Portugal, Yugoslavia or the U.S.S.R. All the groups will also spend a few days in Paris to study the work of UNESCO and NATO. Some groups will also visit Geneva.

Each group will spend approximately a month in its study area, and if possible, one week in a university. The program will run from June 12 until September 13.

Qualifications for students interested are that they be in at least third year of their course. Applications should be made at the SAC office. The deadline is February 1.

The WUS will be making an appeal soon to help raise funds to carry out the project. The provincial government makes an annual grant, but it does not cover expenses.

Unescorted

The Editor, The Varsity:

In my undergraduate days — those of The Gallant 16,000 — what is now the Arbor Room was Toronto's classiest poolroom.

Undoubtedly today's arrangement for this space is a vast improvement, and fills a vital role on campus. One aspect of the change, however, I find depressing.

As of 4 p.m. Wednesday, the Arbor Room was occupied by 27 males and the same number of females — but there were six tables of unescorted women. In other words, the Arbor Room is no longer functioning as a part of Hart House, the university men's club.

Now I'm no woman-hater — indeed, I seek their company energetically whenever I can spare time from more vital pursuits — but one of the nicest things about the House is that it is a quiet refuge, reserved for males only. Of course it is wonderful to have a place where men of the House can bring their lady friends for a coffee amid university surroundings; but how can this creation of a coffee-shop largely for women, be reconciled with the terms under which Hart House was created? Therefore let unescorted women be banned, please. They're nice girls, but they can find a place of their own.

The women of the university have long thirsted — justifiably — for a place to match Hart House. They can't create it by invading the present House. Despite the odd wisecrack, I assure you this letter is written in dead seriousness.

Blair Kirby, UC 478

Most Pernicious Result

The Editor, The Varsity:

There are many things of value which a student can derive from a Mock Parliament — a knowledge of parliamentary procedure, debating technique, the establishment of a political reputation, etc. But the most important purpose of a Mock Parliament, I believe, is to teach toleration of others' political opinions.

Unfortunately, this lesson passed over the head of a great many of the campus politicians. No party can claim immunity from members who failed in this test of toleration. But it cannot be denied that, as has often been the case in past Mock Parliaments, the majority of these failures and the most abusive of them sat in Conservative seats.

The Conservatives found it incomprehensible that a party with which they disagree, supported by a party whose policies conflict still more with their own, should form the government. Therefore, a fraction of the Conservatives proceeded to do its best to disrupt the Mock Parliament.

The failure of this clique to understand the Parliament's greatest purpose and greatest lesson, has brought ignominy upon the U of T Conservative Club and upon the Conservative Party itself whose policies the campus Conservatives claim to represent. But the most pernicious result is that this group's behavior has discredited the students of this University.

Blues Regain First Place Whipping Laval, Carabins Linseman Increases Lead

Ken Linseman fired four goals Saturday night in Verdun to personally lead Varsity's ice Blues to a 6-4 triumph over the University of Montreal Carabins, and back into a first place tie with Laval. Blues had shut out the Rouge et Or 4-0 in Quebec City Friday night.

Linseman's four goals, added to three assists picked up over the weekend, boosted him well in front of his nearest rival in the individual scoring race with 18 points. Blue centre Don Cossar moved into second with 11 points.

Blues now are deadlocked for first place with Laval, each with five wins and one loss. Carabins stayed in third place with one win in six starts, while the idle McGill Redmen remained in the cellar.

Blues battled through a scoreless first period in the Coliseum Friday before freshman George Whyte gave them a 1-0 lead in the second frame, Cossar and John MacDonald added two more in the second and Sandy Morrison one in the third to complete the scoring. Al Fleming handled 19 shots in the Toronto net while Royald Lavoie turned aside 26 Varsity drives.

Back in Verdun Saturday the Blues ran into early difficulties with a rough bunch of Carabins. Tied 2-2 coming out of the first period Linseman put the Blues ahead at 2:51 of the second only to be matched by Marcel Duhaime minutes later. John Akitt pushed it to 4-3 just before the second period ended but Alain tied it up in the first minute of the third.

Then Linseman burst forth with two quick goals, the second coming with the U of M short-handed, and the scoring was complete. Fleming, appearing in the Blue nets for the second night in a row, stopped 20 Carabins shots, while Cyrille Guevremont handled 29 for the U of M.

With the season now half over the Blues look as in strong a position as possible for the final drive for the Queen's Cup. The Carabins will be visitors this Friday in Toronto.

Assumption Raiders Win Dacyshyn Tops With 19

Windsor, Ontario, Jan. 28, (CP). Despite a brilliant 19-point performance by John Dacyshyn, the University of Toronto Basketball Blues bowed 71-58 to the Assumption College Purple Raiders in Windsor Saturday night.

The loss was the second of the weekend for the Blues, who lost to Western in London Friday night, and it pushed them deep into fourth place in the league standings. Blues now have one win in three starts.

Assumption's victory reversed an earlier decision in Toronto when the Blues clubbed the visitors 74-61. High men for the Windsor crew were veteran Dick Mackenzie with 17, and Larry Connorton and George Joseph with 16 and 13 respectively. Guard Ruby Richman with 10 points was the only other Varsity player to hit double figures.

Elsewhere in the league Saturday night, McGill Redmen edged McMaster Marauders 56-55 in Montreal. Centre Hugh Raphael sank two free throws with one second left to give McGill the victory, their second in three starts.

The Redmen now hold down second place in the league by percentage, while McMaster trails behind the Blues with one win in four games. Queen's Golden Gaels, winless in three league starts, will be visitors on the Hart House court this Friday in another Athletic Night.

Sr. Toronto Girls Win Basketball Game Sr. McMaster Squad Defeated 34-31

In an exhibition game at the Hart House gym on Friday night, the University of Toronto Senior Blues (female) that is) downed the McMaster team 34-31. Varsity was a much better team than the score might indicate, but the coach Miss Mickey Barnett was still experimenting with forward combinations and still had not made the final cut; consequently, the team play was not up to par. The only forward trio that looked as though they were of intercollegiate calibre was the threesome of Charters, Kerr and Taylor; however, the other girls did play well individually, but they could not be fairly commended upon because their lines had not been decided.

In the first period, Toronto completely overwhelmed the team from the mountain city as the Blues with superior passing and shooting ability monopolized the ball throughout the opening quarter. For the rest of the half, Toronto was not as effective as coach Barnett was experimenting with forward lines and trying different combinations in an attempt to whip her team into shape for the intercollegiate games at Queens in February.

In the opening minutes of the second half, the forward line of Charters, Kerr and Taylor was again together and Toronto once again came to life. Joy Taylor being the star. The Mac guards found this lady a little too tricky to stop as she hooped three consecutive baskets all within a few minutes of each other.

Veteran centre Don Cossar, whose one goal and two assists this weekend moved him back into second place in the individual scoring race. In his last year with the hockey Blues, Don is counted upon heavily to help the Blues retain their intercollegiate title.

In the last quarter, Toronto seemed to lose all team co-ordination and Mac came to the fore in the scoring department. If it had not been for the outstanding work of Pat Davis on the guard line Toronto might have found herself on the wrong end of the score sheet when the final whistle went.

For the Blues, Joy Taylor notched ten (Taylor tallies ten) how is that, Joy?) and Jane Rodwin with 12, as the leading lady for Mac. Two intermediate guards up for the game, Barb Campbell and Edith Penhorwood, played an excellent game

Whites Play Top Hockey Defeated In 3-2 Thriller

By JOHN VOJTECH

What do you have to do to order to win a game? Is it a question that the Varsity Whites are asking themselves? Last Sunday night the Whites were nipped 3-2 by the East York Lyndhursts in a particularly thrilling match as the Varsityites come up with a good performance, and perhaps one of their best this year.

A meager crowd which turned out for the THL Major Series twin bill, saw the Whites open the scoring in the first period as Mike Elkh battled his way into the East York zone and blasted a low screen shot which caught the corner for the score. For the next eight minutes, the Whites held the edge in play as they outskated the Lyndhursts. Then with dramatic suddenness the Lyndhursts came to life as archer Mow Galard passed the puck to Bob Kennedy who banged it home.

Don Couch and Brian McAllister tallied once each for Lyndhursts in the second and third periods respectively to give the East Yorkers a 3-1 lead. The Whites turned on the pressure and while they were hemming in the Lyndhursts, Ted Lotocki let loose with a long, low shot which caromed into the net off of East York's Joe Kane's ankle.

There were eight penalties in the game, five of them going to the Whites. Two of the penalties were majors for fighting as a little dust-up started toward the end of the first period, and it died a quick death. Don Couch and Varsity's Don Borthwick had the little set to, with Borthwick coming out on top.

Monnot Brilliant Gets 38 Points

London, Ontario, Jan. 27 (CP). Six foot, seven inch, Ray Monnot led the University of Western Ontario Mustangs to an easy 86-52 victory over the University of Toronto Blues Friday night.

A capacity crowd at Thames Hall saw Monnot hoop a record-breaking thirty-eight points. He poured in eleven field goals and sixteen of twenty-one free throws. The shorter Blues were unable to stop the Western giant.

The victory was the Mustangs' fifth straight this season without a loss, and they give all indications of continuing their domination of the Intercollegiate League. For the Blues it was the first loss of the young season. They opened with a 74-61 win over Assumption, whom they meet again tomorrow night in Windsor. The Western victory moves them way out in front in the League.

Blue Swimmers Beaten Toronto Curlers Shine

The University of Toronto's swimming team got swamped in the intercollegiate swimming meet at the Hart House pool Friday night by the rather one-sided score of 60-24. The only event that the Blue swimmers won was the five point 300 yard medley relay.

Bob Eason of Western won two events for the Purple and White when he splashed in first in the 440 yard free style race in 5:20.6 and the 200 yard free style in 2:04.9. A fellow team mate of Eason, Bob Eynon also was responsible for two Western wins as he swam home ahead of any of the Toronto lads in the 200 yard individual medley in 2:45.2 and the 200 yard backstroke in 2:45.7.

Jerry Pink captured the 100 yard free style while Bob Gledhill took the 50 yard free style. Varsity's Doug Taylor was edged out by Ron Billings in the 200 yard breast stroke.

In the diving competition, Bruce Sonley of Toronto was second. He was outdone by Western's Mac Walker who picked up 130 points for his excellent form and style.

The seven point 400 yard sprint relay was taken by Western in a total time of 3:59.6.

The University of Toronto rink skipped by Clair Peacock, Vic I on Saturday afternoon won the Intercollegiate Curling Championship in Guelph with a 14-7 victory over Waterloo College rink. The losers were skipped by H. Talbot.

Both rinks were undefeated in the three day bonspiel. The University of Toronto, Waterloo College, Ontario Agricultural College and McMaster University, each entered two rinks.

When the two squads met on Saturday afternoon in their three games played on Friday, Toronto emerged victorious in division "a" and Waterloo in division "b".

On Friday, Toronto defeated Waterloo 11-8, McMaster 14-4 and OAC 11-3 in a play while Waterloo in division "b" defeated Toronto 11-9, OAC 13-5 and McMaster 12-8.

OAC Top Four Pendleton Stars Archers Third

Toronto University was host to the first women's indoor intercollegiate archery meet. Although we might be first in entertainment, we somehow just could not repeat the trick in competition for the OAC archers took home the honors.

The Toronto Quartette was third and not far behind the victorious girls from Guelph. It was Queens that just nosed us out for the second place standing. Not just because we like to support our home team, but quite honestly, we are of the opinion that Toronto should have taken the cup, but somehow the girls were not shooting like they had been in previous practices.

Pat Humphries, Marjory Reid, Marilyn Charters and Ann Pendleton were the four girls who represented Toronto in competition against OAC, Queens, McGill, Western and McMaster. Congratulations are in order to Ann Pendleton, who besides doing a wonderful job as the University Archery curator, took second place in the individual competition with a total score of 484.

post mortem: an orange and lemons

Now that the hue and cry in Ontario's legislative chambers has died down, and that the regulars have taken over, we can venture a small post-mortem on the mock parliament.

It is a prime rule to put the constructive achievements of an organization first.

The mock parliament sat for three days this year. They passed one bill.

Now we come to the lemons.

In this year's parliament we were confronted with two extremes of political tactics: shrewd, calculating, clever and unscrupulous ones; and naive, sincere, and uninformed ones.

There is no doubt that the Conservatives have done the campus and their party a disservice. They initiated a spirit of rancour and distrust, that infested the whole parliament.

Both parties let down the democratic tradition. The one by using those very tactics which make the opponents of democracy so successful, and the other by an unrealistic approach to the problem. Democracy cannot afford to be naive. It is a great enough hazard to be idealistic.

And what of next year?

The most immediate damage this parliament has done is to discourage interest in future sessions. The apple was ripe for picking, but it was knocked to the ground in the scuffle.

The parliament was a good idea. Few will gainsay this. But there is a limit to how many times a man will back a good horse that never comes through.

So, as the signs say, "Awake, for the end is near."

FEDERATION SCHOLAR ENJOYS TORONTO PICKS UP "MOMENTS TO REMEMBER"

By MARJORIE CHEPESWICK

NFCUS calls me a "Federation Scholar." Here in Toronto for my Junior year, I am picking up "moments to remember."

Hanlan's Point on a sultry September night, Casa Loma with its guided tours, the unbelievable rush of water at Niagara Falls, six hundred Engineering freshmen, twenty thousand people at a football game, Bloor Street traffic, my first subway ride, four-lane traffic, packed churches, time-table juggling, getting lost on campus, "Ruth Shall Make Thee Free," the Annesley Informal, the Bob Revue, knee sox and white bucks. These are my memories!

Last year I attended Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia. During the month of January a poster caught my attention. NFCUS was offering a scholarship for Juniors to go to a university in another part of Canada. There they would take subjects complementary to their course, some, perhaps, unavailable at their own university, and would see and mingle with their fellow Canadians. This sounded good!

Perhaps I could win this scholarship. Both my sisters, graduates of Dal., had helped finance their course by this means. Why not me, too? Barrie had been my home until 1946, Moncton until 1954, then Halifax and school. Why not college in Toronto.

I arrived on September 17, confident of a year of work and play. You people are a part of this college—you make "Varsity" and you welcomed me.

Twenty-nine floors above the ground, looking over King Street from the Bank of Commerce, I watched the multitude of ant-like men and women scurrying along. I was primarily an observer over this dramatic, dynamic whole. I was an observer at Varsity for about one day. As each day passed I met more people, made more friends, did more things, took more lectures. I no longer "observe" Varsity, it is my home.

Charming Visitor

—VSP by Jim Feeley

NFCUS gave me and offers you a year like this. Because of the all-important contribution NFCUS made to my life, I am about the only person on this campus who doesn't criticize it.

Objective Profile

Marjorie Chepeswick and Henry Johns, from the University of British Columbia, are the only two scholarship students at the University of Toronto this year.

Miss Chepeswick has spent a profitable year at her adopted university, becoming secretary of the NFCUS Scholarship Campaign committee, working for The Varsity, and keeping up associations with the Alpha Gamma Delta fraternity.

Despite her many activities, Marjorie still keeps up her marks in the General Arts course. She says that people are amazed at her unusual choice of course: three History, two English, and Philosophy, from various years.

Marjorie does not have to take the courses prescribed here, since there are no restrictions on courses at Dalhousie.

She is returning to "Dal" next year, where she plans to specialize in History, with a bit of English and Philosophy mixed in.

After that, she hopes to teach for some time, and then marriage.

To come to Toronto is really coming home for Miss Chepeswick, since she was born here, 18 short years ago. She is of Ukrainian descent, and belongs to the Ukrainian students club here.

Those who are on flights and tours for the summer will find the Federation's Travel Service a real boon. Unlike other university Travel Services, the major aim is to provide students through the air flights, ship passages and understanding of minimum rates.

Apply Now To Leave On Inter-Regional School

Applications for inter-regional scholarships to other Canadian Universities may now be placed at the Registrar's office, Simcoe Hall. Deadline is February 15.

The scholarships are designed to give students of "better than average" academic ability a chance to spend a school year in some other part of Canada—with free tuition.

The scholarships are open to undergraduates entering their next-to-final year at any university, which is a member of the national student federation. In other words, first-year passants students and second-year honor students, engineers, etc., may apply.

Toronto students can exchange to universities in British Columbia, the Prairie Provinces, and the Atlantic Provinces. They may also go to any French-speaking universities in Ontario and Quebec which are members of the NFCUS.

Another article on this page gives the experience of Marjorie Chepeswick, exchange student this year from Dalhousie University.

Write A Short Story Win Money, And Fame

By LIZ BINKS

The NFCUS Short Story contest is calling for heavily the last time.

Open to all undergraduates of the U of T, the contest is restricted only by a maximum of 3,000 words for stories and a deadline of Feb. 15. Entries will be judged here by three English professors, if they have something to read, and the best two sent to the University of Saskatchewan, where they will be re-judged beside contributions from other Canadian universities.

First prize is publication in Liberty magazine, along with regular space rates. Second prize is a hearty fifty dollars donated by the Ryerson Press.

The prize-winning story last year was written by Jim Powell, a St. Michael's College student, and was published in Canadian Campus, the annual NFCUS magazine.

Here is an opportunity to write something other than essays and be rewarded with something other than a B.L.

The short story contest is one of three contests sponsored by the national federation. The others are the national photography contest and the art contest carried on at the University of Toronto last fall.

Toronto students have had a monopoly on prizes in the past few years, since Ann Lazier of St. Hilda's carried off the top honors in the art contest. She gets a $200 scholarship to the Banff School of Fine Arts.

Furthermore, Powell also won the short story contest in 1954.

No photography contest is being carried on this year, since the national conference felt it impractical. The University of Western Ontario has the mandate to investigate it, however, and it is hoped the contest will be in operation again next year.

If you have any spare articles, essays, short stories, poems, lying about that you have been afraid to submit for publication, then Canadian Campus, annual magazine of the national federation, is willing to purchase them if they are of sufficient quality.

The magazine, edited by the NFCUS national staff and an editorial board at Carleton College, will be distributed across Canada to all students who are members of the federation. Payment will also be made for photographs.

The only criterion for material is that it must be such that it will interest Canadian students. Payment upon publication ranges from five to fifty dollars, depending upon the type and calibre of the material.

The deadline is Jan. 31, although it is reported that it may be extended to attract a greater number of contributions.

All photographs and manuscripts will be returned to their owner whether or not they are used.

About This Page

This page is devoted to various projects designed to benefit students, particularly those who like travel or pursue literary ambitions.

The Varsity publishes this page to make students more aware of such comparatively little-known services as the national short story contest, the Travel Service and inter-regional exchange scholarships.

Although the projects are limited in appeal, it is hoped that many Toronto students will take advantage of them this year.

FILMS

A movie boom, for once. A snoot-cocking film at the University, THE TROUBLE WITH HARRY, marks Alfred Hitchcock's first excursion into pure (?) comedy, and it's a highly successful one. On a soberer plane, there's THE PRISONER (Odeon Hyland) and a re-issue of JULIUS CAESAR at the Towne. Etc.

Rebel's Dilemma

Hollywood has made another stab at the crazy-mixed-up-kid problem, and once again, the result is a poorly scratched surface, a superficial scrape.

Rebel Without a Cause (at Shea's) begins as a sincere enough attempt to present the dilemma of the sensitive, troubled teenager, growing up among adults who don't understand, or are too busy with their own little circus, to care. But because the original idea becomes sidetracked and muddled, involved in contrived situations and lost in an attempt to give us glib sentimental answers to a very deep and vital problem, the film goes the way of so many Hollywood efforts at tackling serious subjects.

This is really a pity, because there is a good core of honesty and believability in the story — the honour of the gang and the constant challenge of not being "chicken"; a kid that badly needs a father with whom he can identify himself; and a girl needing real love, these are all real enough, and this is the stuff that Rebel has chosen to work with. This does seem like meat for a solidly "Adult" film, yet somewhere along the line there seems to have been some crippling conflict as to which course the film would follow.

In fact, there is a point where the whole thing seems to deteriorate into a poor sort of fantasy. James Dean has fought out with his family the business of going or not going to the police. He is a new boy in town and the gang has to prove all newcomers with the acid test. Dean is a strong intelligent guy but he has to take up the gang-chief's challenge, and the result is the death of this chief in the night-marish contest. Dean wants to see the Police. His mother wants to leave the town. She is not facing herself, we are told, running from rather than facing her son's problems, which are indirectly her own.

The death of the gang leader sets in motion a series of events, some irrelevant, some relevant and some just silly. The cliches that are absent through the first half of the picture come in full blast in the later, moralizing parts. The music is all through as pretentious and contrived as some of the story. In some spots the pace is annoyingly deliberate and slow. There is one very fine spot — James Dean and his girl, Natalie Wood, are in a big deserted mansion together, playing "man and wife" yet still very much kids. "What'll we do with our children when they get cranky?" asks the girl. "Drown 'em like puppies," booms Dean. "... nobody ever talks with children, you know, you just tell them."

Two solid American institutions are, perhaps unintentionally, lampooned; the School and the Police. James Dean is very good all through, making the most of that slow understatement of his that everybody in the movie seems so anxious to copy. Natalie Wood is also good. And again it's a pity that such good stuff has gone to waste.

IN THE DARK

Prisoner's Polemics

An individual's morality doesn't stand a chance when opposed to collective ethics—and if the ethics have been firmly enough implanted, it doesn't matter how false they may be. This seems to be the sober lesson movingly presented in The Prisoner, the British film now showing at the Odeon Hyland and Christie, even though frantic backtracking in the last five minutes tends to obscure the issue.

The action takes place in an unnamed state somewhere Iron-Curtain-wards, as a "subversive" cardinal is relentlessly led to confess his "crimes against the state" by a bland probing inquisitor. These two figures, the public monument that must be defaced and the persuasive state-symbol who must show the need for its defacement, leave the actual setting far behind them, thrashing out in their own way the relationship between one man and the Gestalt of which he is a part.

Alec Guinness is magnificent. As the cardinal, self-styled as "wary, tenacious, and incredibly proud," a much loved leader and former hero of the Resistance, he dominates the action even in subjection. Few actors could display as he does the proud confidence that comes (paradoxically) from humility in the face of God, and the gradual growth to self-disgust through his relentless inquisitor's logic-chopping.

Some surprises are in store for those used to seeing Jack Hawkins's stubborn stubbly jaw gracing the captain's bridge in innumerable British sea-sagas. As the man who must insinuate himself into the captive's mind, seeking the psychological weakness that must be there, he sensitively and terrifyingly builds up the relationship. Smiling offers of coffee and cigarettes have supplanted the rack and thumb-screws of yore, yet we are aware of the victim's inward suffering as we never could be by a few screams and gory scenes.

Technically, the film is a gem, centering around the two protagonists and continually deepening our awareness of the hopelessness of their struggle. Constant closeups of set smiling faces, montages emphasizing the never-ending round of cell-to-courtyard-to-grinding-to-cell, views of the prisoner far below, praying tiny and alone on the dark floor of "solitary," all help to foreshadow the final outcome with an appalling air of doom. Students Double In '65 Profs, Buildings Needed

The number of students attending Ontario universities may double in the next ten years. And $106,000,000 worth of new buildings and 4,000 more university instructors will be required to accommodate the influx of the 20,000 additional student enrollment.

These prophecies were contained in an official brief of the Ontario government to the Gordon Royal Commission investigating Canada's future growth. The Ontario experts said that on the basis of present trends university student enrollment should climb to 40,000 in 1956 — only ten years away. This means a doubling of the present campus population in Ontario.

The experts also said that if these students were accommodated in new buildings, the construction costs would rise over $100,000,000 in the ten year period.

The brief said that the universities in Ontario would have great difficulty in getting 4,000 more trained and qualified university instructors. The majority of post-graduate students who normally take such positions are now going into private practice, commerce and industry, and government.

The brief stated that there was a possibility of creating new universities — one or two of them — in order to ease the pressure on existing institutions. With an additional 20,000 students present campuses would be hard put to accommodate them.

The projected increase in student population was due to two factors the brief explained. One was an ever-increasing percentage of the university age population attending university; the other was the vast increase in the birth rate since 1939 in Ontario.

Every student now attending university costs $1,200 a year to support, the brief said. This means that the average student pays less than 1/3 of the total cost of his university education in fees. The rest is made up through government grants and private donations.

The Gordon Commission was told that there was such a desperate need for university graduates that there was no realistic alternative to enlarging the Ontario universities to accommodate them. The University of Toronto — the official provincial university — would presumably get the lion's share of this increased enrollment, since other universities in Ontario and elsewhere have indicated that — in order to preserve the atmosphere of a small college — they will not increase their enrollment figures.

The report contained several obvious references to the educational views of President Sidney Smith of this university. The brief discussed the various possibilities that President Smith has offered to guard against what he considers the flooding of the universities with more students than they can handle. These include the establishment of junior colleges, technical schools, scholastic aptitude tests for applicants for admission, and the creation of new universities.

While stating that these possibilities may ease the pressure a little, there was no alternative to expanding the present universities.

The report spoke also of "substantial economies" to be made in university educational costs by a "rearrangement" of university terms. Educational Minister Dunlop, writing in The Varsity's 75th Anniversary issue, had discussed the possibilities of keeping the university open all summer.

Runneth-Over

Washington, D.C.: How much is a college education worth in cold cash? On the average, $91,000, two United States census bureau officials reported to the annual meeting of the American Sociological Society.

Paul G. Click and Herma P. Miller said:

Over a lifetime, the average graduate can expect $100,000 more income than the average high school graduate. Since the direct and indirect costs of the college education are roughly estimated at $9,000, it is concluded that a college education represents a sound investment from a purely monetary point of view."

Edmonton: Student Council at the University of Alberta has approved the undertaking of the responsibility of a $500,000 loan and formed a committee which will appoint a building director in an effort to put a new gymnasium on the campus.

The $500,000 would take the form of an interest-free loan from the provincial government. The loan would be repaid at the rate of $30,000 a year.

Hamilton: Because of a scare rampart in the Hamilton district at the moment, the Dean of Women at McMaster has enforced rules regarding girls who must walk across campus at night. If the girl does not have an escort she is requested to phone into the residence and ask that two of her friends come to meet her.

Hamilton: College—An institution which sometimes lowers entrance requirements with an end in view — not to mention promising tackles and backs.

Halifax: 40% of Freshmen flunked one or more exams at Dalhousie University. A total of 1,682 exams were failed. The Dalhousie Gazette warned the freshmen that "the worst is yet to come." No comment was made by officials of the University.

Morgantown, W.A.: A pop tax is responsible for the 10 million dollar Basic Sciences Building of the West Virginia University Medical Centre. Funds for the new building which will be completed in September of '56 were raised by a state tax on soft drinks.

Canadian Universities Lack Funds Premier, President Seek Solution

Premier Frost said last week that both governments and business will have to contribute heavily towards the cost of maintaining Canada's universities, and the expected heavy increase in their enrolment.

He said he agreed with the president, Dr. Sidney Smith, that governments would have to step in to help.

Mr. Frost also said some of the money would have to be raised by increasing university fees, even with greater contributions from other sources.

The Premier said his government was greatly concerned with the situation, particularly in the light of expected big increases in attendance as the present large school population moved through the schools and into universities.

Dr. Smith, in a special supplement of the University of Toronto Quarterly, wrote "The problems of Canadian universities of the future are serious, inescapable and imminent."

"Their solution will be no easy task," Dr. Smith said. "I am confident, however, that with the planning and co-operation on a national scale, we in Canada will achieve a distinctively Canadian solution to our problems of higher education, provided that Canadians value their universities sufficiently to give them increased support."

It is calculated, he said, that in 1964-5 there will be 110,600 to 135,200 students in Canadian universities, as compared with the present 65,000.

An Old Tale?

Edmonton: The University of Alberta is campaigning for the first mock parliament in three years. The Gateway, student newspaper, points out that the parliament has not succeeded yet. At the last mock parliament rowdy students refused to take what was happening seriously. The result was more "mock" and less "parliament".

Patriot Pastor From Holland Kraemer to Lecture at Knox

A former member of the Dutch resistance movement and a world-renowned religious figure will be in Toronto this week to deliver the Laidlaw Lectures at Knox College Chapel.

Dr. Hendrik Kraemer, formerly Professor of History of Religions in the University of Leyden and until last year, Director of the Ecumenical Institute in Geneva will present a series of five lectures this week.

All students and members of the public are invited to hear this prominent member of the Dutch Reformed Church speaking on topics of great interest to all interested in modern sociological problems.

Dr. Kraemer, who has also made a detailed study of Islam and religious life in Indonesia, will speak at 4 p.m. each day until Friday.

College Degree Helps Defence States Senator

Higher education was desperately needed as a defence measure, a newly-appointed member of the Senate said in his maiden speech in the upper house in Ottawa last week.

Senator Donald Cameron of Edmonton, a director of the University of Alberta, said Canada's institutions of learning are in a "serious condition of financial undernourishment and malnutrition." There was also an alarming shortage of teachers, doctors, engineers and persons trained in economics and business management, he said.

III U.C., for the ayes, will be the other speakers on the paper.

The secretary of the debates committee, Clyde Batten, III U.C., will be the Speaker.

Absorb Canadiens? HH Might Hope So

"Assimilation represents the only hope for French Canada" is the resolution at this Wednesday's Hart House debate.

Senator Jean-Francois Pouliot will be the Honorary Visitor. Senator Pouliot was the member of parliament for the Quebec riding of Temiscouata until his appointment to the Senate last summer. For a number of years while he was a member of parliament, Senator Pouliot was the chairman of the parliamentary debates committee.

Bob Saunders, III Vic, speaking for the resolution said, "Our views must not be confused with those of Lord Durham."
Laurier LaPierre, S.G.S., who will speak against the resolution said, "As a French-Canadian I don't think my hope lies in assimilation, I think my hope lies in a very definite and positive co-operation."

Skule Nite Players Join McGill Fiesta

Three acts from Skule Nite, 5TE, will represent Toronto at the McGill Winter Carnival Revue at McGill University, Montreal, on February 18 next.

This is the fourth year that Toronto has sent representatives to the carnival. Victoria College's Vic Bob Revue and the UC Follies represented Varsity the first two years. Last year Skule Nite carried Toronto's colors to Old McGill.

Seven universities will contribute to this year's "show of college shows." Two women's colleges from the US, Smith and Vassar, Western, Queen's, University of Montreal, MacDonald College; McGill and Varsity will contribute acts.

The Saturday afternoon of the revue will feature two shows. Saturday night will see the staging of a big dance, with Claude Thornhill's Orchestra.

All lectures and labs have been cancelled on the Friday afternoon at McGill. The testimony of last year's Varsity participants will bear out the claim that this is McGill's "biggest weekend of the year."

Students who went last year also went skiing in the Laurentians. These included some 15 who were not actually members of the act.

Jim Vasoff, a member of last year's act said yesterday, "We would like to form a similar group to go to Montreal for this year's carnival. Arrangements have been made for accommodation and for train tickets to be obtained through the SAC office."

Further information can be had by telephoning or visiting the engineering stores or the SAC office.

Varsity Sale Possible

(President Smith, contacted later) was reportedly indignant over P. E.'s offer to buy the University for The Varsity editors. "The least he could have done was to ask me about it first," he snifled. "I should get a cut in a deal like this — after all, I am President."

Brown and Miss Michener afterwards congratulated themselves over their refusal to sell the paper.

"We refused to sell out to the big money interests," said Brown. "We've got the students' interests at heart."

The editors claimed that P. E. would not have continued the paper's long tradition of fearless, favorless, factless reporting, and this is another reason why they objected to the sale of the paper.

"And it's not only that," said Brown. "We figure we can get $24 million if we hold out long enough."

ALL-Uoft SHOW IN '57?

Haven't Had One In Three Years; Director Needed

By MICHAEL PENGELEY

The All Varsity Review, an all University of Toronto student show which hasn't seen the light of day since 1953, may be brought out of moth balls next year. But they've been saying this each year for three years now.

It all depends on who they can get to produce and direct the extravaganza.

According to Jim Vasoff, one of the campus wheels who wants to see the AVR tradition revived, it's a mighty big "if."

However an advertisement calling for applications for the job of producing and directing AVR in 1956-57 will be published tomorrow.

The advertisement will appear in The Varsity.

The All Varsity Review petered out back in 1953 after a seven-year post-war tradition.

Why? Because, says Vasoff, the Students' Administrative Council, which has final say in whether or not the show is staged, felt the applicants for the job of producing and directing didn't have what it takes.

Cost of producing the show is something like $3,500.

"If they get AVR into existence again," Vasoff said yesterday, they'll pretty well have to start from scratch." Vasoff was Producer of this year's edition of Skule Night, the annual Engineering show.

Another big difficulty in producing AVR, Vasoff asserted, is to find a week when Hart House theatre is not in use.

Two years ago, when the SAC turned palms down to Norm Griesdorf and Leon Major — who wanted to do the AVR show — the week which would have been AVR's at Hart House theatre, was taken over when the pair produced the smash hit Brigadoon, a University College - St. Mike's joint production.

Then, last year, Vasoff said, the AVR idea didn't catch fire on two counts:

(1) Because Leon Major refused to accept the job of directing, preferring to AVR to work on this year's U.C. production of Kiss Me Kate.

(2) Because a "gentleman's agreement" was made (Vasoff said he had heard) between University College and AVR backers that AVR could take over the week at Hart House in 1956-57.

Vasoff said the big difficulty was that there are not at present enough facilities to either —

Protested Peron South American Students Jailed

Uruguay, Exchange: Student organizations in Paraguay are victims of dictatorial government repression, according to a report from the Federacion de Estudiantes Universitarios del Uruguay. This organization reports that legal assemblies of Paraguayan students have been broken up by violence and student leaders have been arrested and held without bail or trial.

It appears that the Federacion Universitaria del Paraguay, which includes in its membership the 3,000 students of the University of Asuncion, called a General Assembly of its affiliates to protest against the presence of Argentina's exiled dictator Juan Peron on Paraguayan soil.

"The protest against Peron was a part of persistent action taken to oppose all forms of dictatorial oppression, including demands for the abrogation of the law of intervention into university affairs, the release of political prisoners and the closing down of concentration camps, the return of more than 400,000 Paraguayans in exile, and the restoration in general of all democratic freedoms," continued the Uruguay report.

The Paraguayan government, it said, under the dictatorship of Gen. Stroessner, reacted to the student plea by forcibly dissolving the student assembly, and arresting the president of the student federation, the presidents of the Law and Philosophy associations, and ten other student leaders. These students are still in custody, unable to communicate with those outside jail and without bail or trial.

Snow Scarce In Laurentians

Skiing enthusiasts made a 1000 mile trek to St. Sauveur, Quebec, and back again last weekend. On their return they complained of little snow in the Laurentians but were happy with the weekend.

The students left Toronto Friday evening, and got back at six on Monday morning.

"It was a very good meeting,"

Deadline Today

Going To Europe--Girls?

A plea for applications to the World University Service Summer Seminar was made last night by Ron Wintrob, co-chairman of the Seminar Committee. Final deadline for applications is 5 o'clock today in the SAC office. More girls are wanted to apply especially, he said.

The seminar, to be held this year in Germany, will have students from Canada, Africa, Asia, the United States and Europe.

Three University of Toronto students will be chosen from either their next to last year, or final year if they are returning for post-graduate work on this campus.

When questioned by The Varsity concerning the seminar, Wintrob said, "Prime requisites are interest in the life and character of University students, and a willingness to contribute to the student life of the University of Toronto on return. High calibre students are obviously needed, but I feel that the impression has been given that only the big wheels on campus stand a chance of winning this scholarship."

Wintrob expressed the desire for more applications especially from girls, and said that the students must be of sufficient intelligence and calibre to represent the ideas of both Toronto and Canada to people who knew very little of the country. He also emphasized the low cost of the trip, which comes to about $250, for the three months between June 12 and September 13.

Applications will be judged by the chairman of WUS, the president of the University, staff advisors, the president and vice-president of the S.A.C. and the chairman of the WUS summer seminar. The choice of the three students will be announced by the end of February.

The seminar, which involves about ninety students, will begin with five weeks of regional study tours which will be broken into small groups. These tours will include visits to Russia and Yugoslavia. The seminar will begin the first week in August, and continue for three weeks at one of the German Universities. Two to three weeks at the end of the summer are left for the students to travel on their own before coming home.

NFCUS Asks Council Opinion Question Eligibility Of Debaters

For the first time in its history, the National Federation of Canadian University Students has called a referendum on a problem its executive could not decide. Non-NFCUS debaters can at present enter the National Debating Contest. Should they be eligible to win the grand prize in the National Finals, a debating tour to Europe?

The Executive Meeting of the National Federation, held in Ottawa after Christmas, could only decide that a decision must be reached. The $800 dollar trip to Europe is too valuable for the Executive, who act only as financial caretakers between National Conferences, to make a final decision.

Students' Councils across the country will discuss the problem this week and next. The SAC will vote on the problem at its next meeting, February 8. In a letter, Peter Martin, NFCUS national president, asked for "serious and just consideration," and an answer by February 18. Silence is regarded as a negative vote.

The first prize, a return passage to Europe for debating with European and British Universities, was instituted to promote a high level of debating across Canada and to permit Canada's best student debaters to represent Canada abroad.

We have "no clear National policy statement concerning relations with non-members," said Martin in his letter to Students' Council Presidents. Such policy should clearly be the will of all the members, and not just an Executive decision, he said.

Five student-councils have requested that only debaters from NFCUS member universities be eligible for the top prize. Strong representation was made to the Executive asking them to rule that prizes offered by NFCUS not be awarded in the case that the winning debaters were not members. This would mean that the best NFCUS debating team, possibly not the best Canadian team, would get the prize.

Ice Redmen Upset Leaders 1-0

The intramural hockey league continued along in its unpredictable manner as Sr. UC came through with a 1-0 win over St. Mike's A. squad last Monday. It was the Bay St. collegians first loss this season and for UC it was sweet revenge as they had lost to the Irish earlier this season by the same score.

UC's Charlie Logue came up with the only goal of the game as he scored on a long shot from twenty feet out that had goalie Andrews beat. In the last few minutes the Irish tried to tie it up, but the closest they came was a shot that left the puck right on the goal line as Lapoid sprawled to save, and ensure his shutout.

The game was rough and both goalies were called upon to make great saves. Andrews came up with a great save on Teark's point blank shot. At the other end of the rink, Lapoid came up with a good stop on Ron Doty. Other standouts in the game were North Dysart, Jeans, and Bob Nadin for the Redmen, Paul Finley, Bob McCormick, Gary Winsworth and Norm Frellette played well for the Irish.

In Group 2 action yesterday afternoon, Trinity A upset Jr. UC by a 4-1 count. The hockey Panthers took a 1-0 lead on Pete Saunderson's goal in the first frame, but Labanowich tied it up before the period ended. It was all Trinity in the last frame as Pete Saunderson sandwiched a goal between counters by dePencier and brother Max Saunderson to send Trinity home in front.

John Goodwin came up with a great game in the Red and Black nets while Bob Allan was a stand-out up front for the Redmen.

Hawaii Lauds Georgia

Hawaii: (Exchange) — The student newspaper of the University of Hawaii recently applauded the students riots in Georgia over the question of segregation in sports.

The Georgia riots began when it appeared as though the state governor and the Georgia University Board of Governors might act to prevent the Georgia football team from playing an important game because the opposing team had a negro player.

The KaLeo remarked: "There are supposedly two inviolable institutions in the South, segregation and football; and when they met head on recently, football won by a mile and that's what we call progress."

Continued the Hawaiian daily: "Georgia's shame has become a topic of national interest. To us there is something dignified and far reaching about that student mob and we respect every last one of those people in it."

Cage Blues Meet Yeshiva Prep For Queen's Friday

The University of Toronto basketball Blues, still looking for their first victory against American competition, takes on one of the better of the smaller college teams in the New York City area when they meet the Mites of Yeshiva University this evening at Hart House.

The Yeshiva team already holds a win over Fairleigh-Dickinson who defeated the Blues 66-61 earlier this season. The Mites are led by 6'4" Red Blumenreich who last season set the school's all time scoring record, hooping 513 points in 21 games last year. Another Yeshiva star and the team's captain, Abe Sodden scored 280 points last season. Other men on the high scoring squad include five letter men Barry Hochdorf, Irv Listowsky, and Herb Schlusser.

The Blues will have everyone in action in an attempt to break their four game losing streak.

Centre John Dacyshyn has finally reached the form that was expected of him earlier in the season. Dacyshyn netted 19 points in a losing cause Saturday evening when the Blues bowed to Assumption 71-58. Al Vaichulis who missed the two weekend games because of a sprained ankle will not be back in action this evening but is expected to see some action Friday night when the Blues play Queens University Gaels in a regular Intercollegiate League encounter. A win Friday would even up the Blues record in the loop at two wins and two defeats while a loss would plunge them into the cellar with Queens who have yet to win.

Montgomery Is Fencing Champ

Fencing activities over the last weekend included the intramural foil competitions at Hart House on Friday and an exhibition match for the Intercollegiate team against the Royal Military College in Kingston on Saturday.

In the former, George Montgomery, (IV SPS) won his third straight foil championship, winning five bouts and losing none. Second was John Andru, (III UC) with a four and one count.

At Kingston on Saturday, the U. of T. fencing team defeated the Royal Military College by a score of 18-14.

Varsity will be the site for the Intercollegiate Fencing Championships on Feb. 18, when Varsity meets her annual fencing rival, McGill.

Cage Gals Play Teachers In Game At Ryerson Gym

To-night's basketball games at the Ryerson gym promise to be two exciting tussles with the Sr. girls' basketball squad meeting the Hamilton Teachers' College; while in the first game, the Varsity Intermediates take on Humberdale Collegiate. Game time is 7.

Although the Intermediate team has officially been chosen, the coach of the Seniors, Mickey Barnett, has still not decided on the team that she will take to Queens at the end of February. The Seniors will be carrying at least one extra player for the game.

The Intermediate game will give June Hansford's team an excellent opportunity to see where their weaknesses lie. Although they are playing what many people might call as "only a high school" team, any students who have either played for Mrs. Charlesworth's Seniors or have played against them in High school games, will realize that they are playing more than just a "high school team".

Do not forget that game time is seven and the place is Ryerson gym—we expect everyone out to support our Intercollegiate b-ball squads—so be there!

Carabins Coming Friday

With only one win in six league starts the University of Montreal Carabins will invade Varsity Arena Friday night to tackle the league-leading University of Toronto ice Blues.

Carabins, who have steadily gone downhill after besting McGill 5-3 in their league opener last December, are currently in third place just two points ahead of the winless Redmen.

Blues have beaten the U of M twice in Verdun, 6-3, and 6-4, but this will be the Carabins' first visit to Toronto ice this season.

They bring with them the last of the old guard, so to speak, the players of a few years back who kept the U of M near the top of the league every season. Claude Dagenais, a good deal less potent without his former linemates Claude Hotte and Bernie Quessel, is still with the Montreal club. The famous "Punch Line", composed of these three racked up 87 points in league play two years ago, by far a CIAU record.

New blood arrives with the Carabins Friday in the person of Marcel Duhaime, presently in fourth place in the individual scoring race. Gerard Houle, burly all-star defenceman in his fourth year with the U of M, is tied with Duhaime for fourth spot.

Blues, without any injuries, will be in top shape to oppose the Carabins. Now safely back at the top, tied with Laval after last weekend's double win, they are again good bets to go all the way to the Queen's Cup. Carabins will hardly be able to get in the way.

Baby Blues Tackle OAC Volleyball Feature Added

In addition to the Varsity-Yeshiva game, tonight's action at Hart House will also see Toronto's basketball intermediates meeting O.A.C. Aggies and the Latvian Sports Club going against the Varsity All-Stars in a volley-ball attraction.

The Baby Blues split their two weekend games, downing Western 71-69 in overtime and dropping an 88-74 encounter to Assumption. Ed Rigby, who made his Varsity debut in the two games, counted 29 points against Western and 24 against the Purple and White to top the scoring in each affair.

Tonight, the intermediates, with a 2-1 record, trade baskets with an O.A.C. crew that has lost all three games played so far. After tonight, Toronto has four more league games to play.

This will be the first time that Hart House has been privileged to present volleyball as it is played in Europe with its highly competitive standards.

The Latvians are composed of new Canadians from Latvia. Several have played in national European championships.

The Varsity All-Star line-up is made up of new Canadians who have emigrated from Europe. A. Stitikutz and O. Strags from Forestry are two Latvians who were members last year of the Toronto Central Y Senior team, finalists for the Canadian Championships. B. Polrauniski and D. Golubov played for their team in Trieste.

The game will start at 8.00 p.m. and promises to be an entirely new look for Varsity students.

Don't forget Friday's big athletic night. Varsity will meet Queen's in senior and intermediate basketball games and the University boxing championships will be held. In another athletic night "first", a group from the Toronto Underwater Club will put on two frogmen exhibitions in the pool. A water polo match, Big Four football films, and dancing will round out the evening.

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN E. A. BROOKS

On Saturday last, the Canadian Rugby Union rules committee openly acknowledged the trend of Canadian football towards the American game with several rule changes inspired by football laws now existent in the United States. Delegates from the Western Interprovincial Football Union, the Big Four, the Intercollegiate, the Ontario and Quebec Football Unions met in Toronto along with two representatives of the CRU executive to discuss and approve the changes.

The most noticeable change to the casual observer will be that the touchdown will now count six points instead of five. This change was prompted by the late rise in prominence of the field goal specialists. The contention was that since field goals are becoming more and more noticeable in scoring summaries, it was just as simple for a team to score the equivalent of a converted touchdown in a much more simpler fashion. Accompanying this change was the pushing of the scrimmage line on convert attempts back to the ten yard line from the five. This particular change may affect Intercollegiate play more than the others, since three of the four colleges in the Eastern Intercollegiate League do not have extensive scouting systems in the States and first-rate placement kickers enrolling of their own accord are not easy to find. With the magic toe of Peter Malk returning to the Varsity line-up next fall, the Blues won't have any particular worries along that line.

Another major revision in the rules is the elimination of double penalties, now leaving the non-offending team the choice of yardage or downs in claiming the penalty. On illegal interference penalties, the offending team will now have only a loss of 10 yards, as opposed to the previous loss of 10 yards plus a loss of down. In the case of an offensive team being offside, the penalty will no longer be a loss of down but a straight five yard penalty.

Although the Western Interprovincial Football Union favored the adoption of a rule to permit all backfielders to have the same blocking rights as linemen, that is 10 yards from the line of scrimmage, the change made provides for only two "privileged" backfielders to block the 10 yard distance, and these two men must be outside the end man on the line when the ball is snapped.

On third down pass plays into the end zone, the custom has been for the defending team to scrimmage the ball on its own 25 yard line if the pass was incomplete. This rule was changed to permit the defending team to take possession of the ball at the last point of scrimmage. And on intercepted passes in the end zone, the ball will be put into play by the defending team no closer to its goal line than the 25 yard line. With these new rules in mind, it is not difficult to see that defending teams will be much more anxious to intercept passes in their end zone than merely to knock them down.

Although punts hitting goalposts and bouncing back into the field of play are a rarity, a change was approved to permit the cancellation of the no-yards rule in such cases. Could be that we'll see many a kick aimed directly at the goalposts with this very idea in mind.

Another change will serve to eliminate increasingly frequent and colorful short kick-offs. A kick-off must now travel at least 10 yards from the point of contact, which will remain at the 45 yard line. A minor change allows the various leagues to use their own method of timing the last minute in each quarter.

Especially in connection with the increase in value of the touchdown and the additional blocking privileges, the influence of American coaches and players in the Canadian game is to be noted. As far as we are concerned, the changes made are all in the interests of improving game, but the CRU must be careful in its consideration of adding additional similarities to American football. One case in particular stands out in our minds and that is the right of United States football teams to call a time out whenever their hearts desire. Not only does this increase the length of the game, but it also serves to take the attention of the spectators off the playing field and on to extra-curricular activities. Now certain of these activities are quite permissible, but others, as this past Intercollegiate season has shown, are frowned upon quite seriously. It is to be hoped that if such a proposal ever arises, the Intercollegiate representatives will fight it tooth and nail, holding in mind the interest and safety of the student spectators.

Just jots . . . Another great Athletic Night coming up on Friday . . . Basketball, boxing, frogmen, water polo, et al . . . And don't forget the hockey game . . . The fiery Frenchmen from the U of M are always ready to stir up trouble . . . Speaking of Frenchmen, the McGill Daily quotes Harry Griffith as saying that Dalt White is the logical choice to succeed Bob Masterson . . . Hats off to Clair Peacock and his rink who brought the trophyless Intercollegiate Curling Championship to Toronto on Saturday . . . Nine football Blues were selected in the national college draft on the weekend . . . Phil Muntz was No. 1 choice of the Calgary Stampede, Don Cheeseman was first pick of the Tiger-Cats from the Ambitious City, the Argos grabbed off Fred Smale as their favorite, and the Winnipeg Blue Bombers named John Bodrug as their No. 1 man . . . Others listed were Don Smith, Don Johnson, Dick Risk, Wally Bulchak, Dave Cresswell, Ted Lansky, Jim Rowney and Bobby Waugh.

Brownlie Stars In 26-24 Trinity Win

on the sideline

By FLO MIDDLETON

Away back in the week of November the 28th, we were advocating that everyone hurry down to the Midtown Bowling Alleys and enter in the interfaculty bowling championships. From the top scores, several girls were to be chosen who would represent the University of Toronto in the National Intercollegiate Bowling Tournament. That was away back in November.

Now, it is the first of February. It has taken exactly two months for the host University to compile the scores and announce the winners. The compiling of the scores involves the most elementary mathematics, so elementary that even I could master it (that is mighty elementary). We cannot help but come to the conclusion that it is hardly worth Toronto's energies to enter a team in this competition when there is such inefficiency and slowness about announcing standings. There is really no point in entering a competition in which you discover the results only after several months and only then because you have bombarded the host university with telegrams.

When the final statistics were announced, it turned out that the University of Saskatchewan topped the other eleven universities entered. Toronto bowled herself into fourth place, while Queen's and the University of British Columbia placed second and third respectively with 28.04 and 26.98. Other Ontario institutions of higher learning that entered teams were, Western, McMaster and Assumption, but they were all away down the ladder.

In major league basketball action on Monday, Trinity A edged St. Mike's 26-24. John Brownlie was top man for Trinity with 13, while Kriack and Aureardon had eight and six respectively for the double blue.

St. Mike's C rolled over SPS VII to the tune of 6-0 in hockey play. McGuigan potted a pair to lead the attack. Singles went to Vojtech, Wheller, Eustace and Tai.

Moving on to Tuesday's action, Law defeated Pre-Meds by a 49-40 score. Corcoran potted the winners with 21, while Kellock threw in 14. Medline was high for the losers with 9. In other major league play, St. Mike's A plastered St. U.C. to the tune of 35-22. Gaudet and a pair to lead Robinson had 11 pieces for the Double Blue, while Scott and Banks potted six each for the losing Redmen.

Minor league action saw Vie River Rats lose an 18-17 close to UC Beta Sigs. Berger netted four as Beta III downed Architecture 6-3. Water polo Mandel scored for the losers.

Martyred For A Book

The Editor:The Varsity:

After waiting one hour for three books, I began to wonder if the U of T library had enough staff. But there seems to be a librarian there for every book. All sorts of librarians were studying cards, putting them into places, and taking them out, or just studying A bell rang and a light went on, but nobody moved.

One woman was checking books that weren't coming from the stacks. One woman was just sitting, so she rang a buzzer. Nobody moved. Two people were laughing at a filing card. And one man was reading two pages of rules on how to take stock, but you can't lose books, if you don't give them out. In the back, one very industrious librarian was typing. I guess she was writing another book that they wouldn't let me read. Not that I wanted to, but . . .

Eventually, one woman stepped out of an elevator with a yellow slip—for me! I didn't mind when she called me "Mash" because I'm a poor writer, and I could understand when she told me that the book was out for two weeks even though my essay is due Wednesday. I didn't even mind when she called me "Second Arts", and told me that a graduate had another book out for six months.

But, you know, if you only read a page a day, it just takes four months and nine days to read 148 pages. But when the brazen huzzie called me "Royal Historical Transaction", and told me that the book was simply "not there"—well, after all!

Idiot

The Editor, The Varsity:

Until recently, Mr. Taube and I have been the best of friends. But friendship dare not presume too far.

Letters like his reveal the depth of the abyss of ignorance into which sophomores can sink. His effrontery in voicing such worthless opinions is exceeded only by the bigotry which inspires them. His letter is also a reflection on the university itself which permits such idiots to pass, or for that matter to enter university in the first place.

I will derive great satisfaction from seeing how quickly the university administration acts to rectify the glaring blunder it made when it first accepted this imbecile's fees.

the devaluated B.A.

We'd like to know what's wrong with the graduate of 1956.

With the promised fleece hugged to his chest he approaches a prospective employer who says: "A B.A.? — So what? Do you know anything about electric circuits?"

We are assured that there are lots of jobs available for U of T graduates this year. And this is true, more or less.

There are eleven jobs to every single graduating engineer, and six or seven for every Commerce man, and all kinds of opportunities for the qualified doctor.

But what about the fellow with the simple B.A. He didn't go to university for specific training, but to increase his general knowledge, to develop his whole person.

In the good old days, that people now in good positions tell about, a B.A. led to automatic employment. It was assumed that a university grad was a promising sort of fellow.

But this same B.A. opens fewer and fewer doors these days. The reason is not so much that the standard of the B.A. has lowered, although this is possibly true, as that there are just too many graduates around these days.

It has reached the point where a man who makes his way with a B.A. is just as much the self-made man as was formerly the high school graduate who got to the top of the tree.

The same devaluation is apparent further up in the scale. A university professor used to get by with a good M.A. But now a Ph.D. is a basic requisite, and the best places go to the people who have gained further prestige from writing.

There are two obvious sources for the devaluation. One is the increasingly popular idea that a B.A. is a democratic right. And the other following from that is the university admission requirements.

The pressure and the devaluation can only increase with the coming increase in population. It is up to the universities to protect the B.A.

a woman's eye view

There are some days when a woman can't think. If she could she would probably write a real, man-type editorial.

But ever since the days of the apple this insidious thing has crept up on the female gender once a month. After a few weeks of efficiency and fairly level-headed action, she wakes up and finds herself in a completely different, illogical world.

Her whole body is numb. The mind ruminates inwardly on the blunt throb in our belly, the painful privilege of being a woman.

With wonderment she sees all the men circulate in their accustomed fashion, no more and no less inspired than usual. Their actions appear sharp and piercing, their thoughts on practical things strangely inconsequential.

And when a man finds the woman incapable of concentration what does he do to help her?

He walks over, thumps the fair lady on the back, looking at the purple glow on her eyelids, and gallantly says: "What's with ya to-day. Ya got a hang-over?"

It is not fair that a woman should ache so.

The Creative Minority

What's Your Response

The following are the non-professional opinions of a university undergraduate on the recent hysteria about sex deviates and sex deviation.

By ANNE FRANKS

There have always been sex deviates. Periodically a news starved paper headlines the action of a sex deviate. The story is picked up by the radio, is commented on in editorials and is referred to in letters. The public expects a crime wave. The radio and papers report more stories. The wave is created. Mothers hurry their children in quickly from play before it gets dark for a few weeks. Prime Minister Eden visits President Eisenhower. The wave is forgotten and so disappears.

Nobody can have failed to read at least some of the stories, letters and editorials on sex deviates appearing in the last few weeks in our daily papers.

And nobody can have avoided also making some response to these reports.

What is interesting among these responses is not the panic of frightened mothers nor the appeal for a sane and sensible approach from doctors. These people have always said these things. What they say will not bring about a reconsideration of the situation.

The interesting response is that or the people whose thoughts on the situation will bring about a reconsideration—people young enough to be pliable and educated enough to think constructively, university students, what is called the creative minority.

These are the people who know that a society sets up an artificial norm for acceptable behaviour. They know that the norm is outlined by the laws of the society. They know that the term deviate applies to one who does not conform to the laws.

They also know that there is no absolute norm. They know that if the objective attitudes of the social sciences were strictly applied any behaviour would be the norm. They know that those who do not deviate from the legal norm do all deviate from some other norm—popular, religious, psychological or just from the norm that their friends or mothers hold dear.

Neither the artificial norm nor the laws of a society are rigid things. Standards may change and laws may be changed to fit them. The change may be either forward or backward.

It is the creative minority, pondering and reconsidering any standard or law, that brings about the change.

Which way do the thoughts of the creative minority point to-day?

Another Viewpoint

If another young girl is attacked by a sex deviate, we hope Mr. Frank Tumpance and his colleagues of the Fourth Estate will be righteous.

In the days of "Rum Row" and open Sundays, the flood of outraged virtue of recent weeks has been downright refreshing.

The only danger is that outspoken defense of innocence will cover up other important points.

The question is: Does the introduction of sex into a crime deprive a citizen of what would otherwise be his normal rights.

Every accused person is guaranteed—by Magna Charta—a fair trial by an unbiased jury.

The treatment of sex deviation cases in past years has been far from the objective standard of which modern journalism boasts. One might even find a trace of hysteria.

Unless he were deaf, blind and dumb, it is difficult to understand how a juror could be unbiased.

Harry Had Troubles

The Trouble With Harry is that he's dead, but he won't lie down. Alfred Hitchcock's first excursion into comedy (now at the University) has this off-beat theme, and the director takes the greatest delight in describing the adventures of a fearful foursome beetling about with a body. This delight should be shared by most of the audience, though a refusal to treat love, marriage and death as the least bit sacred seems to have provoked a little sanctimonious tut-tutting.

Any criticism of the film's characters or characterizations would be woefully inapplicable, as Hitchcock is to some extent following the tradition of Beat The Devil and Tight Spot, guying one of the more wearisome standbys of the B picture. Agatha Christie's Miss Marple would love this particular situation — the Bluff Retired Sea-Captain, the Searing Spinster, the Sweet Young Thing, and the Intense Young Artist, all possibly responsible for The Body In The Hollow. But here everything works out in the most unorthodox way.

Nobody really cares about poor Harry's corpse, except as a source of minor inconvenience. But owing to these possible "inconveniences", and as each one successively admits the murder, Harry is dug up and reburied as often as the Irish Question, and with just about as much real result.

The film's funniest effects lie in a masterly use of delayed-action humor, springing from an "accumulating situation" and some wonderful dead-pan delivery. To take a fair sample of dialogue — "That body in the hollow . . ." "Oh, you mean Harry!" "You know him?" "Yes, he's my husband. Is your lemonade sweet enough?" And so on.

Considerable contributions are made by the four principal people involved, especially character actor Edmund Gwenn as a retired tugboat captain with the calm imperviousness of a battleship, and Shirley MacLaine as

Conservatory Crowning

A Red Priest's Gloria and Mason's mass brought the Inquisition to Hart House on Sunday night. A baroque bishop or rococo rector would have enjoyed the occasion. The clergy, in force that night, could only bestow a blessing upon the performers and a Nihil Obstat on the night's proceedings.

The Opera School Chorus of the Royal Conservatory of Music was conducted by Nicholas Goldschmidt and performed the Gloria by Vivaldi and the Coronation Mass, K.317, by Mozart.

Traditionally the Gloria is the second of five portions of the Catholic mass. The dimensions that Vivaldi called the Red Priest" because of the colour of his hair — has given the work suggest that it was written for independent performance, whereas the Mozart was for use in the mass of a coronation. The Gloria, however, is much more in keeping with the universal spirit of the Church's liturgy. The music is certainly Ecclesiastical in its polyphony. Mozart was not in touch with the Gregorian tradition — his music is the subjective conception of a secular composer and like his Catholicism superficial in its appreciation of spiritual realities. The profanity of the Dona Nobis Pacem unmasks the work as little more than a sanctified concert piece.

The Chorus attacked the works with tremendous zest. The ladies were a delight to behold and hear. They seemed to enjoy their task, and produced sounds that would have been even richer had the males been stronger. Though we miss trumpets and drums, Dr. George Brough was able to provide an efficient accompaniment on the organ and produce some satisfying nuances.

The secret of the Chorus must be thorough rehearsal. They respond to every gesture of their conductor. It is rare that secular groups inject the right feeling into the right words at the right time when singing Church Latin, yet this was done with fine understanding. Outstanding in the Gloria was the surging invocation of the Miserere and Quoniam tu solus.

The Mozart was performed with the qualities that go into its making. There was the drama of Et in unum dominum and Ascendit in coelis, the excitement of the Resurrexit, the triumph of the Sanctus. If the spiritual element was lacking, the want was in the music. If the Benedictus or Agnus Dei seemed reverent it should be remembered that the stabs and shadowing, the taut and flowing are all techniques calculated to produce maximum emotional impact at any given time, and, if desirable, stir the soul. Mr. Goldschmidt's rapid flights from sforzando to pianissimo tended to leave a sound gap that accentuated their eccentricity. Otherwise this was Mozart that sounded like Mozart, so we should not complain.

Of the soloists, Alan Crofoot (tenor) and Clarence Flieger (baritone) were extremely competent. Joan Maxwell, a rich contralto, and Anne Stephenson distinguished themselves in the Laudamus of the Vivaldi. Angelina Antonelli is a deliciously clear soprano; Fluriane Cotnoir has been endowed with a most beautiful and mercurial voice used to great advantage in Mozart's moving Agnus Dei.

Altogether the evening was most rewarding and augurs well for the forthcoming Opera Festival at the Royal Alexandra. Chris Wilson.

Upstairs Come Downstairs

Last night, when the Hart House Art Club met for its weekly sketching session, its genial leader and coach, Mr. Carl Schaeffer, was very much in evidence. Not only was he represented in the art gallery's present exhibition by a painting of his own, but his big, sorrowful eyes dominated the room from the well-known Hart House painting, "Young Canadian". Also present were a very representative bunch of very Canadian paintings from the House's own private collection, retrieved from their diverse walls about the old edifice to form an exhibition more pleasant than novel. Here are such Hart House indispensables as Lawren Harris pyramidal Isolation Peak and Tom Thompson's impressionistic The Pointers.

The great Canadian out-of-doors is the favourite subject among this group of painters, and it gets a wide variety of treatments. To Henri Matisson, in The Artist, it is flashing with light and swirling with skaters. To Cassons, in his Golden October it is massive, gleaming, and motionless. To Emily Carr it is mud coloured, and fraught with totem poles. David Milne sees it through a wet, luminous haze, and L. A. C. Panton, by making it into almost non-objective patterns of colour, gives it perhaps the kindest treatment of all.

There is nothing very odd, or very surprising about this now. It is a comfortable, practical bunch of pictures; old, respectable friends from a thousand Canadian mantel-pieces and classroom walls.

But the generations of Hart House dwellers who have grown old with the pictures appreciate them without them. Hart House just wouldn't be home.

Another Unsung Campus Artist

What's your taste in art? Are you an objective dragon-chaser, or do you prefer Picasso's peace doves?

If you belong to the first school you owe yourself a trip to Irene Nosyk's hideaway on the third floor of the Zoology building.

A fine arts graduate from the University of Innsbruck, Austria, Irene has stuck to purely realistic painting since she came to Canada seven years ago. Her canvases are mainly original creations — studies of biological specimens done from life or through the microscope, for the U of T department of biology.

Her small studio is surrounded by labs, storage rooms, animal cages and numerous aquariums. During the past five years Irene has painted over 200 biological wall charts, all 6' by 10' or larger. Some of her creations, looking like Chinese dragons, were reproductions of old, badly damaged charts.

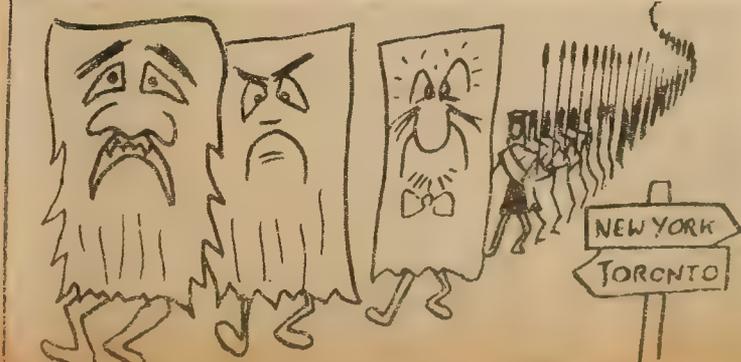

Irene has developed highly specialized skills in the graphic arts as applied to biology. She has done work for Queen's University in Kingston and has had charts published with the Society of Ontario Naturalists and in several U.S. scientific works.

A Canadian of Ukrainian origin, Irene does Ukrainian embroidery, ceramics and traditional painting of Easter eggs. When she came to Toronto Irene enrolled in the Ontario College of Arts where she is continuing her study of portrait painting. Landscape and still life round out her eclectic practice of the graphic arts.

cultural backwash

We hope that the mass exodus of the cast of TAMURLAINE THE GREAT from Broadway's Winter Garden WON'T have to take place, and that some good angel with a blank cheque WILL show up before this Saturday — it's happened before to the Stratford Shakespearean Festival.

But one question we would like to ask before the axe falls or the cash shows up — why this desire to save face in advance? Already officials plead that initial costs have precluded a wait for the box-office boom that "must" come, or imply that the play is that much caviare to the general. Both reasons seem little more than excuses.

The publicity people have involved Canada's prestige in TAM-BURLAINE'S reception (in spite of play-sustaining Quayle, designer Hurrey, and director Guthrie), and now find themselves caught in the backwash of the ship they themselves had launched. The situation could only occur in a country where "culture" is regarded as an end in itself, instead of an impersonal marker of intellectual maturity.

THE GROUND NUT

In the past few weeks I placed six ads in the classified section of The Varsity. I needed (and I still need) up to six poor students, six poor energetic students, six poor energetic determined students — male or female. Apparently there are none here. Surely thirty years of one-party government has not made the student self-sufficient.

I come upon a little item. Every home needs one. It is cheap. It may be peanuts to some, (not really), but remember, peanuts are a cash crop. It is money for you, money for me, this year, next year, between examinations, between jobs, spare time, part time, passtime, anytime.

I'm really serious. Telephone me. Come and see me.

State Farm Popular Says Soviet Bulletin

This is part of an account, in a Soviet News Bulletin, of a collective state farm, in Siberia Territory.

"The settlers of the Kom-somolsky State Farm work well and pass their free time in a cultured way.

"... The spacious and bright club auditorium is often filled to capacity. Today, too, the spectators greet the amateur performers with enthusiastic applause. Particularly popular with the audience is the singer of folk songs—the truck driver Mikhail Sokolov.

"Soviet and foreign films are often shown at the club. Lectures and reports are delivered here on various subjects—world affairs, friendship, love and comradeship, on the works of the novelist Mikhail Sholokhov, on atomic energy, etc.

"The library of the state farm enjoys great popularity among the workers and specialists of the farm. It has over 400 subscribers and a stock of 5,500 books.

"The settlers are keen on sports. The pride of the state farm workers is their soccer team. The men's and women's volleyball teams of the state farm are also quite good. A hockey team has been formed on the farm recently.

"The young workers of the State Farm are leading an interesting and busy life."

Algonquin History Told; Explorers Wet And Cold

By BERNIE SINGER

It was midnight, dark and cold when five exploring woodsmen of the Hart House Exploration Society arrived in Algonquin Park last weekend. The snow was deep as the snow tires on the car ploughed a foot-deep rut through the forest to a suitable spot to set up camp. In the moonlit still of the forest beside a river flowing too fast to freeze, the five outdoorsmen pitched camp.

All the daylight hours of Saturday were spent tramping through dense bush, up and down steep hills, and across frozen lakes and streams. At two instances Geoff Menness and I went through the ice but fortunately both got only one leg wet and managed to pull away in time before falling in. A brief stop at noon was made on the edge of a frozen lake to cook lunch. A fire was kindled right on the thick ice where the cooking was done.

The Exploration Society often organizes expeditions into the Canadian wilds. This trip was made as the club president Bill Angus stated, "to test how our bodies take severe winter conditions and to accustom ourselves to survival in the bush in winter." Colour slides taken on the excursion will be shown at the next meeting of the Exploration Society.

All members of the expedition agreed that the trip was informative and successful on furthering their knowledge of the Canadian northland and how to survive in it. Fortunately one member brought a bottle of medical liquid that kept the party warm during the more severe moments of cold. Comments from the members of the expedition ranged from, "It was a bit of all right, old boy," to "Man, for keeping cool it's the greatest."

BLOOD DRIVERS WANT 1600 PINTS

What's A Pint Of Blood Juice?

Last Year Was 1400 Pints Competition Begins Feb. 13 Some Donors Gave Already

Four pretty Nurses-to-be, now U of T students in the Faculty of Nursing, stretch out to donate blood to Ontario blood banks during last year's Red Cross drive. Blood campaign is coming up soon. —VSP by Ed Hoshkiw Bloodshed will soon start again on the campus, as students are asked to donate corpuscles to this year's Red Cross Blood campaign. This year's quota is 1,600 pints.

Josephine Flaherty (St. Mike's), Chairman of the University Campaign Committee, outlined plans for the coming campaign. "We hope to improve on our record of last year, when we gave 1,400 pints of blood from the university," she said. "The university contributes one-tenth of the total amount of blood distributed by the Red Cross in the Metropolitan Toronto area."

Four coeds from the U. of T. School of Nursing had the honour of giving the first pints, when they went down to the Red Cross Clinic yesterday, said Miss Flaherty. "This seems to indicate that the trend started last year, when more blood per capita was given by the women of the university than the men, will continue this year."

The campaign will get under way officially Monday, February 13, but appointment cards are being made out this week. Cards are available from class representatives. Students can give blood at the School of Nursing or the Red Cross Clinic on College St.

Sandy Macpherson (IV Meds), chairman of the Student Service Commission, emphasized the painless nature of the operation. "The normal human adult has approximately 12 to 13 pints of blood in his body, but only 380 ccs. or less than a pint will be taken. This is a painless, harmless procedure," he said.

St. Michael's College last year passed their quota of donations and carried off the Corpuscle Cup. The cup this year will be awarded on a competitive basis, rather than the system of quotas which was used last year, eliminating the possibility of faculties setting low quotas, which can easily be reached.

Peeping Tom Scares Dorm Girls Warned

London (CUP) — Authorities and girls of Spencer Hall, a Western University dormitory in London, were frightened by a peeping Tom prowling on the campus last week.

"Spencer authorities have issued a stiff warning to the girls to guard against being caught alone after dark." This statement was part of Western Gazette's account of a figure who had been seen slinking under a residence window. The shades had not been pulled, and the five occupants of the room were unaware of the stranger's presence.

When notified of the prowler, two of the girls remained in the room to decoy him until the police arrived. The stranger disappeared, however, and a chase ensued.

A suspect was pursued through the campus, but finally identified himself, when caught, as a student from Huron College returning from the weekend.

The following afternoon, some curious Spencer Hall girls examined the tracks that led around the building. They discovered that the screen on the window in question had been pulled out several inches at the bottom.

Quebec Nationalism In Danger Senator Visitor At HH Debate

A dynamic French-Canadian politician will take the floor tonight to give Quebec's views on its proposed assimilation into the rest of the country.

Senator Jean-Francois Pouliot will be the Honorary Visitor tonight when campus debaters ask whether assimilation represents the only hope for French-Canada.

First member of the upper house to take part in a Hart House Debate in its thirty-five year history, Senator Pouliot was recently elevated to that position after many years as Liberal member of the House of Commons. "Senator Pouliot is known for his frank, outspoken defence of his own views even when they contradict party policies and his speech tonight should be a forceful presentation of the French-Canadian question," said C. Batten (III UC) secretary of the Debates committee, and Speaker for tonight's debate.

"We have persuaded the Board of Stewards to declare this a special occasion so women may attend," he added. "Of course they will be kept behind the traditional red plush rope."

This will be the sixth debate Hart House has held this year. So far one cabinet minister and an American diplomat as well as two professors and a labor leader have been Honorary visitors.

"The debate will give students who are going to the McGill Winter Carnival or on the Carabin exchange this weekend lots of material for discussion," said John Becker, Hart House Undergraduate Secretary.

"Four campus debaters will speak on the paper and members of the house are invited to speak extemporaneously from the floor in either language," Batten said. "The student speakers will be Bob Saunders (III Vic) and Moïshe Reiter (III UC) for the Ayes and Arthur H. Low (III UC) and Laurier La Pierre (SGS) for the noes.

Publishers Present Prizes Literary Issue On The Way

Five publishing houses have offered prizes for The Varsity's Literary Issue.

Russia, Quebec Are Democratic

Montreal (CUP) — The only place in the world as democratic as the USSR is the province of Quebec, claimed the Soviet delegate to the Model Security Council at McGill University. The Model Security Council is McGill's United Nations Club's feature event.

The exportation of rice, butter, Grace Kelly, and armaments were discussed by Council members. "Is it Rainer in the U.S. or Monaco?" was one question of privilege put.

"It turned out to be more of a farce than it was intended to be," one session observer commented. "This did not detract from giving one a bird's eye view of how the real Council functions. I believe one learned a great deal about international affairs," she added.

DEAN BISSELL LEAVES: TO BE CARLETON PREXY

Keith Spicer (IV UC) rises to address last night's Hart House Debate — in French. In the bilingual debate, French-Canadian Nationalism was upheld 52-29, as the House voted that French Canada should

NOT be assimilated by the rest of Canada. Honorary visitor was Senator Jean-Francois Pouliot, of the Canadian Senate. He spoke English. —VSP by Joe McKenzie (McMaster)

Vice-President Ends Long Toronto Career

By JOYCE McMENEMY

The man who President Sidney Smith described as his "right arm," Dr. Claude T. Bissell, has been appointed president of Carleton College, Ottawa. Dr. Bissell is at present the First Vice President of Toronto University, which post he has held for the past nine years.

Dr. Bissell will take up his position on July 1, 1956, succeeding Dr. M. M. MacOdrum who died last year. Dean Bissell will finish this year here at Toronto.

Not only is he Vice President of Toronto University, Dr. Bissell is also Dean of the Men's Residence at University College and also a U.C. English instructor.

Dr. Bissell says that he is sorry to be leaving Toronto University. "The enticement of going to a college on the eve of big developments," was the reason which Dr. Bissell gave for going to Carleton. Dr. Bissell, as the new President of Carleton College, will be leading the expansion which is just beginning of this small Liberal Arts College.

Dr. Sidney Smith, when learning of Dr. Bissell's leaving, said, "Carleton's great gain is Toronto's deep loss." The president went on to say that Carleton is extremely fortunate in getting "a man, not only great as a scholar, but understanding and sympathetic towards students."

Dean Bissell graduated from University College in English and History, receiving scholarships throughout his four years. He then obtained his M.A. from the graduate school of the University.

Cornell University next claimed Dr. Bissell where he received his Ph.D. in 1940.

After one year of teaching English at Cornell, he returned to University College, where he has taught English since 1946. The following year, Dr. Bissell joined

French Canada Stays French, Bilingual Debate Decides Here

After a bilingual debate the members of Hart House last night rejected, 52-29, the motion that "Assimilation represents the only hope for French Canada."

Senator Jean-Francois Pouliot, the Honorary Visitor, sided with the noes and said, "The main thing for young men, older men, and old men is to have enough tolerance to respect the other fellow's viewpoint."

"Assimilation is complete integration. We were told that assimilation would bring higher culture. What is the basis of culture? It is tradition. Tradition is not just history; tradition means the enlightenment of the future by understanding the past," said Senator Pouliot.

"We are here to live together and Quebec doesn't impose her views on anyone," Senator Pouliot said. "There is no grumbling in Quebec at the way in which minorities are treated. Quebec has freedom of religion guaranteed by statute. It was guaranteed years ago in Ontario, but is guaranteed no longer."

Bob Saunders, III Vic., speaking for the motion said, "We do not offer a melting pot, we offer a unification built on co-operation and understanding. We do not offer immersion. French Canada is not the problem it is made out to be. There is a divisive force which is present only in a few people who exploit this force for their own benefit."

"All we ask is the ending of suspicion in Canada, this distrust, this harping which has caused a Gulf. If Lord Durham said assimilation was immersion, Lord Durham was an ass," said Saunders. Arthur Low, III U.C., said for the noes, "French Canadian nationalism is just as strong today as it ever was. Assimilation in the long run must eventually mean that French Canada will become immersed in the culture of a national Canada.

"Politicians in Quebec and outside of Quebec have provincialized Quebec so much that it is like a foreign nation without diplomatic ties," said Moïse Reiter, III U.C., the second speaker for the ayes. "Premier Duplessis is a shrewd politician who has de-

RCI Lecture Features Ley Interplanetary Travel Expert

A German pioneer of rocket research and the theory of interplanetary travel lectures Saturday night before the Royal Canadian Institute in Convocation Hall.

Willie Ley, popular author and writer on interplanetary travel has taken "The Conquest of Nearby Space" as his lecture topic.

During his lecture, Mr. Ley will give a sketch of the work of Dr. Edmond Halley, who was the first man to state that the atmosphere must have an upper limit and was probably made up of three layers. Mr. Ley will go on to discuss the possible orbits of satellites and the use, scientific and commercial which might be made of them.

Mr. Ley was born in Germany, received his education at the Universities of Berlin and Konigsberg. At first desire to be a geologist, he changed his ideas after reading a book on rocket theory.

A Fellow of the British Interplanetary Society and a member of many scientific societies including the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, Mr. Ley also works as advisor to Walt Disney for the Land of Tomorrow portion of the Disneyland television programme.

The lecture starts at 8:15 and is open to students and members of the public.

UofT Too Big?

McMasterite Suggests Solution

By PETUNIA from McMaster

Take it from someone who knows. A small university is the thing. Everybody knows when somebody gets pinned, everybody knows when somebody's father died, everyone knows when the editor of the campus paper found out he didn't agree with sherry. I'm from a small university. I come from McMaster. (Hail, hail, hail!)

So there's your solution, Toronto. Split up into small universities — each of the four colleges separate. Move one to Brantford (I'm also from Brantford.) Move one to Thorold. Move one to Trenton. And please move one to Port Sandfield (I have a fourth cousin in Port Sandfield.) Port Sandfield needs you. At present Port Sandfield has one store, two houses, and a main street fifty feet long. You could do wonders for the place. In fifty years the whole joint would consist of restaurants, bowling alleys, pool halls, bookstores, practical joke gadget shops, and pubs. You would provide employment for hundreds of people. You could maybe cause the Great Canadian Employment Boom. Toronto doesn't need you anymore — especially since the Parliament Buildings are here. Port Sandfield needs you desperately!

Be altruistic and save your good name. You don't want your school to become known as "that place that Senator McCarthy... Because and only because you won't admit that YOU'RE TOO BIG!!!"

you too can be a plato

Ever since Plato first contemplated his human stud farm it has been traditional for editors, writers, and even some intelligent folk to take time out and muse about "What I would do — if . . ." So now it's our turn.

What would we do if we were running a university like the University of Toronto. Our undergraduate-blue-printer's ink blood would prompt us to give students a great deal more to say. This is not just usual spring fever; undergraduate opinions are sometimes rash but usually far more intelligent than the compromised trivia that those who are supposed to be guiding us so often hand out. All student activities should be left to students. They would make mistakes, but they would be fewer, and more honestly admitted, than the errors perpetrated by righteous administrations.

To take just one example of need for greater freedom, there is utterly no reason why discipline cannot be handled by students themselves, rather than by a super-group with one forlorn student representative. In Argentina, the new order, has students controlling not only themselves but the faculty as well. They do a remarkably good job.

We would give students a say in everything, even new courses and raises in fees. So they would do a good job, we would encourage a good campus paper, one free from the interference, not only of the administration, but of other undergraduates. An intelligent critic is the only check needed on a democratic society.

sour grapes sam's philosophy column

"Is there anyone there?" said the Traveller, knocking at the moonlit door.

With second term busy building its grand April finale, the annual Faculty Head-knocking Contest, it is obvious that many Faculty members will be, like de la Mare's Traveller, knocking in vain.

After an exhausting year of pubbing and wenching, the majority of students will be in no condition to reproduce for the professors anything but their own notes, in somewhat garbled form.

It is unfair for the professors to expect more. Why should we have to take time out from our important affairs to think about the insignificant drivel presented in the courses offered by our pampered pedants? On the exams we will merely reproduce it. Life is a many splendored thing and should be enjoyed, not spent in thinking.

We refuse to think! The professors will knock in vain! And as the inspired deviates who did think encounter the demanding situations in life that such a course of folly produces, we shall recline and enjoy the pleasant wine we have squeezed from the grapes of indolence.

Yeshiva Trounces Blues Baby Blues Win by 95-64

By HOWARD B. MANDELL

Irwin "Red" Blumenreich and his Yeshiva University team mates handed the University of Toronto basketball Blues their fifth straight loss when they trampled the locals 92-61 at Hart House last night. Blumenreich, sinking shots from all over the court, contributed 30 of his team's total.

John Dacyshyn was the Blues best man scoring 21 points. Seventeen of the 21 came in a short space of time in the second half when Varsity moved from a 54-40 deficit to within six points of the New York City school. Dacyshyn also stood out on defence blocking many Yeshiva shots on their way to the basket. John Sheppard with ten and Ruby Richman with eight were the highest Blue men.

Allen Helfer, a 5'9" guard, displaying a good driving lay up, was Yeshiva's second highest scorer with 14 points. Abe Sodden and Heble Schlusell had 11 and ten respectively. Two quick set shots by Schlusell midway in the first half broke up what was a tight ball game and sent Yeshiva on its way. But there was no one on either team who could compare to the shifty Blumenreich who taught the Hart House crowd a lesson in good offensive and defensive basketball.

In the first ten minutes each team traded baskets as Yeshiva had difficulty breaking the Toronto zone defence. But when Schlusell began hitting on sets from the outside, the Blues had to come out of their shell and this gave Yeshiva the opportunity they needed to feed Blumenreich under the hoop. From that point on, with the exception of a sudden Blue spirit midway through the second half, the outcome was never in doubt.

In the opening game the U. of T. Intermediates coasted to an easy 95-64 victory over the Ontario Agricultural College. Although he only played half a game, Ed Rigby managed to score 20 points for the seconds. Other players to hit double figures included Garry Vipond with 18, newcomer Guido Minardi with 14, and Barry Stroud who contributed ten points, Barry Dimson throwing in 19 points in the second half was the Aggies' top player with 20.

In the other feature of the mid-week Athletic Night, the Latvian Sports Club defeated the U. of T. volleyball team in three straight games 16-14, 15-7, and 15-13.

Jr. Skule Wins Top Vic 62-47

Jr. SPS rolled to an easy 62-47 victory over Jr. Vic yesterday afternoon, chalking up their fourth straight win without a loss. They are now in undisputed possession of first place, having defeated all the other teams in their league.

Skule took an early lead in the first period and kept it the rest of the game. At no time did the Vic team threaten to close the gap; as the score at the end of each period indicates; 20-10 at the end of the first, 35-23 at the end of the second, and at the end of the game Skule a 17 point bulge. The two factors deciding the game were Skule's rebounding and accurate shooting. They had complete control of both backboards as Pellegrini, Fraser, and Woiden seemed to be attracted to the ball as it bounced off the backboard.

McQuag, potting 12, and Jawarski and Woiden with nine apiece led Skule to an easy win with their deadly shooting.

Lawrence, McMinn and Pocklington put in 12, 12, and 9 respectively for a losing cause. John Lawrence was a standout both on offense and defense, scoring his points either by dribbling through the Skule team and putting in a lay up, or by intercepting a Skule pass and scoring on a breakaway.

Whites Drop 4-3 Roughie Varsity Rally Falls Short

By JOHN BROOKS

Varsity Whites spotted Pickin' Chicken a four goal lead last night before the game was six minutes old, and then made a desperate rally to tie the score but it fell short and the Chicks grabbed a 4-3 win. The loss left the Whites mired deeper in the THL cellar.

Grace, Hughes with two and Al Battersby scored the opening Pickin' Chicken goals and it was not until the 13:20 mark that Varsity could break Freddy Coles' shutout when Arch Church, standing right on the doorstep, banged in a pass from Grant Mills in the corner. Lorry Stacey started the play at the blue line. A minute later, Ted Loocki made it 4-2 as he scored from Tom Riley and Dunc Brodie. Riley added the third White's counter in the middle frame.

scoring from Grant Mills Mike Elk and Grace started fireworks in the second and as the game drew to a close, four players were in the sin bin including Riley with a sin conduct.

Ladies' Fencing

"Touche" say the charming ladies of the University Fencing Club. And so it is for this group of young ladies who are vigorously bringing this new sports field to the world of women.

In last year's "experiment" Varsity fared admirably entering a team of four in several matches — with only victories! So far this year, a team of four including Margerita Zubmans, Olga Bruner entered in the six-team Ontario competition, with great success. A match with Toronto Foil Club is planned for the near future and six or seven Varsity girls will provide them with worthy competition.

This year's plans for the Club are organizational ones as more GIRLS are needed to plan further matches such as an Intercollegiate rally with McGill. So let's see all you fencing enthusiasts who spend your credit hours at Lillian Massey, come out to the weekly club meetings there at 5:00 on Wednesdays. Under the excellent teaching of Mr. Alpar — who instructs each member separately — you, too, can become match material.

Meds Rout Vic Day Nets Two

Intramural Hockey activity yesterday saw SPS IV trim St. Mike's E's 3-3. The Irish held the Skule squad to a 2-2 tie in the first period on goals by Dilworth and Kentish. SPS goals were netted by Larson and Burns. Larson beat the St. Mike's goalie, Frank Kietly with a shot to the short side of the net after being put into the clear on a pretty passing play. In the second period Skule took advantage of the fatigued Irishmen, who were short-staffed, to pot another four goals.

Larson with his second, Maik with two, and Ferguson rounded out the SPS tallying. Kentish of the Irish sandwiched his second goal in between the four SPS scores. Kietly in the Irish nets played a very good game considering the fact that it was the first time he had ever donned the pads.

Sr. Med's routed Sr. Vic 6-2 in further activity. Day scored a brace of goals and Robertson, Fowcer, McDougal and Wilkes added singletons. Vic scores were counted by Newman and Hamilton.

Trinity Demands Meditation Time

A revamped system of secondary education was proposed last night at Trinity College. J. D. Brownlie (III Trin) suggested that the present high school curriculum in Ontario can be covered in three years. This would leave two years for the student to think and work before going to college, he said.

Trinity students and staff were speaking in a forum on "Is the University Doing Its Job?" An estimated 60 men and women attended the forum, in Convocation hall at Trinity.

After this two year break, students would go to a junior college for three years of liberal arts, said Brownlie. The next four years could be spent on specialization, he said.

Everyone who is mentally able should get an education in the humanities, said Dr. Edison, head of Trinity's Ethics Department. "In fact, he can't get along without it," he said. "To be human, you have to know literature and the expressive arts, history, science and exact description, logic and philosophy."

Professor Earp recommended at least one year of residence for students, "to get the feel of the university."

"I can understand why there are so many nervous breakdowns . . . among students," said Prof. G. Grube, "when they have to attend lectures 36 hours a week." He said students should not have more than ten hours of lectures per week, essays should be radically cut in number, and the year should be extended to provide longer holidays at Christmas and Easter. During these holidays, students should think and work, he said.

A visiting student from McMaster called this "Intellectual snobbery."

A Faculty of Communications was proposed by Duart Farquharson (IV Trin), who also said that lecturers should not be impartial. "A professor should arbitrarily discuss certain aspects of the course which interest him," he said.

Students Give Talk On Travel For WUS Orientation Meet

"Stick to the well-known travel lines, rather than the NFCUS, travel plan, to get the most enjoyment out of your Atlantic crossing," advised Gord Sheppard, speaking yesterday at the WUS Orientations.

"NFCUS hires the Dutch Government line for student crossings," he pointed out. "Since many of the people are returning Dutch immigrants who are disillusioned by Canada, the atmosphere is not the pleasantest to be found." Mr. Sheppard said that the food and accommodation were below what could be had at a comparable price on some of the better-known lines.

John Becker (Arch) and Gord Sheppard (II Vic) two of the Finnish exchange plan last summer students who were on the mer gave the talk.

"The Finns are very hospitable almost to the point of embarrassment," said John Becker, the main speaker. "If a stranger enters a home, it becomes his automatically."

He said that the best thing for a student to do on arrival in one of the Scandinavian cities was to get in touch with the local university students' association. It would see that he was introduced to other students of his own age, and lay out a program for him.

Hitch-hiking is not looked on with favour, especially in Sweden. Buses and trains are priced very reasonably and will take a student almost anywhere. Students are advised always to travel third class since there is relatively little difference between that and first or second class.

Mr. Becker said that better currency rates would be obtained if the student waited until he reached Finland, since a Canadian dollar would bring 330 Finnish marks at the tourist exchange rate whereas the rate of exchange here at a bank is only 240.

Yesterday's talk was the fourth in a series of eight which are being given weekly every Wednesday at 1 o'clock in U.C.

OUR READER WRITES:

Vodka & Castles

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Drinking vodka in the Kremlin, wandering through castles in Spain or climbing Mount Olympus are possible this summer by applying for the WUS Summer Program. Deadline date for applications has been extended for a few more days.

We feel that the WUS Summer Seminar is one of the student's most interesting opportunities at college—a chance to find that brotherhood and international understanding are more than diplomatic clichés and to develop his own character through association with students from twenty foreign countries.

We would like to stress that the selection is not a sinecure foraging campus political "wheels," but a scholarship for students who are sincerely interested in travelling and studying abroad this summer.

The study tours will be to Russia, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain and Portugal, with a final three-week seminar in Germany. Application forms can be picked up in the SAC Office. Give it a try—you might be selected.

Laurier La Pierre, S.G.S., the second speaker for the noon said "Assimilation will mean a complete end to the rights granted by confederation. The rights of tongue and justice. I propose the old policy of cooperation with French Canada. History will teach us that this is the only policy that will endure."

Three of the speakers from the floor gave their addresses in French, Armand Leduc, III U.C., said, (translated) "If only all Canada were English, then all our problems would be solved."

The junior 22 was won by Angus Bruneau (SPS) in 25.4 Jim Canze (SPS) took second place, while Ron Zwayer (UC) finished third.

Varey captured his third straight intramural victory, copping the 1100 yd. senior run in 2:22.6. Bill Gelling (SPS) edged out Gord Hueston (Vic) for second place. The junior 1000 yards was won by Bill Seslieie (SPS) with Dan Niosi (SMC) second and Angus Bruneau (SPS) third.

Les Torontois Sont Partis Pour Montreal

Forty shouting, happy U of T students left Toronto's Union Station at 3:30 yesterday afternoon to repay a visit — a debt that is now three months old.

The students are Toronto's contingent of "Carabins" — and they are going to visit their exchange hosts at the University of Montreal, where they will spend four days of fun and frolic before returning next Monday morning.

But the objective of the Carabin visits is not just to have fun. Said one of Toronto's voyageurs, Doug Hubley, III SPS, "the results include a finer conception of, and a greater respect for, our French-Canadian neighbours."

It was with this object of strengthening inter-racial understanding in Canada, that the exchange visits were first founded several years ago between the Universities of Montreal and Toronto. Every fall, forty U of M students descend on their Toronto hosts singing "Alouette", and prepared for a weekend of parties, songs, lectures, and hangovers.

And, in the spring, their 40 Toronto hosts travel back to Montreal to return the visits, the songs, and the discussions.

The Toronto visitors, whatever their tastes for wine, will have a busy program ahead of them in Montreal, the Paris of the New World. Here is the official program:

THURSDAY: Arrive in Montreal at 10:00 p.m.

for a "reception" — and then split up to go to private homes of their hosts.

FRIDAY: A day of skating, skiing, and falling at Mount Gabriel, near Montreal, topped off with a roof-raising barn dance.

SATURDAY: Late rising, then a discussion on Canada's future; a dinner sponsored by the Mayor of Montreal later in the day; then a house party till . . .

SUNDAY: An even later arising, then mass for those who can make it; a University tea, and then home, arriving late Sunday night, rather thoroughly tired.

Sounds like a great weekend.

UC Squabbles Over Gargoyle Motion Almost Fires Editors

A change of editors for University College's student newspaper has been discarded by the UC Lit and the WUA.

A dispute between the editors of the Gargoyle, the UC Literary and Athletic Society, and the publicity staff of UC's soon-to-come musical comedy, Kiss Me Kate, apparently is the cause of a motion passed by the UC Lit Executive this Wednesday asking the editors, Moishe Reiter and Bailey Iscove, to resign.

In an effort to get a special Kiss Me Kate issue, Marge Stern, head of the musical's publicity staff approached a Varsity staffer. The staffer said: "Marge said the Gargoyle staff was too lazy or couldn't be bothered to get out an issue before Kiss Me-Kate, so the publicity staff were going to write the copy. They wanted someone experienced to put it together."

The musical's staff wanted its special issue to appear on Wednesday, February 8, five days before the first night of the production. Reiter and Bailey Iscove had planned a publishing date later in the week.

Grievances were presented to the meeting before the motion asking Reiter and Iscove to resign was passed.

Before the motion was taken to the WUA meeting to be ratified, Thursday, members of the UC Lit had discussed the date of issue problem with the two editors. When the issue date was brought forward to February 8, the motion was dropped. It was not presented to the WUA.

Peter Larmour, President of the UC Lit, said that the Lit has passed a motion "saying in effect that they should resign" but that they had looked into it before presenting it to the WUA. Everything worked out, he said, and hence the question was never put to the WUA.

Censure NFCUS On Drinking Meet At Carleton Union

A drinking party at the NFCUS executive meeting in December gave the national student federation a black eye last month. The Carleton College Students' Council tagged the Federation with a "severe reprimand" for its violation of College rules.

No further action was taken, for the Students' Council decided "the incident did not warrant (it)."

The two-day executive meeting was held in Carleton's Student Union, in Ottawa, just after Christmas last year. The National NFCUS office is located in the same building.

The executive had met with Peter Martin, National President of the Federation, to discuss the budget on the first night of the meeting.

The half-dozen executive officers drank a bottle of rye between them at this meeting, charged Lion Wexler, social convener of the Carleton Council, in presenting the censure motion.

Drinking in the Student Union at Carleton is strictly prohibited at all times. Since the Union opened, there have been several cases of students suspected of drinking there.

In the Carleton meeting, no charges of "drunken debauch" or "beery brawl" were made.

"The misdemeanour was not very serious, said Dal Shortt, president of the Carleton Council, "but the delegates had taken advantage of the hospitality of Students' Council in going contrary to house rules."

"Some members had thought it might be feasible to refuse the use of the office to the National NFCUS office, but the incident did not warrant such action," said Shortt.

The NFCUS executive will probably meet again at Carleton this Christmas.

Universities Get Greater Grants; Ontario Promise

"Substantially more money" was promised Ontario universities by Education Minister Dunlop Wednesday. He said negotiations now underway will add to the province's annual $12 million grants to Ontario's seven universities.

In a government university meeting, "we discussed their problems and there was a realization of the tremendous urgency of their needs," Dunlop said. Another conference will be held soon to decide what form further assistance this year should take, he said.

Examitis And Other Topical Diseases

By TONY NOXON

As exam time comes closer and closer, it is only to be expected that under the stresses and strains of academic toil, a number of students will succumb to the various diseases and afflictions which are peculiar to students who are studying for exams. In this connection, it may be said that students not only have a nervous system, a respiratory system, a circulatory system, etc., but also a systemis notus, or note system which is particularly vulnerable to disease, weakness, infection, and neglect on the part of the student. As a public service, and with the assurance that education is the most effective way of fighting disease, The Varsity, herewith publishes a list of some of these afflictions which will soon become apparent throughout the campus.

The first is one which usually appears just about this time of year. It is called: 1. Subjectus Neglecto, or Greek History? What Greek History? This disease strikes suddenly and without warning, although it often coincides with the circulation of rumours that examinations will be held in April. The patient begins to experience discomforts considerabilis upon contact, often accidental, with a subjectus ignorus, a subject which he hardly knew was on the course. Usually a few pages of textus de subjectus ignorus are sufficient to produce alarming symptoms of perspirus frigidus, and a sensation of acute despair. From this point the course of the disease is rapid. The patient exhibits an almost fanatic interest in the subjectus ignorus, frequently carrying textus, notus, and referencus with him everywhere. Extreme cases become feverous, numbing subjectus essentialis in their sleep. The recovery is hard and long, and is effected only by use of the old English remedy oilus midnightus, obtained under pressure from the leaves of the textus approprius.

Well, that's one to avoid. Another disease, one which seems to attack some students as they are studying is:

2. Notus Itegitibilis, or The Curse of Curative Script.

This disease, often affecting the whole notus systemis, is all the more insidious because the patient may be unaware of his condition until almost the very end. Within a few short hours of attempting a notus deciphers, however, the patient may be in the worst agonies of the disease. The illness may be short, in which case the patient passes on, realizing that the notus are completely uselessibus anyway, or it may be long, involving large doses of notus borrowis and elbowum greaso. To prevent the recurrence of the disease in later years, the patient may attempt to develop a condition of scriptus clarus in the notus systemis, or he may resign him-

WUS Seminar This Weekend All Applicants Are Accepted

Foreign and Canadian students will compare notes on universities this weekend at Caledon Hills Farm. The seminar, sponsored by World University Service, has as topic "The Role of the University in the Modern World." Twenty-three men and women are expected to take part in the discussions, which will center on recent events in the educational world, said Mary Lou Nash, WUS Host Committee Chairman.

These include the Gordon Commission's consideration of the future of Canada's universities, and the education issue published last month by the University of Toronto Quarterly.

"There'll be some time to enjoy the snow," said Miss Nash. She said all the applicants for the weekend had been accepted.

Theme speaker for the weekend is Dr. R. S. Harris, of University College. Smaller discussion groups will be led by Prof. G. R. Slemmon, Mr. Peter Seymour, Mr. Alan Davenport, and Prof. P. Savan.

Prayer, Faith, Science Best For Disease Cure -- Healer

A Toronto faith-healer thinks prayer, work with God, and medical science combined are best for the cure of disease. Rev. G. N. Lesser, of the Church of the Apostle, told the Canterbury Club of the University, last Sunday his theory of the extension of Jesus' healing ministry.

Rev. Lesser is known throughout Ontario for his "divine-healing" meetings, which include prayers for the sick, the laying on of hands, anointing with oil of some sick people, and prayer.

In his talk, Rev. Lesser first explained how the concept of divine healing had declined due to materialism and the divorce of medicine and religion.

"The minister is looked on much as the undertaker," he said. "If the minister visits a sick person, it seems like a sign that he is doomed."

Rev. Lesser explained he was not trying to abandon medical science. "Christians are commanded to exercise the ministry of healing," he said. They should try it without questioning whether it will work, he said. "Divine healing satisfies a hunger of the multitude."

The Canterbury Club is the Anglican Students' Club on campus.

Keep Federation Councils Agree

Edmonton: (CUP)—The retention of the national students' organization is generally favored by students' councils across Canada, the Alberta NFCUS committee reported.

The Alberta committee of NFCUS had conducted a nationwide poll to determine the attitude of various groups across the country.

Though replies are still incomplete, all those received favoured the retention of NFCUS, but many advised certain structural changes.

New University Of Junior Status For Ontario

A new college will be built in Ontario within the next two years, it has been decided by the Ontario provincial government.

The college, to be known as the Lakehead College of Arts, Science, and Technology, will be a "junior" university, providing two years of training.

Graduates of this school will then attend Universities such as Toronto for two years in order to secure a regular degree.

The new style college is to be established in order to relieve crowding in the universities, and provide more economical education, it was said.

Les Carabins Play Blues Rugged Contest Forecast

Monsieur Arthur Therrien and his Carabins can expect the usual trouble from the "Big Blue" tonight when the Flying Frenchmen land in Varsity Arena for their first appearance in Toronto this season.

Each time the mighty Montreal crew visits this town the chips begin to fly, and tonight should be no exception. Carabins, without a win in their last five starts, are desperate for a victory to put them back in the running for the Queen's Cup. With the season half over, Laval and the Blues appear to be walking away from the pack in great haste.

Blues have bumped Carabins twice in Verdun, 6-3 and 6-4, and each time on a Saturday following a grueling game in Montreal or Quebec City. This time, in better shape than at any time before in the season, the story should be different. Carabins will be lucky to make a showing when the chips go down tonight in Varsity Arena.

M. Therrien should rest his case on last season's famous statement. Harry Griffiths, then Stadium manager for the U of T, saw the pudgy little man heading for Woodbine just after the team arrived in Toronto. "Don't spend it all on the ponies," cautioned Harry, but Arthur was pensive. "I have no money for bet," quoth he, "But if I have, I bet it on the Big Blue." It's the same story this year, although Laval may differ. At any rate, Carabins are unlikely to have much to say about it.

Gael Hoopsters Here Tackle Blues Tonight

The path to victory has been somewhat difficult for the University of Toronto basketball Blues to find. They stumbled on it once briefly in the first game of the Intercollegiate League schedule when they defeated Assumption but they took the wrong turn some five games ago and have yet to return to that road of wins. Tonight at eight-thirty in the Hart House Gymnasium they hope once more to rediscover that path when they meet Queen's Golden Gaels in a regular Intercollegiate League contest.

Under normal circumstances they should triumph. Queen's have yet to win an Intercollegiate contest this season. They have bowed to Western, McGill and McMaster, being trampled by Western 74-42. But one or two detours have sprung up on the Blues' path. Detour number one concerns John Dacshyn. The lanky Toronto centre sprained his ankle on Thursday evening in the Yeshiva game and may or may not see action on Friday. If he does play, it will be in a limited capacity. Detour number two also concerns a sprained ankle. This one belongs to Al Vaichulis and it will keep the 21 year old dental student out of the lineup for at least two weeks.

In three Queen's losses to date Jim Harrison and Greg Stone have been the best two men in a losing cause for the Golden Gaels. Both men have scored in the double figures. Other Gaels to watch are footballer Ron Stewart and Andy Hayden.

Dacshyn leads all Blue scorers in the 13 games the team has played to date. Dac has scored 136 points, Ruby Richman and Pete Potter are right behind the Varsity centre with 115 and 110 points respectively. The Blues hope to fatten their averages tonight. They should.

Volleyball Girls Seeking Crown

At 1 o'clock this afternoon the Intercollegiate volleyball team sets out for Hamilton and McMaster University to challenge, along with four other teams, the championship crown worn by Western and again, as in many other years, Western is the team to beat.

Five of last year's team members are making the trip, Noreen Maniscola, Honey Wiseman, Joan Galley, Marjorie Howse, and Pat Dugit feel they have a fairly good chance to come out on top with such new names as Sandra Grant, Bev. Davidson, Carol Green, Ligita Bardins, Deidre Rea, Ada MacPherson, and Pat Shannon added to their ranks.

After a warm-up early Friday evening the girls meet McGill and Queen's before taking part in the party arranged by McMaster for all the teams. Saturday morning they play Western (and that will be THE game), O.A.C., then McMaster. Each team is playing five games and the winner will be the team winning most rallies unless there is a tie in which case points will be taken into consideration.

To finish off the tournament the hostesses have planned a gala luncheon after which the various teams will return to their respective alma maters.

UofT Gals Top Teachers Charters Nets 10 Points

In the feature attraction at Ryerson gym on Wednesday evening the Varsity Seniors met with a well-supported and well-cheered squad from Hamilton Teacher's College and defeated them by a too-close-for-comfort score of 37-32.

Opening the scoring action for Varsity in the first quarter, Sylvia Kerr made good a jump-shot on a breakaway, followed by a sensational hook-shot by Marilyn Charters. Paisley Potter retaliated for H.T.C. by making two accurate free-shots and with that the scoring was wide-open until Varsity came through with a 14-5 lead at the end of the first quarter.

In the second quarter the forward line of Pru Smith, Lil Bobson and Jan Tennant boosted the score by nine points giving the winning team a still decisive margin of 16 points. Sparked by the strong offensive play of Beth Ann Joy and Paisley Potter, the teachers gathered momentum, decreasing the scoring gap in the third period, and continued their forward drive in the fourth holding Varsity almost scoreless. Against the skilled Hamilton defence the Varsity squad lost ground rapidly in the last half of the game and it was fortunate for them that time ran out before a possible upset resulted.

Stars of the game score-wise were Beth Ann Joy and Paisley Potter of Hamilton with 15 and 14 points each and Varsity's Marilyn Charters with 10. Next on Varsity's high-scoring list was a seven point tie between Pru Smith and Sylvia Kerr shining defensively for Toronto. Meredith Robinson and Gwenn Thom slightly bettered the performance of other guards, but the entire defense rank did a terrific job in the first of the fast moving match. Outstanding for Hamilton in this field was Kay Henshaw. With the basketball week-end not too far in the future it will be interesting to see how well Micky Barnett can shape the team up before the final challenge of the purple and white.

As a preliminary feature, the Intermediates won a 32-13 decision over the senior team from Humber-side C.I. The first half of the game was fast and quite rough with Varsity players racking up a decided score advantage. At the beginning of the fourth quarter the game took on a rowdy note as the H.C.I. gals battled to catch up with the blue and white. Netting the most baskets for the winning line was Jill Segond whose 13 point lead was followed by a three-way tie among Jackie D'Arcy, Georgia Brock and Rosemary Burns for five points. Stealing from the college team with five points was Lydia Stzchoka.

of the Underwater Club of Canada, a demonstration will be given by frogmen of both sexes. This underwater sport is one of the most rapidly growing in the world, it received its impetus from the navy frogmen during the last world war. A group from Toronto Underwater Club will be participating tonight. The spectacle will include underwater swimming, diving, fishing and rescue work. To enable as many as possible to see the 45 minute show, the club will put on two performances—at 8:45 and at 10:15.

Swimming enthusiasts will also be able to watch a 7:15 water polo match between Varsity and the Etobicoke Swimming Club.

From 8:30 to 11:30, in the fencing room, pigskin fans can see color films of the Big Four football season. And to round out the evening, there will be a dance in the gym after the hoop activities are ended.

It seems that there is only one big problem—how are you going to see everything?

Cagers, Frogman Show Head Top Athletic Night

According to advance reports, tonight's athletic schedule at Hart House shapes up as one of the best and most varied in years. Fifty cents entitles anyone to pick from five sports, including basketball, boxing, a frogmen demonstration, water polo and football.

Varsity intermediates get the evening underway at 7:00 p.m. when they meet Queen's in a league basketball game. The Baby Blues, sporting a 3-1 record, won't be running into any soft touch. Taking a common foe as a basis for comparison, Varsity downed Ryerson by six, while Queen's edged the latter by two points. The 8:30 feature attraction pits the Blues against the Senior Gaels.

Intercollegiate boxing hopefuls will be in action in the upper gym where the University Boxing Championships will be held. Due to the lack of suitable competition, it isn't often that one can see Varsity's top boxers. The boxers team, from October to March and are deserving of your support.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BOOKS

The last chapter of an unforgettable football saga was written on January 15th when Varsity football coach Bob Masterson signed as General Manager of the Calgary Stampede. In football circles, the move was regarded as an event which was bound to occur sooner or later, but to everyone on the Toronto campus, it was a complete and unexpected surprise.

Bob Masterson first set eyes on the University of Toronto in the late summer of 1947, bringing with him a long and colorful sporting record. A native of New Jersey, Bob first broke into national prominence with Miami University in the late thirties when he gained recognition on the All-American Football Team. While at Miami, he was a star in basketball, boxing and track as well as football. On his graduation, with the Chicago Bears chasing him desperately, Bob signed with the Washington Redskins and during his six year stay there, he helped the Redskins win three National League titles. With Washington, he was one of the pass receivers for the famed Sammy Baugh. He added experience with the Yankees and the Giants, and in his year before coming to Varsity, he was assistant coach of the Yankees.

However, the main source of our interest lies in Bob's great career here at Varsity. For the 1947-48 season, Bob was presented with 14 holdovers from the previous year, plus a bunch of rookies who eventually produced three well-known names in Canadian pro ball—Teddy Toogood, Pete Bennett and Steve Karrys.

The Blues started off with a bang, and a three-game exhibition series in the west saw them come home victorious in all three, plus a point total of 125. They allowed the opposition but five. Then it was into the Intercollegiate grind and after a 31-7 loss to the Mustangs, an undefeated year. The final game that season has gone down in record as one of the greatest upsets in Intercollegiate football. Western, boasting the fabulous MacFarlane brothers and Doug Gray, made no effort to hide the fact that they were gunning for 75 points. The final score was 12-12, and although the Mustangs won the Yates Cup, another thing was decided. Bob Masterson was the definite choice as head football coach at the University of Toronto.

And Bob didn't let his backers down, either. 1948 was a banner year in Varsity football as the Blues came roaring back from two early season losses to whip Western 23-8 and force a play-off for the Yates Cup. The victory marked the end of a 27 game Western win streak. On Saturday, November 20th, the Blues trampled the Mustangs 18-7 and the Yates Cup was in Toronto for the first time in twelve years. If ever any football coach had a secure job, it was Bob Masterson on that day.

The next years were sad ones for Varsity fans as their beloved Blues dropped from reigning champions to the cold depths of the cellar and the Yates Trophy was expressed to London. But for coach Bob they were just the years that hit any intercollegiate football team anytime. They were the years to rebuild and rebuild is what Bob Masterson did.

Along came 1951, and that year went down as one of the most memorable in Varsity football. Bob led his Blues through an undefeated season, as they chalked up nine victories against nary a loss. Not only was it the second Cup for Masterson and Varsity in four years, but it also marked the start of Steve Oneschuk's colorful career at Varsity. Varsity racked up 152 points that year and allowed the opponents but 60. The closest they came to defeat was a 13-13 tie with Western.

The Blues roared through the first four League games of the 1952 season without defeat, but two losses to McGill and the ever-lastingly persistent Mustangs sent them down and Western regained the much-travelled Yates Cup.

The next season, the Blues were victims of one of the most heart-breaking experiences in football in a post-season play-off. Varsity owned an 8-7 lead over the Mustangs with less than a minute to go. Suddenly, as thousands of Varsity fans sat in stunned silence, Don Getty pitched a 52 yard strike to Murray Henderson and Metras had done it again. For the Blues and their coach it was a tragic end to a great year.

It was obvious to all onlookers by the way the Blues roared into their 1954 schedule that they were out to make amends for that defeat, and make amends they did. Their start was a mediocre one, but twin victories over McGill and a revenge win over the improving Gaels sent them into the final playoff against—yep, the Mustangs. The report of that game in the Varsity sums up the situation better than any amount of talk—"Bob Masterson waved his magic bat and an ugly jinx turned into the loveliest Yates Cup he ever did see." And that was it; the Blues edged the Purple and White 9-8 right in their own back yard, and it was another first for Bob. It was the first time Varsity had beaten Western in London in 18 long, lean years.

And everyone knows how the tides of Intercollegiate football ran this year. Now, after seven years as head coach of the Blues, Bob Masterson has left the University to move up a rung and join the ranks of professional footballers. His record here includes three championships, and five post-season playoffs. He has been active not only in football, but was head coach of the basketball staff, as well as being an integral part of the Athletic Association.

Without taking credit away from all others involved, one must give a great deal of credit to Bob for the high standard upon which Varsity football operates and is played. The University of Toronto made a fine choice when they first acquired Bob, and no one is happy to see him go. Out west, he takes over the reins of a cellar-dwelling club, and when he makes a success of his job, as we know he will, we'll be proud to be able to sit back and say, "He did the same for us, too." Thanks, Bob, and the best of luck.

the B.A.'s and all that

One of the most popular subjects of fables is the sad state of the much-maligned B.A.

As a matter of fact, and not of conjecture, the B.A. degree is today prized rather highly, both by the business world, and by the general public.

A reasonably intelligent artsman, or artswoman for that matter, should not find it difficult these days to find a job upon graduation. And there is an excellent chance that the job will be both interesting, and, in the long run at least, rewarding.

Today there is an increasing demand for arts graduates from commerce and industry. The Placement Service at this university has more openings than they can fill for arts graduates, and the trend over the years is an increasing emphasis on training in the humanities as a preparation for entering the business world. In the United States, this trend has been carried to the extent that some companies pay all the expenses of their senior executives who are not college grads to take a six months course in the humanities.

This emphasis on arts training is no mere accident, but is the result of several factors. Among these are the increasingly "scientific" outlook on office management, sales, and executive positions, which result in an added emphasis on the ability to benefit from training. There is also the realization that a broad background in the humanities makes for a well-rounded, intelligent employee possessing maturity, self-reliance, and some degree of imaginativeness.

As these trends continue, there will be an increasing emphasis on arts graduates. Many companies now will accept only B.A.'s for training for executive positions, and many companies are rapidly adopting this position. The demand for arts grads greatly exceeds the supply all across Canada, and this gap is increasing, not narrowing.

There are some who cry that the degree is being "cheaped" as a result of the increasing supply of graduates. It is not being cheapened monetarily, and surely the increasing number of such graduates cannot be in itself anything to cause concern academically. The increasing availability of knowledge to more of the people is something which should be applauded and not condemned.

The number of arts students graduating annually will increase sharply over the next few years. But there is no reason why the country cannot absorb with profit all the B.A.'s produced.

We are sorry that Dean Bissell is leaving.

The Varsity has always found him a most intelligent and sympathetic counsellor. In all his positions at the University of Toronto he has proved himself a sincere friend to the students and one able to be of real assistance.

We are sure that he will soon inspire in the students of Carleton College the same respect and admiration in his new position as he has inspired at U of T.

The recent federal proposals on dominion-provincial fiscal relations are rather disappointing to anyone sensitive to the needs of Canadian unity.

The complex proposals of the federal government, which seem likely to be adopted, leave the door open for any province who desires to do so to levy its own corporation and personal income tax, and succession duties. Because of the present Liberal Government's deep desire to "get along," particularly with Quebec, Canadians may be faced with a multiplicity of taxes and collection agencies which are economically both unsound and wasteful.

A more resolute government, with a greater sense of political integrity, might well have stuck to its guns and insisted on a fiscal arrangement which would have prevented such double taxation, as well as assuring the poorer provinces of adequate resources necessary to improve the welfare of their own people.

4 Students of Education From Indonesia

The Indonesian people have a tremendous job ahead of them — in reforming their economy, their political institutions, and their educational system. Four Indonesian students are presently on the Toronto campus studying Canadian educational methods as part of a world-wide tour to gain information and experience on education. Here The Varsity's News Editor tell his impression of the students and their problems.

By VERNON GILBERT
Varsity News Editor

The task ahead of the government of Indonesia in implementing its policies is formidable by any standards. This new Asian nation of 80,000,000 people, only seven years old, had for 350 years been a producer of raw materials for the factories of Europe, and the Netherlands in particular.

The tremendous job ahead of the Indonesians now is to attempt to industrialize their nation so that its living standards will be comparable to those of the western world.

To do this requires much technical knowledge and a vast raising of the educational level throughout the islands of the republic.

The current visit to Toronto, and other parts of Canada by four Indonesian teachers is one of many ways in which ideas are being gathered.

The leader of the group, Mr. Mohd. Noerman, from Djakarta, told me yesterday in an hour-and-a-half long interview, some of the activities they are engaging in during their stay in Toronto.

The four men, all from Djakarta, Indonesia, have been in Canada since the middle of last week. They landed in Montreal, and spent three days in Ottawa before coming to Toronto.

The purpose of the trip, Mr. Noerman said, was to study the Canadian educational system, discovering parallels between the two countries, so that they could take ideas back with them.

On Monday they had spent a very exhausting day touring Toronto schools. Their hosts had been members of the Toronto Board of Education. Yesterday they had been out inspecting rural schools, and revelling, incidentally, in experiencing for the first time the sight of a city crawling out from under a heavy snowfall.

Mr. Noerman was very willing to talk about his native land. He himself was born in the island of Sumatra, one of the main islands comprising the Union, but he is now a resident of the capital.

Education in Indonesia is controlled by the central government. There are nine provinces in the federation, but they have no rights in educational matters.

Religious instruction in schools—90 percent of Indonesians are Moslems—is handled by a Ministry of Religious Affairs.

Elementary schooling lasts six years. Last year a compulsory education act was passed by the Indonesian parliament. It is hoped that it will be fully implemented by 1960. After primary school comes three years in a junior high school, followed by a further three years in a senior high school.

There is a certificate granted after each stage of schooling, so that a student wishing to attend university must have had twelve years in school, and hold the three certificates.

As well as academic schools, the Indonesian educational system also offers technical training to students. Some children go straight from elementary school to a junior vocational school for a three year course. Others go for their final three years, after the junior high school course. Entrants into these courses are selected on the basis of aptitude.

Djakarta. Because there are so many languages in the country, it is called by its formal Latin title, "Universitas Indonesiae".

Elementary schools are conducted in the native language of the region, English is a compulsory language in the junior high schools, French or German is also taken in senior high school, depending upon the eventual profession chosen.

The Dutch language, Mr. Noerman explained, is fast disappearing from Indonesia, except at the university level, where many fine libraries exist in that language.

He explained further that English has been chosen as a first foreign language because of the proximity of Indonesia to Australia, Malaya, India, and Pakistan, and because most of the country's trading is done with English-speaking countries. The biggest exports are rubber, tin, tea and copra.

This state of affairs is what has to change, according to Indonesian official thought. The country is entirely dependent upon outside sources for its consumer goods. The aim is to build up a sizeable secondary industry, capable of producing a major part of the domestic needs in this respect.

Various agencies of the United Nations are aiding in this long-range plan. The Food and Agricultural Organization and the Technical Co-operation Agency have furnished funds and technicians.

Under the Colombo Plan, countries of the Commonwealth have also assisted in this respect.

One of the most notable, has been the fact that increasing numbers of Indonesian students have gone to Australian universities to study.

Last year 400 new students went to Australia, mostly to the University of Sydney, and altogether 2000 Indonesians were enrolled in various courses there.

The emergence of Australia as a centre of learning for Asian students in South-East Asia has also been a feature of the many changes that have occurred in that part of the world since the war.

It is the closest, and therefore the least expensive country for students to reach, and the formation of such schemes as the Colombo Plan have made it possible for Asian students to seek higher education outside their own countries.

A great deal of goodwill has been engendered, Mr. Noerman told me, by these methods of help. Many technicians and scholars have come to Indonesia to work and to study, and these, too, have hastened this trend.

The man-in-the-street in Asia sees the effects all around him—in new factories and returning students, trained for skilled work. So far, so good, was the attitude, but there is much to be done.

It behooves countries like those in the British Commonwealth, who have material advantages, to help newly-emerging countries who have just started towards the full exploitation of their natural resources.

There is much goodwill to be had in Asia. It is ours for the taking if we go about it the right way.

Heifetz Violin Virtuosity Apparent In Concert Appearance With TSO

What is a music critic? He is not a pedant. He understands music; not through heavy-lensed bifocals and the encyclopedia of music but through his ears. His most basic equipment is sincere artistic taste and an acute sensitivity to mood, harmony and rhythm. His opinions will be derived from his feelings rather than his intellect. While it will not hurt him to know the theory of counterpoint and harmony, his appraisal of a performance of the Ninth Symphony will not depend on it.

This does not mean that the good critic is any more objective in his criticisms than the bad one. Reviewing is a subjective task and good critics have been known to disagree, though I think it is more likely that they should agree than that they should not. I have never been more impressed with this than now, after just having attended this week's performance of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. I am an unwavering admirer of Heifetz, but it is a sure thing that the whole world is not with me. "He's the greatest, technically," one gentleman commented to me, "he's got a nice tone and all that, but didn't you think that something was missing?" No, I did not! It is not for me to judge whether or not I possess the qualities of a good critic (there are some who, in their wisdom, think not); I can only say that so far as I am concerned, Heifetz' playing of the Sibelius Concerto was superb. And, this week, Sir Ernest's conducting, I am pleased to report, did him justice.

Heifetz is still the king of fiddlers. He stands head and shoulders above the much-publicized violinists now on tour from the Soviet Union. He plays with the detached competence of a plumber at work on the kitchen sink. This in itself is of little merit, but the sounds which come from Heifetz, violin justify the means. The Sibelius is a veritable jungle of technical trap-holes: the rippling scales in thirds and sixths, the progressions of octaves, the harmonics, arpeggios and slides that abound from beginning to end are sheer death to the second-rate virtuoso. Heifetz' bow-arm was a delight to the eye, a clean-cut economy of action that seemed as strong and assertive as the swing of a pro golfer.

Three other compositions were heard at the concert: The Fourth Brandenburg Concerto of Bach, The Walk to the Paradise Garden of Delius, and the first concert performance in Canada of the Symphony No. 3 of Stanley Bate. To my mind, the Brandenburg concerto was fuzzy; the soloists, concertmaster Hyman Goodman and flutists Nicholas Fiore and Edward Smith, could not be heard. On the other hand, the Bate symphony, a work written in 1940 during the Nazi blitz on London, seemed to have been thoroughly and competently rehearsed. There was hardly a movement of Sir Ernest's hand that did not bring instant acknowledgment from the players. The performance was excellent, the music . . . I shall reserve judgment.

Iolanthe — From Hence To Thither

We are now in the middle of that once-a-year week when we flock to Hart House Theatre to hear all our friends from Vic surprisingly break forth into husky coloraturas or bar-room basses. Again, the Victoria College Musical Club is with us — this year making a reasonably successful assault upon Iolanthe.

In spite of the involuntary comparisons by those who just saw the D'Oyly Carte do the same thing, the college group has invited, they don't come off too badly. With an infectious enthusiasm covering up a certain lack of elegance (especially in the case of those dainty fairies), they manage to prevent one of the most Gilbertian of Gilbertian situations from becoming tiresome.

Vocally, the cast struggled manfully against a particularly brassy orchestra, though a few of them seemed to give up the struggle. (I'm told that Mary Durrant, who played Phyllis, has rather a nice voice.) Some fine collaboration between musical director Godfrey Ridout and stage director William Metcalfe kept a fairly static story moving smoothly.

Static though the story proper may be, it has a surprising variety of emotional levels, and these were admirably handled by the cast. The soloists usually brought off their comic moments — Strepchon's admission of his "half-fairy-hood" certainly brings more laughs now than it ever did.

With fairies, dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, barons, and Arcadian shepherds all over the place, it took the sentry at the Houses of Parliament to steal the show. John Rick played Private Willis with a lumbering, eye-rolling single-mindedness, and sang the part with a fine voice. I could hear every word.

Raymond Carl as that susceptible Chancellor had just the right mixture of senility and agility, and was a judicious contrast to Strepchon, suavely played and smoothly sung by David Watts. Singing honors must also go to Anne Hossack in the title role, for carrying off a Victorian recognition scene with definite eclat.

Ida's Ecstatic

University life does a quick change for PRINCESS IDA and her manless crowd of women shortly after Lady Blanche, Professor of Abstract Science (contralto Ivy Sullivan) behold a man for the first time (he's a tenor, too). The Eaton Operatic Society tells the whole story in their annual G & S production this year at Eaton Auditorium, February 7 to 11.

Open Up New Gallery

Tuesday evening, at 736 Bay Street, the Greenwich Art Gallery was opened with many good wishes and much good sherry. The best of Boheme had turned out to acknowledge their own in an atmosphere which was full of smoke and the feeling that something was happening. I was one of those trying to look at the paintings.

Five of Toronto's youngest and most exciting painters are represented in the group show in Toronto's youngest and most promising gallery. Five painters and five different sorts of painting.

Gerald Scott, who has just moved a collection of his work from the Hart House Gallery, paints objective things, chiefly people's faces, in a highly subjective, incisively perceptive way. Less intelligible are Graham Coughtry and Michael Snow, whose Hart House Show embarrassed the mayor last year. Frankly, I get nothing from Snow's body-like collages, or Coughtry's essays in fleshy pink mist. They are different from anything I have seen. William Ronald, a Painter Eleven and follower of New York fashions, contributes a painty abstraction.

There is an archaeological feeling about the work of Robert Vavarandre, not only in the nests of distant arches which he uses in two of his paintings but in the scratched brown texture of the gesso.

The Gallery where these paintings hang is no dark cellar, but clean and newly constructed — with all the light and space you could want. If Av Isaacs, the man responsible, can maintain the spirit of his manifesto, to support artists of the integrity of those at present in the gallery, in the face of any "mythical level of public taste," the Greenwich Gallery may become Toronto's most exciting art centre. And especially because of this we wish him the best of luck.

Ilium's Topless Towers

Helen of Troy, at present occupying the screen of the Imperial Theatre, is yet another in the recent series of classical spectacles which have been pouring out of the studios of Hollywood and Europe. It is perhaps unfortunate that this one had to pour out in pieces. Much of the time it bears the forlorn aspect of a jigsaw puzzle which has not yet been put together.

Italy's Rossana Podesta and a young unknown named Jack Sernas play Paris and Helen like a pair of wooden Indians, and they are surrounded by a not too creditable cast. The craggy warriors of Greece and Troy give Robert Wise's spectacle an uncommon air of visual veracity, but if Achilles puts his heel in his mouth every time he opens it; most of the actors were apparently picked for their capacity to fill the eye rather than their ability to speak lines. Even the most fervent cinemaniac will admit that good movies are swamped by badly-spoken dialogue, even if the picture is pretty.

There's a lot however, for the enthusiast of pure cinema in Helen of Troy — acridly barbaric costumes and sets by Roger Furse and Edward Carrere, a fno eye for the dramatic moment on the part of the cameraman, and the compelling archaic quality that movies about the Golden Age, however bad, seem to possess.

It's a surprise to discover, too, that Homer has been treated by the script-writers with considerable respect—even to such details as Hector's son flinching at the sight of his daddy's war-bonnet. One of the most exciting moments in the film is the famous battle between Hector and Achilles, where in one brief moment the gaunt and lanky enemies, the yellow plain, and the hushed crowds on the walls of Ilium recreate the age of myths with tremendous impact.

Helen of Troy, however, in no way bolsters the directorial reputation Robert Wise made with The Set-Up, a superbly realistic boxing movie which garnered award after award some years back. It's hardly possible to believe the same man directed them, in fact. The Set-Up had every cinematic virtue that Helen of Troy has not: mobility, first-class acting, and an almost painful reality. One wonders what Wise, working with his old touch, could have done with the flamboyant old tale which he has directed so woodenly.

The Russians have pirated a U of T Professor's book. The book, Canadian Regions, written by Professor D. F. Putnam, head of this University's Geography department, has been reprinted by the Russian state publishing house without the permission of either the publisher or the author. The book contains a description of Canada's geography and topography.

The book's Canadian publisher, J. M. Dent and Sons, said that the Russians were not bound by International Copyright conventions, and hence no legal action could be taken against their "piracy."

However, Mr. Cecil Eustace, Dent's Vice-President, is writing to Moscow to protest the incident on behalf of Prof. Putnam. Mr. Eustace said that the Russians had ordered one copy of the book from Dent's New York office, and had evidently copied the book from that.

The U.S.S.R. and the U.S. are the only two major countries not adhering to the Berne Copyright Convention, which forbids "pirating" of books without permission.

And Other Topical Diseases

self to an almost exclusive dependence upon notus borrows. Another disease which pursues a slow course, undermining the notus systemis for some time before becoming apparent is: 3. Lecturus absentio, or 'Beastly Bore,' Pothlewaite's lectures aren't they?"

The patient may suddenly become aware of a sense of loss and insufficiency. Although he may at first attempt to disregard these rather vague symptoms, he is invariably attacked with sudden fits of lecturus presentarum, and passes through spells of unusual clousus attentio in the lecture room. An unnatural concern for the subject in question is evinced, and also a strong urge to acquire notus previus, preferably those of the brainus de curso. If there is not timus sufficio, or should the patient be suffering from double lecturus absentio or subjectus neglecto as well as a complete collapsio de notus systemis et examino preparis may result.

Another disease of the notus systemis is:

4. Notus omisus, also known as notus gapus, or nota notus.

This disease is often associated with subjectus neglecto and lecturus absentio, being characterized by a peculiar blankness of the notus, and often the complete absence of vital parts gives rises to the feelings of despair, hopelessness and loss common to these types of affliction. Notus borrows soon appears, followed by long periods of notus copianus and exhaustio examinis.

With all these afflictions, the time element is of the greatest importance, and the remedies, while normally effective may be useless if the patient is too far gone. An Aegrotat may be the only final remedy.

4th HHOA Concert

The fourth in the series of concerts sponsored by the Hart House Orchestra Associates will be held in the Great Hall this Sunday at 9:00 p.m.

The Hart House Orchestra, conducted by Boyd Neel, will play the Concerto in D Major by Mudge, Serenade by Dag Wiren and a Septet by Beethoven.

There will be one further concert this year, to be held on March 11, and one further lecture.

Plans for a series of concerts and lectures next year are now being considered by the associates.

The solitary student in favor said, "Yes, because it would save time travelling between lectures."

Two students, not in favor, thought the skyscraper university was inevitable.

"At the present time", said one, "the U of T can only go up."

SKYSCRAPER 'U' UNWANTED

No Boat Ride But Airplanes For Debaters

A plane ticket to Europe is the prize in this year's National Debating Finals, held at the University of Western Ontario, February 23rd, 24th, 25th.

"International Rivalry Still Holds more Promises than Threats for the Future of Mankind" is the topic in the contest, sponsored by the NFCUS Debating Association.

A decision has not yet been reached whether this trip to Europe will be awarded to a NFCUS team only, or to any team entered.

The winning team will also receive the McDonald-Laurier trophy, an emblem of debating excellence in Canada.

There will be four teams entered in the Finals, one from each of the four regions: Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and West. The Ontario debaters are Doug Wilkins and Dave Finlay, law students at Osgoode Hall in Toronto.

Osgoode is not a NFCUS member, hence Finlay and Wilkins may be ineligible to win.

Chairman of the Finals will be Doug Hammar of Western, with the Mayor of London Honorary Chairman, announced Ivan Cody, President of the NFCUS debating Association, Wednesday.

"Plans for the debates at Western," said Cody, "were running smoothly. Committees for the reception and entertainment of the visiting debaters have been formed and the interpreters and judges will be selected shortly."

Students Want Campus For Fresh Air, Trees; 'It Has More To Offer'

Picture the University of Toronto built as high as the empire state building on an average city block of property, with a fool-proof system of elevators, heating system in the basement, Simcoe Hall on the first floor, SAC offices and The Varsity on the second floor, a couple of floors to each college and each department, topped off by a penthouse student union.

A skyscraper university in this vein was advocated in an editorial appearing in Tuesday's Globe and Mail. Would you be in favor of it?

All but one out of twenty students questioned by The Varsity did not like the idea.

Most students objected because they thought a university should have a campus for various reasons.

"A campus has more to offer than when one is restricted to one building", said a student in IV M & P.

"I prefer a campus", replied a medman, "It has a pleasanter atmosphere, it has a tradition, and there is nothing like 'Philosophers' Walk."

One girl thought a skyscraper university un-aesthetic. "You've got to have trees to sit under," she said. "Trees add an atmosphere of learning. You can't have architectural beauty and skyscrapers."

A student of St. Michael's objected that a one-building institution would not fulfill the purpose of a university. "A University isn't just a crowding of people together, but a physical circulation which enables students to meet other students," he said.

Some students took the practical approach.

"I wouldn't want it unless the need for space were too great. Who would like to walk his girl up twenty flight of stairs?" asked one.

Said another: "Skyscrapers lend to a stifling atmosphere". And another: "Breath of fresh air is needed between lectures."

French, English Dispute Back As Lamontagne Lecture Topic

The French-English dualism of Canada will be discussed here again next Tuesday by the Modern History Club.

Professor Maurice Lamontagne, economic advisor to the office of the Privy Council in Ottawa, is the 1956 Gray Lecturer, and will deliver his discussion of "Some Aspects of French-English Relations in Canada" at 8.15 Tuesday night in Faloner Hall.

Last week's Hart House debate debated the same problem and decided that French Canada should not be absorbed by the rest of Canada.

The purpose of the Gray Lectures is "to foster a clearer understanding of the contribution that the French-Canadian element of our population has made and is making to Canada, in the hope that with wider knowledge a sounder Canadian citizenship may develop." First lecturer, in 1945, was the present Prime Minister of Canada, Louis St. Laurent.

Niebuhr Preaches Sunday In All-University Service

An outstanding American scholar and theologian, Dr. H. Richard Niebuhr, will preach here Sunday at the Fifth All-University Church Service. The morning service will be in the Great Hall at Hart House, at 11 Sunday.

Dr. Niebuhr is a leader in the move towards a more liberal, less dogmatic Protestant Christianity in North America and the world. He is at present Professor of Christian Ethics at Yale University, and as well the Director of the Study of Theological Education in Canada and the United States.

He received his advanced education at Washington University and at Yale, where he took his Ph.D. in 1924.

Staff and students, both male and female, are invited to the service.

Readers Call Queen's Paper Cheap Gutter Rag, Garbage

Kingston: (CUP) — The Arts Journal, special Arts Faculty issue of the Queen's Journal, was termed "cheap gutter rag," and "garbage" by some of its readers.

One reader said the Arts issue contained a "particularly vicious" piece, which would tend to bring disapproval to the whole university. The article under fire, entitled "What All Men Should Know About The Sport of Queen's," concerned the game of "Chesterfield Rugby," in which the unidentified writer said 96% of Queen's students engaged.

The editor of the Arts Journal, Jim Bethune, said that the appearance of the article was unfortunate, and apologized for the incident.

The article contained such lines as:

"Any male or female is eligible (to play chesterfield football . . . you must be willing to start at the bottom and work up . . . (before you start) make sure the playing field is clear of all non-competitors, since their presence will only mess up the plays and stop you from scoring . . . take 'em by surprise . . ."

USA Plans Space Satellite Willy Ley Predicts For '63 Russians Say They're First

Satellites carrying men into outer space will be in existence by 1963, a world rocket authority predicted on Saturday night. Mr. Willy Ley, pioneer in German rocket building, offered this forecast in a lecture to the Royal Institute in Convocation Hall.

Mr. Ley is at present engaged in the satellite-building program of the United States government. Plans are for this first satellite to be launched during the International Geophysical Year in 1957-8.

The American proposal was announced during the International Astronautical Congress in Copenhagen last summer. Two Russian scientists also present. Mr. Ley stated, "made a phone call — but did not say where to — and then announced their satellite would be fired before the American."

The satellite, Mr. Ley explained, would necessarily be a three-stage rocket. As rockets go, the first stage would be fairly large, he said. The important item was cost. All schemes submitted involved components already in existence, so that costs could be computed whenever consideration of them was needed.

This question, said Mr. Ley, smiling, came up with monotonous regularity.

The rocket will be fired with a vertical take-off. After 5 to 8 minutes of flight, it will be tilted in an easterly direction ("there is no political implication"). This is the way the earth turns, and the added peripheral speed will help the rocket.

The second stage would be fired from about 60,000 feet, and the exhausted part would fall to the earth, landing about 100 miles away from the firing site. For this reason, the site had been located in Florida, so that the falling parts would fall in the Atlantic Ocean.

The second stage would land about 900 miles out to sea, predicted Mr. Ley.

Although the size of the rocket itself had not been finally determined, he said, the satellite would be about 20 inches in diameter.

It would be detached from the third stage when the maximum height was reached, and both would stay up, circling the earth.

From both these satellites, one instrumented, the other not, scientists would be able to gather information in two ways. One set would be collected by instruments in the satellite, the other by observers on the ground.

Important information on cosmic rays, cosmic dust, and the earth's magnetic field would be gained in this fashion.

All this will be part of the International Geophysical Year, added Mr. Ley. It will last from July 1, 1957 until December 31, 1958. Many stations will be set up to observe up to ten various satellites which are being planned.

The American satellite will be visible to the naked eye, he said, under three conditions. First, it must be night. Secondly, the satellite must be in the rays of the sun and thirdly, it must be overhead.

In Toronto, it would be seen in a southerly direction.

Carabin Exchange Over As 43 Visit Montreal

By DAVE GREENSPAN

The eighth annual Varsity Carabin weekend at the University of Montreal exploded with its usual bang this last weekend. The forty Varsity students, each of whom lived with a French-Canadian family, unanimously agreed that Quebec's hospitality was justly famous throughout the world.

This exchange however, was not merely another version of a fall football weekend. Much more profound depths were sounded! This intimate contact between the two civilizations, French-Catholic Quebec and non-Catholic English Ontario, has produced as a very minimum result, greater mutual understanding among 86 individuals. But the maximum effect of this intimate contact is unlimited, because the future of Canada, as based on these two civilizations, is also unlimited.

Toronto students discovered that the means used to achieve this goal of greater Canadian unity through weekend exchanges has not been confined to mere intellectual discussions, although these of course formed the major factor in the program. Distinct from this intellectual means was the social means. For example, the Dow Corporation and the City of Montreal each sponsored a sumptuous banquet for the whole group.

The most lasting effect of this weekend, as of all previous Carabin weekends, will undoubtedly prove to be the understanding gained by Ontarians through living the actual day-to-day routine of a French-Canadian family.

The weekend program included a day's skiing at Mont Gabriel, a cocktail party, two banquets, visits to famous hotels and bars, and discussion groups.

Topics in the discussions were "The definition of culture," "The economic and social aspects of culture — are contemporary scientists trying to explain too much in terms of their own interests?" and "The role of the specialist, in an overall broad culture."

"Stupendous" said one of the Torontonians, "Stupendous is the only word, in fact, stupendous squared."

Girl's Operation Postponed Twice

Heart surgery for Lynn Davidge, the three-year-old girl for whom forty-six University of Toronto students volunteered the uncommon ORh negative blood, has been postponed due to pneumonia.

The students responded to an ad placed in The Varsity asking for blood donors.

Lynn contracted pneumonia while playing with other children in the nursery. She is now confined to her own room and, although quite weak is recovering.

The little girl will undergo surgery designed to repair two holes in the wall of her heart. The operation, which has been cancelled twice, will now take place on Thursday, February 9.

Seven students will be available during the eight-hour operation. The names of the donors and information about the progress of the operation will be available at a later date.

The little girl's condition was described as critical last night.

Corpuscular

Nurses Are Giving, All Are Still Living

A bloody story is told on pages six and seven of this morning's Varsity.

The facts on next week's blood campaign are there — what happens when you give blood, what happens when you receive a blood transfusion, and how the blood is processed.

This year's university Blood Drive starts a week from today, on February 13, and goes on until the end of the week. Most donations will be taken at the School of Nursing's new building on St. George St. Donors may also bleed at the Red Cross Clinic on College St., at specified times.

A new system of competition has been instituted, said Josephine Flaherty (IV Nursing), chairman of the university Campaign Committee. This year, the faculty with the highest percentage of its students over eighteen giving Blood wins the Blood Trophy. If the Red Cross finds a donor's blood is anemic, it will not be taken, but his faculty will be credited for the donation anyway.

Last year, faculties were asked to select quotas and work towards them. Several faculties wound up with more than 100 percent of their quotas.

The Red Cross supplies three Toronto hospitals with all their blood, said Miss Flaherty. These are Sunnybrook, Weston San and the North-Western General.

Sixty-two percent of the blood used at Sunnybrook last year came from the U of T. Twelve percent of the total blood used at the three hospitals was contributed by Varsity students.

"You can see," added the committee chairman, "that without the campus campaign, the Red Cross would be pretty well destitute."

For members of those faculties who cannot get to the clinic at the School of Nursing, special arrangements will be made.

There are 1,630 possible appointments available.

Last year there were approximately 1,100 donations. This year, the committee would like at least 1,500 donors.

For more information on blood giving, see pages six and seven.

Nude Desecrated At Whitney Hall; Culprit Unknown

A nude was desecrated late last night in the quadrangle of Whitney Hall, University College women's residence.

The girl had been standing for some time in the quadrangle. She had no arms, and her legs were almost shapeless. She now lies in pieces on the ground. She was made of snow. (See Picture This Page).

The statue was built Sunday afternoon, by an ambitious co-ed from University College. It was about eight feet tall, and was described as "a sort of Venus de Milo" because of her lack of arms and legs.

A Whitney Hall girl heard a group of students breaking the statue down. Other students said it probably happened between 5:45 and 8:00 last night.

The nude was this year's first snow sculpture. Snow sculpture is "the only mass exhibition of artistic talent on the campus," said a Trinity student. "There will probably be more."

Snow nudes of other years have come in all shapes and sizes, and in various locations. There have been nudes smoking cigars, and nudes fifteen feet long. Some have been lying down. Nudes have guarded the Library. The nude that appeared last in front of Hart House was interpreted as meaning "frustration" by a psychology professor.

There have been nudes in front of residences, and nudes in front of fraternities.

Skaters, Debaters And All Go To McGill's Carnival

Toronto students are expected en masse at this year's McGill Winter Carnival, in Montreal, February 16-18. Skiers, debaters, skaters, and dancers are going. There is still room for students who just wish to ski or enjoy the carnival, said Peter Schlesinger (U.C.). Two acts from Skule Nite 576 will represent Toronto at McGill's "Show of College Shows" Saturday afternoon. Seven other universities are taking part.

The $250.00 carnival also has a skating show. Toronto students Barb Jakes and Doug Court will be featured.

Toronto is sending two debaters to compete with twenty other universities from Canada and the U.S. in the Winter Carnival Debating Conference.

On the Friday of the carnival, ten universities, including Toronto, will compete in an International Ski Meet, at Mont Gabriel, near Montreal. There will be downhill, cross-country, slalom and jumping events.

For other skiers, trains leaving Montreal on Friday and Saturday mornings will allow about five and a half hours riding each day at St. Sauveur.

Trains leave Toronto at 4:00 p.m. on Thursday and Friday for the Carnival. Special rate is $12.90 return. More information is available from Peter Schlesinger at MA. 4209.

Big US Space Satellite

(Continued from Page 1) Eventually the sphere will lose momentum and spiral into the earth's atmosphere and be burnt up by friction as it falls, attracted by the earth's gravitational field. Scientists will observe closely what happens at this stage, so that it will not happen again.

A man-ship could then be designed to go out into space. This would be able to return after circling the earth. He said this might happen from three to five years after the International Geophysical Year.

A satellite, even with a TV camera, would be no use for military purposes, claimed Mr. Ley. "It would at best, be able to show the location of a large city at night" he said.

One of the satellites, physicists hoped, would stay up permanently, circling the earth for ever.

It would be seen as a faint star, and would not attract attention, except that it would move from horizon to horizon in about 12 minutes.

"When you see it, do not think it is something left over from the International Geophysical Year; it is a sign that much more is to come," concluded Mr. Ley.

OUR READERS WRITE:

No Shame Attached

The Editor, The Varsity: This letter is by way of an apology for and an explanation to some members of my sex who obviously need a little education on a few basic items.

First of all, there are two genders in all living organisms, male and female. Second, these genders are manifested in the two different sexes which are differently constructed such that one cannot take the place of the other or function in the same manner as the other, nor should anyone think or pretend that they ought. The fact that they are differently constructed is no cause for embarrassment, laughter or smut, but it is a fact that should be recognised and understood.

The only reason for any shame connected with this situation is the unalterability of one's gender coupled with an inability to accept fully the meaning of being that way. If one is a female, one should wear one's sex proudly, not hide behind a mask of Victorian blushes and taboos. There are things about being a woman that are not perhaps the most convenient in the world, but there are just as many compensations, and one must take the bitter with the sweet and accept the fact that this is the way things were meant to be.

This is not to condone the martyr who staunchly tries to ignore the inconveniences, nor on the other hand is it to condemn the person who complains. Keep silence if you will, grumble if you will, but for heaven's sake, if you are a woman, don't try to pretend that you are no different from a man, and don't point the finger of shame and censure at those who openly declare their sex.

Rob Davies At HH To Talk Literature

Mr. Robertson Davies, noted general discussion on literature and letters. At present Mr. Davies is editor of the Peterborough Examiner and a member of the editorial board of Saturday Night magazine. He is also a judge in The Varsity's Literary Contest.

Campus Writers Discuss Work

Campus writers met last Thursday to read their work, criticize it, and discuss. A three hour meeting of the Modern Letters Club ended in a discussion of other, well-known, and established non-campus writers.

Discussion leader was Professor Priestley of the university. Both poetry and prose were read by the students.

"We usually meet about twice a year, to find out what writers on campus are doing," said Arnold Rockman, chairman of the club. The next club meeting will be in two weeks at Falconer Hall.

A graduate of Queen's and Oxford he was an actor in the Old Vic Repertory Company and a teacher in the Old Vic School in England, before returning to Canada in 1938.

This Library Evening has been declared a special occasion, so that women may attend the talk and the discussion after.

Shortage?

Well over 60 firms have visited this campus to seek out Commerce and Finance graduates for employment. Many firms want several graduates.

There are 39 students in the graduating year.

The Varsity's 75th Anniversary

Praise And Censure

By ROBERT BROWN

The Varsity is 75 years old—and people are noticing it.

The special 48 page 75th anniversary issue that this U of T student paper put out last November to celebrate its continuous survival since 1880, has excited considerable comment—both favorable and otherwise.

Perhaps the most favorable notice was taken by The Carleton, the student newspaper of Carleton University in Ottawa. The Ottawa paper said in part:

"Last week the University of Toronto's undergraduate daily celebrated its 75th anniversary ...

"The editors of The Carleton would like to take this opportunity to salute The Varsity, an endeavour that stands out as a great institution for all the students in this country. It seems to us that this newspaper has always stood for what is best, and has maintained a consistently high standard over its 75 years.

"Its words have been heard not only throughout the university but beyond, by sensible persons in public life. The Varsity can say with pride that it has fulfilled its duties to society with great ability."

But a different note was struck by Champion, the official publication of the Labor Youth movement, which is generally regarded as communist-led.

Champion had this to say:

"The chequered history of The Varsity shows the paradox of a university in a bourgeois society. Five or six editors were fired and the paper suspended as many times because the search for objective and scientific truth did not coincide with service to the status quo.

"(The paper did reveal) a tradition of non-conformism and critical attitudes by large sections of students, their opposition to reaction, and a healthy fight for democratic student self-government.

"By comparison, the 1955 editorial staff does not have the backbone of some of its predecessors. Perhaps it is still suffering from the effects of the cold war intimidation on campus. Its criticism and leadership on contemporary student problems, such as overcrowding, the financial crisis of our universities, and the future of our country, as an independent nation is feeble, to say the least."

Steve Endicott, the Champion staffer who wrote the article, ended by echoing the suggestion of a former Varsity editor:

"The Varsity today is entirely too polite. Get an editor fired or expelled and keep up the old traditions."

The Queen's Journal, this year's winner of The Southam Trophy struck a tone of moderate praise for excellence among CUP papers, in its comments:

"It is difficult, sometimes impossible, for a university newspaper to always render 'an honest and independent appraisal of university life.' But it is an ideal which every university paper must have in mind at all times. We feel that The Varsity has always been honest in its attempts to observe this ideal. We take this opportunity to congratulate them on their past achievements, and to wish them success for the future."

But the final word was had by the Dal Gazette, the student newspaper of Dalhousie University, Nova Scotia. The Gazette icily commented that, after looking over the anniversary issue's record of 75 years of Varsity publication, it thought that the paper 75 years ago was far better than the present one.

HOCKEY BLUES DUMP CARABINS 5-3

Centremen Anderson Hits Twice Win Puts Varsity On Top Alone Tackle Aroused Redmen Friday

By JOHN WILSON

With the visiting University of Montreal Carabins a man short in the opening minute of the third period Varsity's ice Blues slammed in two quick goals, eclipsing an earlier U of M lead, then added two more midway in the frame before the Frenchmen could answer; slipping into first place in the race for the Queen's Cup.

Possession of the top spot appears permanent, as McGill thumped Laval 12-4 in Montreal Saturday night. Blues are now ahead of the Rouge et Or, with 12 points, and can increase their lead this weekend when McGill will be visitors on Toronto ice. Laval is idle for the first time this season.

Centre Brian Anderson turned in a workhorse effort, capped with two goals, while Ken Linseman, John Akitt and Sandy Morrison added singles, Maurice Duhaime, Pierre Renaud and Gerard Houle were marksmen for the Carabins.

Blues were about even with Montreal in the first frame, taking an early lead midway in the period when Anderson slapped in a loose puck left by Red Stephen after a colorful rush. But Carabins evened it up with seconds left in the opening stanza with Sam Ashton off for tripping. Duhaime broke in on Fleming alone from the right side and bounced the puck off his pads to the net.

Badly outmaneuvered in the second frame, Blues seemed to have trouble organizing an attack. A screened shot found the Varsity net at the eight-minute mark off the stick of Houle, and Blues appeared to fold after that. Carabins took over and outshot the home team 14-5 but couldn't beat Fleming on several dangerous thrusts.

The third period was barely under way when Maurice Lamoureux left the ice for interference. Linseman capitalized on the opportunity, scoring from the face-off, then set up Akitt moments later on a fast-breaking passing play.

Morrison deked the usually wary Houle five minutes later and broke in on Guevremont uncovered for the cleanest goal of the night. Now comfortably in the lead, the Blues settled for one more when Anderson picked up a loose puck from the face-off and flipped it under Guevremont's legs.

Linseman and Jean-Marc Tremblay had been thumbed only seconds before for fighting, and the two teams played five a side for the balance of the game.

Renaud added a nightcap at the fifteen minute mark from a scramble in front of the Blue net and the scoring was completed.

Referee Ralph Anderson handed out 44 minutes in penalties, 21 to the Blues and 23 to the Carabins. That makes the University of Montreal the badmen of the league with 131 minutes in penalties in seven games. The Blues have only 87 in seven contests.

McGill Redmen make their second appearance of the year, this Friday, in search of their second league victory. The Tribe appear to have improved tremendously and can be expected to put up a fight Friday night. Toughest game for the seniors will be a week this Friday when Laval again are visitors. On the outcome of that contest will depend the title to a very great extent.

Volleyball Girls Fifth In Intercol Tourney

The Toronto volleyball team by Miss Vandervit played their first game against McGill at McMaster University Friday evening. Unfortunately, the team had been practicing non-rotation, a system which was discontinued this year in the tournament. This gave the girls a terrific handicap to start with, nevertheless, the team work was excellent. Pat Dugit, Honey Wiseman, and Noreen Maniscola were outstanding in their spiking, and returns were made rapidly. Toronto was ahead at half time 14-10; however, McGill regained full strength and won 28-24.

This defeat still didn't faze the girls' spirit as they went on to play their next game against Queen's Joan Galley played well in returning the ball to Queen's with Deidre Rae and Marge Houle making several spikes for Toronto. Lita Bardins also did excellent work in blocking. Nevertheless, Queen's strategy pulled them through to a winning victory of 31-21.

A party for all the teams followed in the Alumni Hall where they were entertained by the McMaster girls.

On Saturday morning, Toronto faced its biggest challenge against Western which claimed first place in the tournament. Toronto played very hard with Bev Davidson supporting the defensive, but Western players and their coach same experience and won to a smashing score of 47-9.

The fourth game brought Toronto to their first win over O.A.C. 33-20. Pat Duzit and Ada Mcpherson scored several points with their powerful serves, and Sandy Grant performed well in block net.

The last game was exceptionally close with McMaster winning 30-25. Consequently, Western placed first, Queen's second, McMaster third, McGill fourth, Toronto fifth, and O.A.C. sixth. The McMaster girls concluded the round robin tournament with a lovely banquet served in the Alumni Hall for the teams and coaches.

Toronto's fighting spirit was always felt, and with more practice we could have a winning team next year.

Cage 2nds Win Edging Queen's

Id Rigby scored 20 points on Friday to pace Varsity intermediates to a 69-59 win over Queen's seconds. The victory gave the Baby Blues a 4-1 record in league play.

After holding a 26-20 half-time lead, Toronto led off the second half by scoring 11 consecutive points. This into a 17-point lead. Queen's kept picking away at the lead and cut it down to ten at the final whistle.

Rigby was the big gun in the first half, when he tallied 14 of his 20 points. He used a jump shot and a one-handed push to score his most valuable points.

Other high scorers for Toronto were Dave Sproul with 12 Gary Vandenbrouk with 11 and Ed Ridd with 10. Dave Sproul and Gary Vandenbrouk teamed Queen's seconds with 13 and 12 respectively.

Queen's had a lot of difficulty in getting the ball in and were forced to do most of their shooting from the outside. Only their outside shooting success kept them in the game.

Goldring and Vipond did their usual fine rebounding jobs and were instrumental in preventing Queen's from taking close-in shots.

Great Show in Hart House Frogmen Featured in Pool

There was something to suit every taste during Friday's Athletic Night activities. In addition to the two feature basketball games there were boxing exhibitions, frogmen demonstrations, a film showing the highlights of the Big Four football season, a water polo game and in addition to all this, an exhibition of work on the parallel bars by the Varsity Gym team.

In the boxing action, in the 130 pound class Bruce McMurchy of S.P.S. won a split decision over Dave Marsh of Skule. In another bout, this time in the 145 pound class Bill Taylor of S.P.S. out-fought his Skule-mate Val Spring for a split decision victory. The other bouts on the card were no-decision affairs.

Meanwhile over in the Hart House pool the Varsity water polo team lost to a strong Etobicoke Swim Club group by a score of 17-6. Plunkte and Staumac were best for the winners with 6 goals apiece. Bob Richards helped keep Varsity in the game with a contribution of three goals.

The most unusual feature of the night was the Frogman demonstration given by the Underwater Club of Canada. Those attending were treated with examples of underwater swimming with and without fins; use of the snorkel mask and the aqua-lung; spear fishing; underwater photography and an explanation of such safety aids as the "buddy" system. Demonstrators of both sexes took part in the colorful show. The Frogman show went over well with the crowd in attendance, and it is hoped that they can come back for another show in the near future.

UC Tops Dents In Cage Action

In one of the most surprising reverses of form to date, UC Juniors beat Dents A 45-28 in basketball action. The previously winless UC team, sparked by Howie Dick, looked sharp in every department.

Dick scored 16 points, mainly on set shots from way out and also checked fiercely all over the floor to intercept many Dents passes. Nisher and Turak with nine apiece and Winer with six also sparked the UC attack.

Speedy Jerry Gray with eight points was high man for the losers. Close behind was Kopei with six and Lampert and Jarover with four apiece. Gray scored mainly on jump shots and was the Dentists chief threat. Besides leading the fast-break he displayed a fine checking game.

For the Arsmen, Danny Turack and Carl Winer did a fine job on the rebounds. The UC team looked strong enough on Friday to beat the powerful league-leading Entomologists and their encounter should be interesting.

Sports Staff

The Sports Staff of The Varsity is deeply requested to note that there will be a rather important meeting in the office today, Monday, February 6th, at 1:15 p.m. For purposes of complete co-operation as far as the future is concerned, it is highly conducive that the following gentlemen drop in for five minutes at appointed time: Howie Mandell, Arnie Englander, Stan Weisman, Hush Milman, John Vojtech, Al Toton. We are also in desperate need of one more reporter to give us a hand along the hockey line.

Basketball Blues Trample Gaels Dacyshyn Stars In 98-59 Win

This season the Varsity Blues scoring punch has been strangely feeble. We say "strangely" because the Blues, in John Dacyshyn, Pete Potter, Leo Madden, John Sheppard and Rubie Richman, have a quintet that should make them a high scoring aggregation. However, instead of all five clicking together, each has been taking turns in coming up with good games. Last Friday was a different story as four of the five hit double figures, with the result that the Blues unleashed their heaviest scoring barrage of the year and swamped Queen's 98-59.

For the second consecutive game Dacyshyn potted 21 points to tip all scorers. Madden and Potter scored 16 each, while Sheppard, Hesh Rotman and Vic Kurdyak all chimed in with 11. Florian Matsalla with ten was the seventh Blue to make the double figures column. Jerry Edelist rounded out the Toronto scoring by hooping two points. Richman, handicapped when he broke his glasses failed to tally Jim Harrison was best for the Golden Gaels with 17 points.

Dacyshyn, after sinking eight points in the first half, came back to hoop 13 in the last stanza when Varsity outscored Queen's 55-29. The first half score was 43-30. John was a terror on the boards as he made most of his points by tapping in rebounds. Matsalla and Sheppard were also notable for their rebounding.

Potter and Madden, putting their poor Yeshiva games behind them, dazzled the opposition with a fine exhibition of dribbling, passing and shooting. Both were shooting well from the outside and frequently drove by their checks. Potter showed amazing accuracy with his jump shot from within the key.

Varsity played an alert defensive game, as they intercepted passes and made the most of every Queen's mistake. The Gaels played a poor game and may well be lucky to come up with a win this season.

Only coach John McManus' benevolence prevented the Blues from reaching the century mark. With three and a half minutes to play, Varsity led 98-55. McManus told his boys to shoot but to weave the ball for the remainder of the tilt. While the crowd boomed, Edelist and Richman deliberately missed four shots. Apparently McManus did not wish to humiliate Queen's and coach Frank Tindall.

Short Shots . . . In the first half, Kurdyak made seven points all foul shots . . . Varsity were charged with 20 penalties while the Gaels committed 33 on their own. Three fouled out and one was thrown out for rough play.

toronto the good

The fact that there has been so great a reaction to the editorial entitled "A Woman's Eye View" only demonstrates to us that an editorial was needed far more urgently on another subject: on what might be termed social immaturity.

We had naively given credit to students of the University of Toronto for being able to talk about such subjects without embarrassment. If we had realized this subject was taboo, we would have directed the editorial against the taboo, instead of discussing a tangent, a single aspect.

Is it not strange that Ontario's capital, Canada's second largest city should remain the longest in the clutches of an entrenched and blinkered puritanism?

Visiting students from McMaster, an officially Baptist University, did not respond either with a shocked hush or a knowing leer.

The reactions from our own campus have been as childish as those of thirteen-year-olds giggling through the love scenes in Romeo and Juliet. The letters we have received have been for the most part inconsequential, letters that laugh because they refuse to face up. And many people have not written only because they were too embarrassed to discuss the subject at all. None of the intelligent criticisms that could legitimately have been made were offered.

And Toronto is also the place; let us not forget, where musicians cannot play on Sundays unless it is for a network or a church.

Toronto is also the place which gets the most vicarious pleasure out of sex deviates and other scandal. Sensational self-righteousness is a best-seller here.

Scandal and prudery are like the chicken and the egg. It is hard to know which precedes which. The only certain thing is that without the chicken there'd be no egg, and without the egg . . .

Students are always being told they must not fall into the same traps as the ungraduated masses. And quite rightly.

Where there is no social maturity in the future "leaders of men," what hope is there that the rest of Toronto will grow up?

riding the tide

We were not surprised to learn that the usual dismal fate has been accorded the perennial attempt to induce the federal government to make some added provision for aid to university students. The casual manner in which this motion was defeated in the Commons, however, provides a rather sad commentary on the current Liberal government.

It has never been said that the Liberals, grown fat and sleek from their many years in office, were quick to seize the initiative. The institution of a national health program, an official part of the Liberal platform since 1919, only now seems to be a definite possibility.

To give them their due, the Liberals do act eventually on pressing problems. But they seem to move only with the tide, taking infinite pains to ride the crest of public opinion, and never to lead it.

The current action of the Liberal majority in muzzling the student scholarship question shows how little they realize the vast need in Canada for trained and educated personnel, or to what extent financial difficulties obstruct worthwhile students from entering universities.

The Liberals are bound to realize this sooner or later, but when they do, will it be too late for Canada?

a woman's eye view

A Second Look

The following is a discussion of some points raised by the editorial in last Wednesday's issue.

By WENDY MICHENER

We have heard numerous objections. Let us consider them seriously.

Some have objected on the grounds that this subject should not be discussed in print. It should be reserved for hen-sessions in a class with discussions of how John kissed me last week.

Others have objected on the grounds that this subject was not important enough to be discussed in an editorial column. This matter should be confined to medical journals on a par with discussions about symptoms of diarrhea and constipation.

Others have objected because the subject is somehow connected with sex, and therefore dirty.

The first, who object to the subject matter, we would class as prudes. These people are still infested with a sense of shame about a phenomenon that is not only natural, like breast-feeding, but full of dignity, something that is of the very fibre of a woman's nature. They have been taught to regard what is perhaps the most influential single factor in a woman's life as something to be hidden, or ridiculed. Witness the student who wrote a letter to the editor enclosing a sanitary belt. The time has passed when a woman must be locked away in a dark room for a few days each month, but the mediaeval aura of superstition has not entirely gone.

The second, who object to it as an editorial, have missed the point—possibly because it was stated indirectly and the ideas implied rather than put forth a,b,c. Anything which makes some point, suggestion, clarification about a matter which can be of concern or have application to a fair number of students is worthy of consideration in the editorial column of a student newspaper.

Woman's menstruation is neither an individual physical disfigurement, nor a phenomenon with merely physical implications, such as constipation. It is this more than anything which makes a woman what she is and which makes her whole psychology different from that of a man. We were trying in the editorial to reveal a situation which many men do not understand, and thus do not take into account. But we were also trying to contrast difference in the patterns which govern the lives of men and women. This difference is the reason why women have occupied an "inferior" place in history, why they have been considered inconstant.

Women are inconstant. Even women who are not conscious of any physical pain at this time are regulated psychologically by the cycle. They are identified with the eternal renewing cycles in nature, the tides in the ocean, the changing seasons, the succeeding generations. Whereas a man maintains a fairly level kind of existence, a woman finds herself carried along as on the crest of a wave, and then suddenly let down, floundering.

This difference between men and women, much more than the outward physical difference always referred to in dirty jokes, is the difference which puts a block between their full appreciation of one another. It needs to be understood and taken into account for a harmonious relationship between man and woman. Who can say that a subject which has such far-reaching effects in the life of every human being is not important enough to be discussed?

The third class of objectors, who found it indecent, have dirty minds. For them any discussion of sexual matter is so cluttered with crude associations that they are incapable of finding any dignity or beauty in it. They cannot see that man need not copulate as the animals, that his dignity of nature can, and should carry over into this as into other activities.

These people also do not realize that the traditional cheesecake picture, the sly innuendoes to which they have become accustomed hold far more of the obscene than a forthright discussion.

OUR READERS ROAR:

A Doctor's Eye View

The Editor; The Varsity:

I was most interested to read the editorial entitled, "A Woman's Eye View", which you recently published.

I sincerely hope that this was written by a freshman, or at worst, a sophomore. I hope also that before graduation she will have learned that most human beings are plagued, some seldom, some regularly and some frequently, by mental and physical discomforts from which there is no certain or permanent means of relief.

Some of these are peculiar to one or other sex, some are common to both; they are part of the struggle for existence. Many of the greatest successes achieved by both men and women have been in spite of severely disabling and constricting symptoms, and the ability to ignore handicaps while achieving a goal is one of the measures of true greatness.

May I suggest a Philosophical option, with particular reference to the relationships between pain and suffering and human progress?

Most sincerely yours,

H. Clark Balmer, M.D.,
Medicine, '37.

Pitiful Excuse

The Editor; The Varsity:

Obviously the writer of Wednesday's editorial "A Woman's Eye View" was suffering from the "Painful privilege of being a woman", when she penned that pitiful excuse for an editorial. Perhaps the "blunt throbs in her belly" explain her lack of inspiration for material.

Despite the fact that it sounded rather like an advertisement for "Midol", isn't it ironic that in the very next column, was an article on sex deviation, the tendency of "news starved papers" to emphasize the lower biological failings of humans should be pointed out?

J. Saunders,
I Trinity

The Editor, The Varsity:

In reference to the editorial of February 1, 1956, "The Devaluated B.A.":

Having sequestered ourselves for a fleeting moment from the hordes of hungry employers, we of the graduating class of Commerce and Finance, after long and serious consideration and with great personal sacrifice are offering our services in a consultative capacity with a view to finding employment for any unfortunate but particularly well-rounded B.A. types.

Re: the editorial appearing in Wednesday's Varsity entitled A Women's Eye View.

We would like to suggest to the author of the aforementioned article that if she really experienced such feelings she must be one in a million. Perhaps she had better make use of one of the very adequate university facilities, namely, the Health Service.

We feel that this article was a gross exaggeration and in extremely poor taste. The writer's symptoms do not represent a true cross-section of those of the female population of this campus.

No Devaluation Here

The Editor, The Varsity:

I regret that the lead editorial in your issue of February 1st fosters a traditional misconception that seems to be common on both sides of the university wall.

Instead of a "devaluation" of a B.A. degree, on the date of publication of your editorial, formal schedules of appointments were available with twenty employers who had specified a general background of Liberal Arts as one of the courses from which they were interested in obtaining men.

Notices of these openings had been sent to the Registrars' offices of each college for posting. Only fourteen Arts graduates in their final year had made application for an interview. Some of the companies had no applicants at all.

This office has observed an increasing interest in the Humanities among employers as years go on. However, if opportunities offered to the campus are allowed to go without investigation, I feel that succeeding graduating years may, indeed, find that employers have ceased to make the effort of soliciting an unresponsive Liberal Arts body.

helen spicer

Helen Spicer's midweek Hart House concert displayed an unusual range of talent and topic, with the mezzo-soprano's choices ranging from O Gott Wie Bitter to Hammerstein's A Wonderful Guy. And the audience obviously appreciated all of them.

The six songs from Foulenc's Le Bestiaire, with which Miss Spicer opened the program, revealed some difficulty in establishing the recital rapport between soloist and audience. As she gained confidence, the soloist's full and resonant voice was soon able to convey fully the dramatic qualities of her songs. In O Gott Wie Bitter, the third of Vier Ernste Gesänge, Miss Spicer was at her best, warm- and clear-toned, and with impeccable diction. A selection from musical comedy and from the Classical Songs of Obradors brought out Miss Spicer's talent for acting. Her mimetic manner formed a faint but pleasing background, often present but never disturbing. One part of the background—the accompaniment—tended occasionally to be over-forceful, but generally fitted in as admirably as the rest of the concert.

One the whole, the program (and the way it was presented) was stimulating and invigorating in freshness of approach. More soloists like Helen Spicer should appear at Hart House.

courage, mother ...

Trinity Goes Brecht

"War is hell." This was surely the thought in Bertolt Brecht's mind when he wrote Mother Courage. Played against a backdrop of the Thirty Years' War (1618-48), this outstanding chronicle of the little people in this war, or for that matter in any war, vividly and often horrendously depicts the terrible suffering which is inflicted upon the great portion of any population when it is engaged in all-out war.

Mother Courage, written before World War II, and produced for the first time in English in 1946, will be presented in its Canadian premiere by the Trinity College Dramatic Society at Hart House from Wednesday to Saturday of this week.

The outstanding feature of Mother Courage is what it portrays: the type of people generally associated with a war of this nature, and yet succeeds in personalizing each character. While the nature and inclinations of each of the characters is no different from their counterparts in either World War, they are yet individuals who have been hurled into the maelstrom of total war and have suffered immeasurably for it. In spite of Brecht's noted iconoclastic tendencies, the sufferings of his characters, the warmth and humanity of the present piece illustrate the full-lest of human emotions. Viennese-born Joseph Furst, with his extensive European training, directs this piece of "epic theatre." At present, Mr. Furst is associated with the CBC, the Crest Theatre, and the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Julianna Gianelli, who played the title role in last year's Hart House production of The House of Bernarda Alba, plays the title role of Mother Courage. Miss Gianelli in her undergraduate days was one of the leading actresses in campus productions. As Mother Courage, she plays the role of a strong-willed provisioner in the baggage train of the Swedish army. Mother Courage's suitors, a Dutch cook and a Protestant chaplain, are portrayed by John Wilson and James Mainprize. Miss Margaret Hogarth plays Mother Courage's mute daughter Catherine, while Miss Deone Griffiths portrays the army prostitute.

The play itself is unusual in that it consists of a series of short episodes rather than long scenes. The stage design, extremely simple yet fully appreciative of the play's symbolical nature, and tragic movement is created by Astrid Weyman.

Kate Visits Village

The audience came into the room mostly on crutches and in wheel chairs, and waited quietly for the entertainment. The entertainment was the chorus and the principals from Kiss Me Kate, soon to be produced at Hart House theatre by University College. The place was Variety Village, a school for handicapped young men, dramatically set on a hilltop at the juncture of Kingston Road and Danforth.

Although the program of selections had to be altered at the last moment when the male lead was forced to stay home to recover from his cold, the program went quickly and smoothly. The handicapped kids were a responsive audience. Reacting to the cast gave a spirited performance. Although many professional entertainers are received at the Village, one of the officials said he thought the visit of the UC players one of the best.

After a little initial shyness the cast and the men of the village got to know each other over man-size Pastrami sandwiches and coffee. Some played ping pong with the musical director and with the producer. I know the cast would like to go back again next year. We hope they'd like us back.

Mozart Cycle—Full Circle

Before attempting to review last week's three Mozart Cycle concerts at the Royal Conservatory, given by the Paganini Quartet, part of the last review is printed to avoid charges of inconsistency.

"The artists have, had much experience in music-making, to which these performances and their recordings bear witness. It is the privilege of those who attend these concerts at the Conservatory to be infected by the understanding, communication, and enthusiasm that exists between the players and their music."

If any of these elements' is missing, then the privilege is indeed doubtful. We felt that the Cycle was being played more as a bi-centennial duty than a celebration. It was a tribute in so far as it enabled us to hear so many works at first and expert hands. We were grateful for this opportunity to have heard the legendary Paganini Quartet. We could not deny their technical proficiency, nor their ability to play as one unit rather than as a group of individuals. Yet somewhere the group was lacking. Apart from a few heaven-sent moments, they seemed singularly uninspired.

The works played were written between 1783 and 1790, with one exception written in 1777 Thursday's performance of the Quartet K 428 was exactly as suggested, competent but uninspired. The only indication of the comedy supposed to permeate the last movement of the K 590 Quartet was a mild grin on the artists' faces as they bowed to their audiences. The Piano Quartet K 478 produced the best response from the audience. Boris Roubakine injected sufficient life into an evening that otherwise would have been dull.

The same goes for Friday. A tinge of pathos was infused into the minuet of K 464, but the trio could have been much more alive. The K 589 Quartet opened well, but failed to hold the attention or reveal any warmth or affection. Promised tenderness in the Larghetto was absent. There were flashes of wit in the minuet, but the trio revealed a common flaw. A phrase stated by the first violin would be taken up by the rest of the ensemble with diminishing zest. The supposedly Haydn-esque finale just didn't scamper. Once more Boris Roubakine came to the rescue. The Piano Quartet K 493 was carried along by deft piano playing. Lucien Laporte excelled upon the 'cello. The quartet did not lend full support in the sensuous Larghetto, but made amends in the rondo-finale.

The Quartet K 499 opened Saturday's concert. The melody of the Minuet, placed before the Adagio, was well brought out, but this positioning and the contrapuntal nature of the finale did not make for a happy ending. The monotony of the Quartet K 421 was relieved only by Mozart's charming minuet and trio. The playing did, however, lack that caprice which is always excusable in classical (i.e. pre-Beethoven) chamber music.

The Divertimento in E flat

major, K 287 was a happy exception. Its concerto-like conception gave Mr. Temianka occasion to display that virtuosity which earned him such just applause in his Hart House concert last October. Sir Thomas Beecham, Bart., uses the first Minuet of the K 287 Divertimento to replace the second of the K 131 Divertimento. To have heard the former played with full orchestra under his baton is a wonderful experience. If the smaller forces of Saturday could not compete in this movement, they were completely successful in the Adagio and actually infused gaiety into the last movement. Mary Barrow and Eugene Kitchich played the horns and Richard Wood the double bass.

It would seem that the Quartet would do well to freshen their approach to Mozart. If there had been deeper feeling for the emotional and sensuous parts of his music then their qualities might indeed have infected the audience. As things were, it was probably those following the Cycle through eyes glued to a score who obtained greatest satisfaction.

Martial Mitchell

In many ways, The Court Martial of Billy Mitchell, now running at Sheas, is a refreshing exception to the stock Hollywood biography that usually paints a distorted over-idealized picture of the hero. Fortunately, the scriptwriters of this film have avoided falling into this trap, though they still tend to depict Mitchell as a superman.

Mitchell seems to have been a man who was remarkably ahead of his time. During the twenties, he was one of the few who could see the potentialities of air power. In order to expose the short-sighted fashion in which the army was mismanaging the air force, he brought upon himself a court martial.

In the inherent interest of this story (told without any attempt to whitewash the army) lie most of the film's good qualities. In addition, there is some good acting in the minor roles especially by Rod Steiger, who makes an all too brief appearance as an assistant prosecutor of the most nasty variety.

Unfortunately, Gary Cooper plays the main role with his usual immobility of expression, in direct contradiction to the character of Billy Mitchell who embroiled himself in the politico-military issue of the twenties. It seems that when Hollywood wishes a sincere and moving performance it inevitably calls upon one of that small group of aging actors whose acting abilities are inversely proportional to their screen longevity.

The reality of the issues both in those days and today, coupled with the fact that the movie was almost entirely composed of interior shots, made it completely unsuitable for cinemascope.

Despite this film, though not a particularly memorable one, is worth seeing if one wishes to escape from the oppressive atmosphere of impending exams and have an evening of cinematic relaxation.

How I Gave Blood For The UofT

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

The School of Nursing building is new, modern, bright. The colours are designed to harmonize with one's mood and one's work. I was told to report there one afternoon last February, to give blood and keep the honour of my faculty.

Downstairs, I waited in line in a green anteroom. A light green colour, designed to soothe the eyes and (perhaps) the mind. The ten people in line stood. They talked occasionally. They shifted from one foot to another.

The nurse was clean, dressed in white, business-like, the way you think of nurses. She showed us where to leave our coats, then left us waiting.

Outside, the snow had gone, and everything through the windows looked muddy.

Another efficient nurse told us that giving blood wouldn't hurt. She gave all ten a Coke, and left.

The next nurse I saw pushed a pin into my finger. She squeezed a drop of blood out, looked at it, then dropped it into a big jar—full of other drops of blood. They wouldn't take my blood if it floated, she said. She had a blue uniform, light blue, with a Red Cross sign on one sleeve.

Someone else told me it'd be easy. Simple process. Painless. A nurse took me into the Nursing School's experimental ward and laid me on the bed. Felt good. I relaxed, and hung onto a piece of wood they'd given me.

The needle they stuck into me looked vicious. I watched someone waving at me, turned back to the nurse, and found the needle buried in the crook of my elbow. My life blood was dripping into a bottle on the floor.

The bottle seemed to fill very slowly. Blood is thicker than water. They took 380 cubic centimetres, someone told me, approximately one fourteenth of all I had. Or all I had had. I was quite surprised when the nurse lifted me up. She wiped my arm off again with alcohol (non-drinkable), put a piece of cotton on it, then some adhesive.

The left arm she'd bandaged, she said, "might be sore." Then she sent me on to another bed. I'm right-handed.

No one paid any attention to me on this bed. It was an ordinary bed, not the kind that cranks up. I got up, and walked into a fourth room.

Cookies and coffee, then I left. The Red Cross feeds one well. They just said, "Don't run, don't get over-tired tonight. Better lie down at home, read a book, go to sleep early."

I went square dancing that night. It was tiring.

No one who can ill-afford to give blood is accepted as a donor. A simple test for iron content is made first. Then the serious business begins. Mrs. Gwen Greene is shown administering the test to Barbara Graham, left, and Miriam Burke, both of II Nursing.

To Me Blood was Given

One bottle held a glucose solution. It was connected to the right ankle. Another tube provided oxygen. It was attached to the head like a miner's safety lamp. A tube in the side was draining the pleural cavity. Another bottle, high over the bed, held blood. This was connected to the left ankle. This is the first recollection after regaining consciousness following a major surgical operation.

Glucose can be bought at a drugstore for a few cents a pound. Oxygen is a little more expensive, but can be bought from regular outlets.

But where does the blood come from? It is all gathered from voluntary donations to the Red Cross Blood Transfusion Service, through the various Blood Donor Clinics.

In a major surgical operation, such as the one which happened to me, about 3 litres of blood were used. Transfusion actually occurred before any surgery was started.

Thoracic operations are high up on the list of those in which much blood is used. Blood vessels have to be tied as entry is made into the chest and the lung itself. In the process, much is lost.

Without some way of replacing it, there would be no way of performing many surgical jobs which are done today.

Surgical blocks of sanatoriums — where I happened to be — are more than dependent on the Transfusion Service. Methods of combatting tuberculosis are becoming increasingly based on surgery; surgery which used to be impossible until four or five years ago.

In the particular hospital where I underwent treatment, visitors getting off the elevator were confronted with a bulletin board displaying how many bottles of blood were used last week and how many had been used so far in the year. I can only hope it had some effect on those who visited.

Patients are eternally grateful to those who gave their blood. I would rather have been a blood donor than a blood receiver any time.

And so, there it was, high above the side of the bed. A bottle of life-saving, deep-red blood, the last of five used. The last of five bottles which played a major part in the recovery from a serious five-hour bout with a team of surgeons.

It is pleasing to think of the people who gave the blood I received. I wish I knew who they were.

Find 80% Of Students Favor All Varsity Revue To Raise Campus Spirit

Students of the University of Toronto seem to want an All-Varsity Revue. According to a cross-campus poll conducted by The Varsity, 80 per cent of the student body is in favor of an AVR. "No" was the answer of 10 per cent, and the remaining 10 per cent didn't care.

The All-Varsity Revue is a campus show sponsored by the Students' Council, in which all faculties may participate. The last AVR was produced in the Spring Term of 1953.

The following questions were asked: "Are you in favor of an AVR?" "Why?"

Most of those who supported the idea thought that it would be an expression of the U of T spirit as a whole and that it would create stronger faculty and college ties.

"A terrific idea, but don't do away with the individual college shows," was UC's general comment. One second year pharmacy student felt that it would really give campus spirit a boost.

"It should be really outstanding because all of the top talent of the campus could be concentrated in the show," said a second year student in Annesley Hall. Another in the Vic Women's Residence, however, felt that as the best talent was already going into the campus shows, the same people wouldn't have either the time or the desire to work on AVR.

A woman graduate student recalled one outstanding All Varsity Revue in Convocation Hall and also another "pretty punk" one in Varsity Stadium. "The show should certainly be revived," she said, "but I feel that a very high calibre should be hoped for."

"If they have dancing girls in it — yes!" was the enthusiastic view of a male graduate student. A sixth year medical student felt that it might just be gilding the lily but refused to enlarge further on this observation. Finally he said that it would be a good idea as long as he didn't have to do any work for it.

The opposing ten per cent felt that there were enough campus shows now and that U of T is too large and broken up for such an undertaking.

"What's the use? There isn't much talent outside of Skule anyway," said a third year engineer. "I'm ignorant about the whole thing. Don't know anything about it at all. Your polls prove everybody's ignorant, so what's the diff?" was a theologian's comment.

Epstein Prize Worth $800 Not Awarded

There will be no Epstein awards made this year, it was announced last night.

The Epstein awards are given to students of University College for any kind of creative writing. In the past up to $800.00 has been given for short stories, plays and poems.

Last year David Taylor received $100.00 for his three-act play, Olga Skey and Charlotte Schraeger each received $50.00 for poetry.

Members of the selecting committee were not available for comment.

"Hope For Glory"

Hope Is In The Attic Now

"Hope is now in the attic of our history. It is back with the early Christians who expected Christ's coming everyday and talked of the glorious New Jerusalem which was to revive all the glorious works of men."

Dr. Richard Neibuhr, professor of Christian Ethics at Yale University, addressed the fifth all-university Church Service at Hart House yesterday morning. Oakwood Collegiate Girls' Choir assisted at the service, which was attended by approximately 600 people.

Speaking on the text "Hope for Glory," Dr. Neibuhr said that it could not be had with optimism and comforts of the flesh.

"Just as the United States can't offer freedom and love to the oppressed, and have high tariffs and prosperity for itself. We as a nation have put the hope of glory away and replaced it with the hope for glory."

Have we lost it within ourselves as well? He said that in the revolt within ourselves against the wrong and deceitful, this hope helps us. "It helps us to endure the unendurable," he said, "for although it may be that the hope for hope is all we have, we still have reason to thank God for the hope of glory."

The distinguished speaker was introduced by Reverend Ramsay Armitage, Principal of Wycliffe College, who conducted the service assisted by Professor W. J. McCurdy, associate professor of Philosophy at University College.

Reverend James S. Cunningham, chaplain to Hart House, announced that the next University Church Service will be the celebration of mass under the leadership of St. Michael's College, the first Sunday in March.

WUS Seminar At Caledon Studies Academic Freedom

The modern university's function is perhaps still undecided. Last weekend, twenty-six students and three members of the staff studied the problem at the year's first World University Service Seminar, at Caledon Hills Farm.

"There were few in agreement as to (the university's) function, but discussion was lively," said

Sybil Strachan (III UC), one of the participants. Students from Venezuela, Trinidad, Czechoslovakia, Germany, France and Canada attended.

Debate revolved around such topics as: the academic freedom allowed to a university; should Communists be allowed to lecture; should courses as technical as Dental Hygiene and Pharmacy be included in the curriculum; are students getting sufficient elementary education so as to derive sufficient benefit from higher education?; the responsibility of each graduate to his country.

Mother Courage Too Bold Cops, College Complain

City police, the University and the University Library have complained about "publicity" for Mother Courage, Trinity College's forthcoming play.

Letters came from the three groups to Adrian Adamson, president to the Trinity College Dramatic Society, protesting the placing of posters advertising the play in unauthorized places.

Mother Courage will run this week, from Wednesday to Saturday, at Hart House.

"We've got publicity for Mother Courage all over the campus — on trees, oak doors, plywood doors, on the glass door of the University Library," said Neil McLean, (II Trin), publicity director for the society. "The one taped on the Library's door was taken off," he said.

"The Canterbury Club has ripped down many Mother Courage signs and replaced them with their own publicity, advertising A Night of Sin, said McLean.

Adamson's letters came from the Assistant Comptroller of the University, W. W. Small, from the Commissioner of Police of the City of Toronto, and from R. W. Blackburn, head of the University Library, all of whom complained about the show's posters.

McLean reported that napkins at Trinity have been stamped with Mother Courage for several days.

Students Go Far -- Travel Service

Student travel should reach a record level this year, reports Kems, the NFCUS informational bulletin.

"Initial response to the 1956 summer programme has been overwhelming," it reports. Most requests are for the International Student Identity Card, which gives students privileges around the world, reports the NFCUS Travel Department. The Travel Department advises all students to reserve their passage soon, through NFCUS National Office, C/o Carleton College, Ottawa.

Enrollment Rises Will Double In Next 10 Years

Student enrollment in Canadian universities will double in the next ten years.

This is the estimate of Mr. E. F. Sheffield, Director of the Education Division of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, in a special report prepared for Canadian universities.

Mr. Sheffield's figures, all based on actual DBS figures, show that college enrollment may rise from its present 66,000 (approximately) for all Canada to 122,900 in 1965, only ten years away.

Mr. Sheffield's well-documented report, however, leaves unanswered the problem — where will these students be put? Mr. Sheffield bases his projected 100% increase in enrollment over the next ten years on two factors. One is the sharply rising birthrate, which began to increase about 1937, near the end of the depression. The number of births underwent another marked expansion during, and after, the war.

Thus in the period 1935-37, there were 911,000 births in Canada—the lowest figure for any three year period since before the first world war. These babies, born in 1934-37, were in the age group 18-21 during 1955-56, and thus the size of the original group of babies is one of the determinants of college population 18 to 21 years later.

An Explanation; A Concern to All

Everyone is worried over education. University presidents, professors, government officials, members of parliament, and everyone else too have been asking questions these past few years. Where to put the quadrupled university enrollment of twenty years hence, they ask. Who will teach them? And how?

The Varsity on these seven pages attempts a presentation of the problems at hand, and some solution to them. Problems in Ontario and at the University are dealt with in particular.

Regular campus news and reports are on page eight.

Expansion Coming, President Says But Must Refuse Entry To Some

By ROBERT BROWN

The following is a review of President Sidney Smith's views on several aspects of university education.

"We are admitting young men and women (to university) who have neither the brains nor the moral stamina to pursue advanced studies."

This view, expressed to a conference of Canadian Universities last June, represents the U of T's President Sidney Smith's opinion on one aspect of the "Crisis of Education."

The vehemence with which he puts forward his views on this and other aspects is an indication of the concern he feels over the future of his chosen field, education.

Dr. Smith's concern is shared by many of his colleagues in this and other Canadian Universities, but he has placed himself in the forefront of those questioning and probing the problems of university education in Canada.

Dr. Smith would be the first to admit, though, that there are no easy solutions.

One of the chief problems that at present concerns the U of T president is the expected "tidal wave" that is expected to double Canadian University enrollment over the next ten years.

"But it would be inaccurate... (to call it) ... a tidal wave that has hit the schools, for a tidal wave recedes. The situation in the elementary and secondary schools is a climb to a new plateau."

The President is interested in whether these additional students should be admitted at all; whether the percentage of Canadian students attending university should be allowed to jump from 7% (at present) to 10% (forecast in 10 years by Mr. Sheffield.)

For the President feels that there are already too many students at the university who should not be here at all.

"It is not academic snobbery", he says, "to insist that university training must be reserved for those endowed with the capacity and imbued with the desire to succeed in it."

"Something is wrong", said the President, "when 200 out of 600 first year engineering students fail their examinations."

But the President is skeptical about merely raising standards of admission to keep the unqualified out. "Quality doesn't draw the line at first class honors", he said,

Sheffield Stuff

Means More To Toronto Than Podunk

Dr. Sheffield, in his report on future enrollment, has estimated that the number of students attending university will double in the next ten years. An increasing proportion of an increasing population will seek to crowd—and it will be crowding—into our universities.

The figures quoted by Mr. Sheffield are well documented. There is no reason to doubt their general validity, although conditions may of course change in the intervening ten years.

But what many fail to realize is that this trend, already upon us, will be even more significant to the U of T than to other universities.

Ontario, as a province, will undoubtedly have a greater percentage increase than the other provinces, because of the great expansion taking place here. And as some universities such as Queen's have closed their doors to increased student enrollment (they prefer to keep the atmosphere of a small college), the increase will weigh more heavily on Toronto than anywhere else in the country.

On the basis of these figures, it is difficult to see how the number of students wishing entrance here can fail to triple in the next 10 years.

There is nowhere on this campus to place such an influx; President Smith himself said recently that the point of the post-war university building-boom was merely to provide adequate facilities for existing students, and not to expand the capacity.

So where these students are to go—who is to teach them—and where—these remain unanswered questions.

And an even bigger, more complex question is this: can the university system be stretched so far and so fast as to provide first-rate training to these students, even assuming that the necessary funds are forthcoming? It takes more than money to build a university.

President Smith Expounds On Education

"I don't know the answer", the President replied simply, when asked about what would be done about the problem. However, Dr. Smith said that the University had recently received a grant of $35,000 from the Atkinson Foundation to set up and test "college aptitude" tests, such as are prevalent in the United States, to see if these would be a better guide to those who would benefit from a university training than the present grade 13 examinations, which he termed "inadequate". The college aptitude tests are a combination of general information and intelligence tests, rather than exams on specific subjects.

One reason the president is so interested in entrance qualifications is that he is concerned over the flood of students which statisticians say will soon descend on the universities.

Present day college enrollment in the United States is about 25% of the college population, in Great Britain, it is about 4%, and in Canada it is about 7%.

President Smith does not think it realistic to talk of educating 25% of Canadian university-age population. He even has doubts about the ten or eleven percent envisaged in Mr. Sheffield's prediction.

Dr. Smith said it was obvious that Canada would need more trained people, but a change in the upward trend of enrollment predicted by Mr. Sheffield would "not be a tragedy."

"A University degree should mark a capacity for leadership in education, in the church, in the professions, and in commerce. But it is not a prerequisite of successful citizenship," said Dr. Smith.

"It is a waste of time and money for students to attend University who have not the capacity to succeed here", he said.

"It's up to us to hold the fort stated the President. "It is not every person's birthright to have a university education." The president believes that the public will accept the fact that not everyone has the mental capacity to obtain a university degree, although he does realize that there are social pressures which tend to make the universities accept as many students as possible—perhaps even so many as to gravely endanger university standards.

President Smith

However, President Smith does believe that the universities will have to expand—both because of the expansion of population, and the growing need for trained personnel in our society.

The physical problem of expansion, says the President, can be handled by obtaining more money

More classrooms, more laboratory and library facilities, more of everything will be needed and the funds must be forthcoming soon.

The staff problem is more involved, President Smith said. It is not just a problem of "dollars and cents", for trained men would not "clamor and compete for the privilege of slaving over huge crowded classes, reading too many essays, marking too much examination papers, and sitting on too many committees".

"Moreover, they can see that prestige, once the proud prerogative of professors, is now cheerfully accorded by the public to successful stockbrokers, saxophonists, and sports announcers."

ON COMPULSORY NON-MILITARY TRAINING

The President believes that all male students should spend one year in a "work-camp" of some sort—"I don't know what I'd do with the girls". He said that experience in Britain and the United States had proved the value of such maturing experience. "But this is not military training that I'm talking about," he said.

ON THE JUNIOR COLLEGE IDEA

The President believes that the establishment of two-year technical and even arts colleges—"junior-sized" university—would do something to relieve the pressure on the universities themselves.

THE GLORIOUS 16,000

"Our record with the veterans is not as good as we thought it was at the time. I never thought that I would say this about students, but the veterans studied too hard." The veterans, says Smith, just didn't take to university life as well as other students.

EXPANSION HERE

"17,000 students is too many for one university—I don't want it to happen here again."

Demand For Degrees Great

By ROBERT BROWN

This country needs more trained people of all sorts—and plenty of them. There may be vast problems and unanswered questions on the supply side—whether the universities should or could supply an increasing flood of graduates—but the answer on the demand side is clear and unequivocal.

More graduates—in practically all courses—are desperately needed. Engineers are in desperately short supply at this present moment. The need for honor science graduates is even more acute. There is even a swelling requirement for B.A.'s, as more scientific methods of selling, of office management, of accounting, and of human relations require trained people with a general, cultivated, background.

Unless these graduates are forthcoming, the growth of this country will be immeasurably slowed down, and a crippling paralysis will prevent the proper use of our natural and human resources.

The lack of technical graduates may also have strategic importance. In 1917, Russia was graduating only a small fraction of engineers per thousand of population, compared to the United States or Canada. Today, Russia, with an educational system geared to the production of technicians and engineers, is producing well over twice the number of engineering graduates per thousand population as is this country or the USA. And the gap is widening. The long run advantage that this may give Russian technology is incalculable.

Enrollment Rises Rapidly

rised to 3.9%. Veterans are excluded from the picture, in order to provide consistent trends.

By 1950-51, the percentage was 5.9, and still rising. The figure now stands at 7.2% of the 18-21 age group, and there is no indication that this percentage has stopped growing.

By projecting the increase in the percentage of the student-age population attending university, and by using actual birth statistics already available, Mr. Sheffield estimates that 10% of a "core" of potential student population of 1-228,000 will be attending university in 1965. This means 122,000 students—almost double the present enrollment.

By 1959, Mr. Sheffield estimates, there will be more students attending university than during the veteran boom.

Sheffield's predictions are subject to a rough error of 10%, he estimates, which would mean the 1965 figure should be between 110,000 students, and 135,000 students.

Another qualification to his predictions is that present conditions—i.e., the availability of government aid, the availability of classroom space, etc., should not change.

UNIVERSITY PROBLEMS

The Educated Masses?

In various attitudes of repose, scattered around the campus, can usually be seen the students for whom this issue is written. — the students who are now being "educated" at the university.

Bursary-Lecture Plan Answer To Problem Staff Writers Discover

There has been much talk lately about how little money is available to assist needy students. Bursaries, grants, assistance, dollars for food, board and fees.

Brilliant Varsity staff writers have been studying the problem for weeks. Now they are roused to action. A motion for assistance for students was talked out in the House of Commons last week. Weeping over a copy of Hansard, this is what The Varsity researchers evolved.

1. It costs $300-$350 for fees for a year in the Arts-colleges. This assumes that all students attend all lectures. Since most students miss about one-third of their lectures, these lectures should be credited to a lecture-bursary fund. Deserving students could then be given sufficient lectures from the lecture-bursary fund to see them through a university course. In this way, n plus 1/3n students could receive a degree.

2. Students under the lecture-bursary fund could also be reasonably expected to miss one-third of their lectures. These could be put into a lecture-bursary fund squared. In this way n plus 1/3 n plus 1/9 n students could receive a university degree.

3. One third of these students could also be . . . Therefore, on the same amount of money the university could educate n1 plus 1/3 plus 1/9 plus 1/27 plus . . .) students. This, all good mathematicians will realise, is a geometric progression. It can be summed. This is not the function of Varsity researchers. They are members of the first-order. They think.

On the other hand, there are ways of saving time thereby decreasing the time that students need spend at a university, thereby decreasing the time they must be fed, clothed and assisted.

These are (according to the aforementioned brilliant Varsity researchers) . . .

1. All lecture courses immediately be chopped by one-third. Students find their own notes for this. Time saved, one-third.

2. All lectures commence and end on the hour. Time saved, some fraction (We think not calculate . . .)

2a. This time saved could alternatively be credited to the lecture-bursary fund thus adding to the number of students able to partake of lectures.

3. Students work a 40-hour week, like the rest of the population (except the thinkers, that is what they think about)

Further research is being undertaken on the subject but it seems as though the basement boys will be able to offer two courses of action to the next session of the House of Commons, the next Dominion-Provincial Conference, the Board of Governors . . . These are . . .

1. Adopt the lecture-bursary plan and educate everybody. Everybody needs a diploma, anyway.

2. Save all the time available, and have students graduate four weeks after they enrol.

Thus all troubles are solved. The honorable member whose motion was talked out need not worry any more. There are fertile brains at work, night after night, in the basement of the SAC building, furtively figuring out solutions.

Stupor omnia vincit.

Varsity Law Or Osgoode

This article was written by William Angus, a law student at the University of Toronto, and former president of the Students' Administrative Council.

THE PROBLEM . . .

Legal education in Ontario remains a somewhat confused picture. To the student who is interested in a legal career and must choose between two institutions of legal education, the matter assumes a tone of personal importance. He must weigh the merits and considerations on both sides; then commit himself to one—a decision which will have far-reaching consequences in terms of his place within the legal profession.

THE ALTERNATIVES . . .

An undergraduate university degree must precede the formal legal education. Although a B.A. is perhaps most common, an increasing number of engineering graduates are continuing their studies in law. On completion of this undergraduate degree, an Ontario student must choose between Osgoode Hall Law School maintained by the Law Society of Upper Canada, and the Faculty of Law in the University of Toronto.

The former offers a course extending over four years, at the end of which time the successful candidate is called to the bar. The first two of these years are spent in formal academic study; the third year is passed under "articles" in a law office in Ontario; the fourth year is consumed in part by lectures and in part by further experience in a Toronto law office.

The Faculty of Law within the University gives a Bachelor of Laws (LL.B.) degree on completion of three years of academic work. To be called to the bar in any province except Ontario requires an additional year under articles in a law office of that province. In Ontario, a graduate of the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto is required to complete the final two years of the Osgoode curriculum, that is, one year under articles and the last year of both academic work and experience in a Toronto law office.

A graduate of the University of Toronto with an LL.B. degree may go to another province, be called to the bar there in one year, then return to Ontario after a period of three years' practice on payment of a standard transfer fee. Or the LL.B. graduate may be called to the bar in one year in another province and immediately return to Ontario where he is required to serve one year wholly under articles before being called to the Ontario bar. In addition, he must submit to oral examination on procedure and ethics but is not compelled to complete the academic work of the final year at Osgoode Hall.

THE MERITS . . .

As well as the time factor, there are distinctive differences in approach and methods between the two institutions.

Osgoode Hall is essentially a professional school operated by the legal profession—The Law Society of Ontario. It is concerned with producing lawyers who know what the law is, as of today, and how to apply it in the province of Ontario. For a student interested in taking up the practice of law for immediate monetary return, Osgoode Hall offers the shortest means to this end.

The Faculty of Law in the University of Toronto approaches legal questions from a broader point of view. It is concerned not only with what the law is and how it is applied, but why the law is as it is, which way it is going, what it ought to be, etc. The university school is conducted on a graduate school level—its prime purpose being to stimulate students to think critically and creatively on legal problems. This approach opposes law as being merely a matter of logic and certainty—it stresses that law is only valid so long as it fulfills the needs of a changing society.

A particular advantage of the Faculty of Law is its relatively small classes which permit free class questioning and the "open door" policy of the professors encourages even the first year students to drop in on anyone including the Dean.

The reputation of the Faculty of Law is such, that the limited number of students graduating each year find a far greater demand for their services than can be supplied. The high academic standard of the LL.B. permits easy access to graduate schools throughout the world for further study towards higher degrees in highly specialized fields. Since 1949 when the university law school was established in its present form, there has been a building up of the leading thinkers and teachers in jurisprudence and legal education in North America. The Faculty of Law has now succeeded to the title of Canada's national law school.

THE DECISION . . .

The questions boils down to a simple weighing of values. Is the benefit of a superior legal education worth the time and expense of one additional year. It will mean the difference in your approach and attitude to law. It will mean your future. It is your choice.

Colleges Needed States Chairman Ec. Commission

More schools, more technical colleges and more or larger universities will have to be built in the immediate future, warned Walter Gordon last summer. He spoke to the annual conference of Canadian mayors, just after his appointment as chairman of the Gordon economic commission.

More teachers properly trained and appropriately trained will have to be provided, as well as more buildings, Mr. Gordon said.

"The first postwar wave of babies now is bulging the walls of our public schools," he stated.

"They will be ready for high school very soon, and, by the early 1960's some of them will be ready to go to university."

"Still others—and perhaps many of them in this increasingly specialized age—will need technical training of one kind or another," he said.

Build Up Present Universities -- Hall

A three point plan for the expansion of Canadian universities was proposed last Monday by Dr. George E. Hall, President of the University of Western Ontario, to "save a future now at stake."

Speaking before Toronto's Board of Trade, Dr. Hall outlined his suggestions to overcome the problem posed by the expected flood of students coming to universities during the next few years. He suggested: 1. The building up—both acdemically and physically of present universities to their "optimum" size.

2. The immediate start on a University in Northern Ontario. (The Ontario government has already proposed that a start be made on the project by the construction of a two-year technical college.)

3. The formation of additional poly-technical institutes, although not on a university level. These, said Dr. Hall, would be "significant additions" to the present educational system.

Dr. Hall said the expanding nature of Canada's industrial life is highly technical and technical high schools cannot provide the level of training required for highly skilled craftsmen. But this should not be the function of the universities, he said.

Dr. Hall praised the work of the Ryerson Institute of Technology, and said that more institutions of this nature should be built. The next five years will be critical ones for Ontario's universities, said Dr. Hall.

"Millions and millions of dollars will have to be spent in providing university educational opportunities for thousands more young men and women. The elimination of duplication wherever possible is naturally desirable."

Dr. Hall said that therefore existing universities should be asked to provide some additional facilities, and be given financial aid to do so. He suggested that new colleges might be created within the framework of existing universities.

Although a good supply of honors graduates was essential to Canada's development, said Dr. Hall, there was a great shortage of such people at the present time. The honor science graduate is in particular demand, he said, and highly qualified people in this field are lacking.

BETTER TEACHER FOR BETTER LEARNING

By P. G.

Maybe, now that education is a rare commodity with a large demand, necessity will mother a bit of inventiveness, and the present inefficient methods of spreading education will undergo a change. It would be a shame to deny education to anyone who wanted it for any reason, and choosing the most deserving from thousands of applicants might require the services of more Solomons than we have available. But streamlining our teaching may be part of a solution.

The lecture system has outlived its usefulness. Once, a small group of students could discuss a course with a lecturer, which made his presence an aid to learning. Now, with rigid schedules and enormous classes, this is almost impossible. One man talks, and hundreds scribble. If the lecturer is a skilled talker, and the students extremely skillful scribblers, they walk away with 50 or 60% of what he said. More often, the lecturer, especially if he is a top man in his field, does not know how to teach, and the scribblings are a complete loss. Listening teaches us very little; we're too damn busy taking notes. Later, we read our notes, and that is when we do our learning.

Instead of standing up and saying the same things year after year, the lecturer could take his worn notes, print them into books, and sell the books (many do this already). Then the students, millions of them, could sit at home, read the book when they felt like it from his time, school year selected them to grade. At that time, he could discuss his book with students who wanted. Come to think of it, might be a useful writers, University body else who read the same thing.

Depends Who SHO

Hundreds of university students. This does not mean brains, applications have come to the. They're looking. Or a spot of. They are looking for inspiration to often they are the "characters". Perennially here where they catered to the changing, they know more about like shrimps in a can

Students, it is predicted, will soon be packed into institutions of higher learning like shrimps in a can.

The increased enrolment raises problems of two kinds; quantitative and qualitative. What physical changes must be made to cope with the situation? What will be the effect on the Canadian system of education?

There are two main reasons why people do or should "get educated". The first is self-development. The people in this category pursue knowledge to satisfy their own curiosity and to fulfill their potentialities. The second is to fulfill the needs of society. Our society needs people with knowledge and training for its operation, and this knowledge, though largely technical has become so specialized as to rank with "higher learning."

The number of people wanting education for both these reasons is increasing. There are more of the first type simply because of the mechanization of our civilization.

Several dangers lurk in any solution offered to provide for the increased demand for "education."

One of the dangers is a lowering of the standards at present maintained by universities in an attempt to look after all of the people wanting a "university" education. The shrimps will be damaged if you squeeze too many into one can.

Another is the mechanization of education. TV sets are now being tested in San Francisco State University. Mass methods of education at the level of higher learning are contradictory. Higher learning implies research and discovery in new fields. One can forcibly teach students memorized formulas, but one cannot forcibly teach people to think creatively.

It has been found that personal contact with professors is one of the most effective ways of educating students. Already many of our classes have become too large for professors to know even the names of all students.

Simplification and the neat classifications so common in cribbed education may pass as useful at the high school level, although they inevitably falsify. At the University level an appreciation of the complexity of each individual problem is necessary, an appreciation that comes most readily from contact with a person able and inclined to think.

If, however, the shrimps are not all stuffed into one can, or even one type of can, there may be room for all.

Obviously the need for education varies with the individual. Even in the category of those seeking self-development, the amount and kind of education wanted will vary. And the kind and amount of education needed by society for its operation are easily seen to be numerous. One kind of education meets the needs of our society much less than one kind met the needs of medieval society.

We would agree, therefore, with those who suggest a further division in the types of educational institutions. The liberal arts education, the tradition function of "universities," is only suitable to a relatively small number. Junior Colleges, Technical Colleges, and so on, would satisfy to a large extent the growing needs of individuals for more education.

There is one fairly serious objection to this system: that the division would produce one-sided individuals. But there is no reason why several of these institutions should not be associated with each other in order to profit from exchange of viewpoint.

There is a greater need in Canada than ever before for university training. This demand is two-sided. On the one hand it comes from the hordes of prospective students standing on the threshold of a university career, clamouring for admission to these institutions.

On the other, it comes from the professional, the business, the academic worlds of today which are in desperate need for more qualified university graduates.

But — as matters now stand — there is no doubt that both the demand of individuals for a first-rate education, and of society for the product of that education will go unanswered. Education costs money, and education needs care and cultivation.

And education is not getting what it requires.

This tragic deficiency extends not merely to the universities, but to all educational fields. All levels of government must share in the blame. The municipal councils, with few exceptions, have worried more about the level of taxes than the level of education. The Provincial government has been slow to move, and is still not awake to the facts which stare it in the face — the great and immediately pressing need for more — more teachers, more schools, more books, more universities, more everything. Its actions have been snail-like, when the problem confronting it was obviously growing by leaps and bounds. The Ontario government has been particularly lax in this regard, for it, the least of all the provinces, could make the excuse of lack of funds.

The federal government, with relatively minor exceptions, has washed its hands of the whole affair, and relied on the constitutional provision that education is a provincial affair. In a country so sensitive of local rights as Canada, this action may have both legal and political justification; but there is no moral or logical excuse for it.

This country cannot afford not to spend more on education. It cannot afford not to take a more intense and intelligent interest in its educational organization. This nation can survive high taxes — it has done so before — but it cannot survive a lack of first-rate educational facilities.

The Metaphysics Of

By Two Prospective School Teachers

The closing paragraphs of J. G. Althouse's article in the current Toronto Quarterly are a valiant effort to defend the recent trends in education in Ontario. We were glad to learn that "the high schools, after some initial resentment and occasional protests, are making real progress." J. G. Althouse, Chief Director of Education for Ontario, is without doubt an optimist and we admire his attitude that "public criticism, however badly informed, must be welcome."

The keen perception shown by Althouse in his analysis of our age is impressive:

"... the importance of science in everyday living will continue to increase. In a world dependent upon the applications of scientific knowledge and theory, inaccuracies assume tremendous significance and lack of precision becomes a major menace. So a new emphasis is appearing upon accuracy and precision in school work."

We wonder when and why high emphasis ceased to be placed on accuracy and precision in Ontario's schools.

Equally impressive is the learned bluntness of Mr. Althouse's capital statement that:

EDUCATION - AN ODE

CANTO THE FIRST: THE PROBLEM

Time was when our campus so fair
Was walked by a privileged few
Collegians so rich and so rare
In search of The Good, and The True.
Then, money was rarer than prudence
And only a king could afford
To be a philosopher, Students
Spoke only to profs, and The Lord,
But now that the babies and boom
Resulting from war and its rumours
Are with us, we haven't the room
To educate all the customers.

CANTO THE SECOND: THE SOLUTION

We study for months, and we cram
A host of fat facts in our bonnet,
And then, at the final exam,
So much that we study ain't on it.
Without such extravagant ways
And so much extraneous learning
Mayhap we can furnish B.A.'s
To all of the hungrily yearning.
We'll stretch out our mental resources
And millions of students we'll cram
With two and a half hour courses
To go with each final exam.

EDUCATION FOR ALL? YES, BUT NOT COLLEGE

The writer here discusses what seems to him to be the central problem in modern advanced education: should the University be the prerogative of everyone? Mr. Pengelley is in favour of limiting the university to the study of "humanities-science."

By MICHAEL B. PENGELLEY

Education today is a matter of personal concern to every Canadian. From the meaneast sewer-inspector to the most high-handed tycoon, it is everyone's business, we say, because everyone is compelled to help pay for it.

The annual budget for education in the Province of Ontario alone, runs into something like $180 millions annually; and there is hardly a member of a Lions' Club or Rotary Club anywhere in the country who would not think himself public-spirited by getting up and proclaiming that education is "great stuff".

Employers, as we are being constantly reminded, are turning their eyes each spring toward the fresh young faces emerging—pleased as Punch with themselves—from the sprawling universities and technological schools. Moreover the warning signals are up: within the next ten years, Dr. Smith tells us, the Canadian university enrolment will have doubled!

Personally, I am not interested in these developments in education except where they encroach on the true meaning of education. Unfortunately the encroachment, in my opinion, is intolerable, and if it goes on the cultural and intellectual decadence of this present-day civilization we might appropriately call "North American", is certain. The idea that education can be put on the level of an exhibition side-show is sheer insanity; and those who, by catering to the so-called "needs of the community", seek to spread it over areas where it is neither appreciated nor understood, do the great traditions of education an incalculable disservice. Men are not born equal; and every street-cleaner's daughter or mine-owner's son has not the unqualified right to education.

The great danger of education on all levels in the United States and Canada today, seems to me to be an unnetural attempt to appeal to all. That spirit which was once regarded happily as "individualism" is forced into submission by the mass approach, the psychological classification, the cold statistical choice. When we speak of education today, we think, not of creative thinking, but of the dollar bill and of commercial and industrial demands. This is not what education means. The truly educated man transcends all this; he takes in experience from all history and seeks to relate it with what knowledge he has of the present day, thus he arrives, ideally, at a synthesis of thought which is essentially his own. He knows Pythagoras and Euclid, Beethoven and Shakespeare, and from them he has gained the knowledge which he must have in order to be at his creative best. The true scholar gives back to scholarship—either in daily contact with others or in critical appraisal, or through art, music or literature—some of what he has gained from study. His contribution will not be in the form of some smart new gimmick to sell more life insurance or a plan to cut the cost of a bridge-building contract. He is interested in raising the standards of thought in his own generation and if this is not his goal, he should not enter a university.

I have been speaking here primarily of the student of humanities although I mean to include those students of science whom we might call "philosophically minded". The situation of the university of the future, I think will depend on the "humanities-science" (I hyphenate the term) being emancipated from the great weight of emphasis now being placed on technical study. The university must foster creative talent and stimulate thought, otherwise it is in no way fulfilling its purpose. These things it cannot do when the aims to which it strives are beyond the capabilities and interest of its students. Some students have a propensity for building bridges and others for designing skyscrapers; but theirs is a technical study and should not be carried out within an institution whose very function is non-utilitarian.

The education of masses of people to do specific jobs—to be engineers, designers, lawyers, doctors, dentists and businessmen is eminently desirable and necessary. But their concerns are not those of a scholar concerned with general knowledge and they have no real desire to communicate with the scholastic mind. It surely is evident that if people simply do not have the desire, the inclination, for the peculiar propensities which are prerequisite to higher learning. It would, I think, be well for our educational leaders to review the whole gamut of formal learning and to restore to the University its long-lost but still-necessary, independence.

It seems more people are capable of counting chromosomes than constructing a theory of evolution; of scanning Shakespeare's sonnets than writing a universally true play; of timing motor reflexes than explaining or relating them to human existence.

It is, we feel, the distinction which exists between first and second order sciences.

The second-order sciences are analytic in nature; theology, biology, certain kinds of philosophy, the study of English literature.

But first-order sciences are synthetic; religion and synthetic philosophy.

It is our contention that this university, state-supported as it is, should devote itself to the former classes. Research should be its key.

But there should also be a college or branch of the university supported by the state, and devoted to the furtherance of the synthesis of knowledge.

The students who would best fit into such a scheme would be chosen on completion of high school, or, better still, completion of a three-year Junior College course to be started at age 16.

What would this achieve?

It would have the virtue of deciding once and for all the nature of this university. The confusion which presently exists would be obviated. Students would not come here looking for the wrong things, or if they did they could easily be redirected.

These people who now number about 20 per cent of the student body could probably be transformed from buttery barnacles to library leeches and the university, society and more important, the individual would benefit immeasurably.

UNIVERSITY 'DUNGHILL' COMING? WHITEHEAD DISLIKES INERTNESS

By LARS THOMPSON

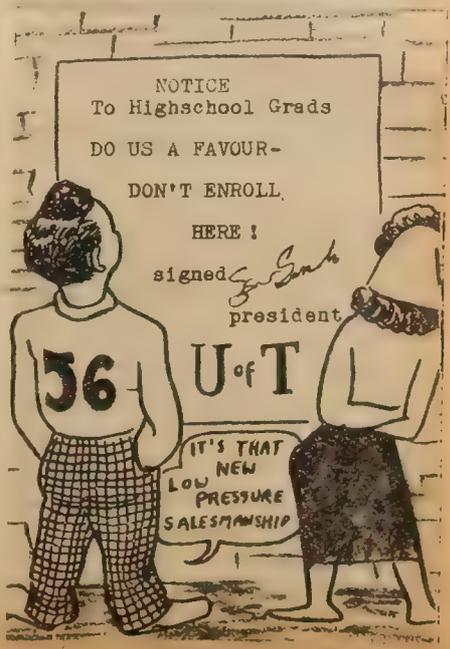

nature a specialist; students do not react to identical stimuli in identical ways primarily because each student is unique. When a class of two hundred engineers are bound by the spell of only one professor, how can the sacred differences of those students be charted under an arbitrary standard called examination? In many cases, it is this uniqueness of mind that suffers the consequences and wherever specialism is ignored, "life is destroyed." Examinations demand an arbitrary resolution of thoughts, thoughts which may be in the process of growth. This encourages the student to avoid vagueness and uncertainty within his thinking in order to preserve articulateness for examinations. We call this taping the course. This unfortunately breeds a form of dogmatic sterility. Actually, the mind is never passive but is in constant flux, a flux that demands for its development a freedom not encouraged by the external examination.

The ultimate aim of study is to develop both depth and breadth of vision in the student. Hence, Whitehead argues on behalf of the specialist as long as he performs his concentrations without blinkers. "The general culture is designed to foster an activity of mind; the specialist course utilizes this activity." One form of specialism that has failed to remove blinkers is athleticism. Little boys either laugh or sulk when their mothers suggest ballet instead of hockey. Admittedly these are both physical activities in a sense; what makes one absurd and the other proper? Whitehead goes on to suggest that the reason why athleticism has so much blind vigor is because teachers forget that students have bodies. Here the teachers have pushed specialism to the opposite extremes. True specialism takes into account the totality of human experience and integrates the parts.

The University is neither a hideaway for a group of eccentric researchers nor a repository for knowledge. The University can leave those activities to other agencies; however, it alone can breed knowledge with life. "The justification for a university is that it preserves the connection between knowledge and the zest of life." Boring lectures have no place in Whitehead's scheme. If the universities are without imaginative scholars who can illuminate facts and breathe life into them, then the students may as well return to their dusty books. For Whitehead, life is a great adventure enriched by the grace of intelligence. Universities fail when they produce only fools or pedants. "Fools act on imagination without knowledge; pedants act on knowledge without imagination." Has the University of Toronto failed?

WUS Discusses University's Role

Should Universities be Practical WUS Asks For 'Liberal' Education

By DAVE WOOD

"How practical should a university be?" asked WUS representatives at the seminar held at Caledon Hills Farm last week-end. The discussion covered one of the three sections of the over-all topic, "The Role of the University in the World Today".

"Practical", in terms of education, was defined as being both utilitarian, useful in itself, but also, in the tradition of John Newman, liberally educated which embodies a quality of mind that is both curious and adaptive. Thus the first point made was that it is supremely practical to develop a liberally-educated student. But whatever the university may feel to be best it is inevitable in Canada that decisions shall be tempered by the extreme pressures of society. This may be because Canadian universities followed their society and have not had the opportunity to really lead it as European universities have done.

Should technical faculties be part of the university? At Varsity this question has a very practical answer; the government gives its grants to the university largely on the basis that it produces doctors, engineers, pharmacists. The present curriculum of these faculties allows little time for its subjects other than technical ones. However, these students should definitely be given the advantages of other fields of knowledge but some institution outside the university must do it.

One proposal to help correct this imbalance of knowledge was that the "liberal" subjects should be expanded and more vigorously taught in lower school.

It was asked in conclusion whether in Canada we have any valid measuring-sticks to decide how "practical" the university curriculum should be. Perhaps our country is too much dominated by the boom in technical expansion, and we should look to the more seasoned systems of the world.

Other conclusions reached by the group:

Pre-University Training: it is not at all sufficient at present; it should emphasize a "liberal" preparation.

Technical Faculties: they should be part of the universities and should be encouraged to investigate other fields of study.

Turgot, Rousseau Views On Learning

"Our education is mere pedantry and everything is taught as quite against nature." "Nature must be studied and consulted, so that she may be assisted and we be saved the detriment of thwarting her." "Children's heads are filled with a mass of abstract notions which they cannot grasp, and all the time nature is calling them to her through every perceptible object.

Turgot, 1751.

"We know nothing of childhood: and with our mistaken notions, the further we advance the further we go astray. The wisest writers devote themselves to what a man ought to know, without asking what a child is capable of learning. They are always looking for the man in the child, without considering what he is before he becomes a man. It is to this study that I have chiefly devoted myself."

"No book other than the world; no instruction other than facts. The child who reads does not think, he only reads; he is not instructed, he learns words."

Jean Jacques Rousseau, 1762.

"Teaching our understandings to know the highest truth, teaching our affections to love the highest good,—The great work of education is to make us love what is good, and therefore not only know it but do it."

Thomas Arnold, 1841.

ON FREEDOM...

The Search For Truth

Freedom was defined as an opportunity for self-discipline, or alternatively, as acting in accordance with your convictions as modified by society.

Teachers were found to have the freedom to decline to teach a course in which they felt that their convictions would lead either to indoctrination or omissions in the material that the course should cover. In appreciating that objectivity can be achieved only by negation of personality it was decided that the aim of teaching was to teach students how, not what to think. Since Lenin defined a communist as a revolutionary, a communist would indoctrinate and not teach. Thus communist ideas have a place in certain university courses for completeness of presentation, but communists do not have a place on the teaching staff.

A further aim of a teacher was felt to be to teach students an insatiable desire to seek for the truth. A communist could not fulfil this aim since indoctrination is a perversion of the truth. If a University is to teach a method of searching for the truth as well as present discoveries, it must be the stronghold of freedom of thought, and teachers must be the stronghold of freedom of thought, and teachers must be free of religious, political and economic pressures.

Freedom of the student firstly demands responsibility. The lack of experienced judgement in the eighteen to twenty-five year age group precludes the possibility of perfect social freedom. This is a formative period in which to learn responsibility. Hence, some rules for the guidance of students should be laid down. It is at the university that a student must learn what he needs for future needs in society rather than following his own dictates. Further, the students must be free to receive full courses, without omission of beliefs contrary to those of the teacher.

In conclusion freedom was not considered to be an absence of controls, which, because of environmental influences, is impossible for all but the mentally deficient of no awareness of the environment.

ON RESPONSIBILITY ...

Our Debt To Society

It was considered that the duty of the university entailed enquiry for the truth and dissemination of truths or theories garnered to date.

The responsibility to the student must include the development of individual capacity to search for the truth and apply present knowledge. Whether the university has any responsibility to the society other than research and development of the capacities of the individual student was hotly debated.

Society does look to the University to inform it of scientific advances, nourish culture, and certify the standards of each graduate. Society may then have a feeling that the university must fulfil its needs. But could society in general, so far removed from the spreading horizons of the search for truth, decide what is in its best interests? It was noted that society was too far from modern advances to see the favourable implications in the changes made by progress.

The even greater problem of deciding who should assess the needs of society brought suggestions that the social sciences, the humanities, philosophy, or an elite governing class might be capable.

The university in giving knowledge it has gained to the student has a responsibility to give the information on which conclusions are based and any contrary evidence.

In conclusion the university must give society people trained for all facets of life, must give individuals the means to seek truth and within its walls must lead the search for truth through research.

OCE Stands Athwart All Criticism Represents Philosophy of Teaching

By Vern Gilbert

He is still one of the "educates". Experienced teachers—and there are many—begin to see past mistakes and to formulate better teaching habits.

The indoctrination into the official, approved way of teaching high-school children is almost Education - Hell!

An unidentified engineering student stares apathetically at the jammed mess of lab. equipment before him. Maybe he's had enough of "education."

complete. Everyone uses the same methods. He is told to use them. He is subject to them at college in classes. He uses them, on his own classes.

But they work. This is the astounding discovery made by each student in turn.

But what of these methods? There is no doubt the college succeeds within its frame of reference. It is astounding suddenly to realize that every high-school teacher—again with very few exceptions—has sat in a seat in a room in a building on Bloor Street and listened to these same words.

These instructors are at the top of a pyramid. They instruct and influence the teachers. The teachers instruct and influence our future citizens.

The importance of such a thought is tremendous. Few stop to think of it. All the children of this province are being moulded indirectly by a group of super-teachers. No doubt many deviate from what they absorb in their youth, but much of it must unconsciously remain.

Perhaps, then, it is not only desirable that supervision of the college's program is rigid. It seems absolutely necessary.

Is a university however the place for an institution devoted to such activities? This is an interesting and debatable point.

Vitae lampada tradunt.

"Neither a high school, nor a university, but something in between"; "a waste of time"; "it could be vastly improved"; "feel I'm learning quite a lot"; "it's like being brainwashed" . . .

Such are the replies to questions about the Ontario College of Education. The first was that of a high school teacher, others were those of students.

OCE is a college of this university. Its students include not only those intent upon teaching high schools, but also those seeking a degree in library science, and other post-graduate students.

The opening paragraph in the calendar states: "In its courses in education, the Ontario College of Education trains candidates for certificates as teachers and in particular for Provincial certificates as teachers of Art, Home Economics, Physical Education . . . as High School Assistants and as teachers of public and separate schools. It also offers courses leading to the B.Ed., M.Ed., Ed.D., MA, and Ph.D. degrees."

This, then, is the avowed aim and offer of this highly specialized department of the U of T. It is financed by the Department of Education, administered by the Board of Governors.

Standing athwart all criticism and praise is the fact that for those wishing to teach in the high schools of Ontario, with certain minor exceptions, a one-year post-graduate course at OCE is necessary.

Of the need for a university degree for a secondary school teacher there is no doubt. Without an adequate and broad background, he would often be left floundering and embarrassed.

The prime purpose, then, of the College of Education, and, indeed, of any similar body, is to turn the university graduate into a high school teacher.

The Department of Education of the Province of Ontario also has an educational philosophy. It has specific courses of study, established ways of teaching them and regular inspection to see that this is done.

The first impression OCE students receive is that they are back in school. Bells ring for lectures. Students move in bunches from room to room. Attendance records are kept. For the previously "free" university student, there is the constant thought that somewhere, someone is making notes on behavior, punctuality, attendance, and other personal foibles.

Above all this hangs the shadow of practice teaching. Much nervous talk revolves about this awful thing which is to descend in a month's time.

The new graduate tends, perhaps, to belittle advice given him.

Cornell Campus Casual

but Canada produces more mature thinkers

By CATHIE BRESLIN

Cornell University students read an eight-page undergraduate daily like The Varsity — and they pay a nickel a copy for it.

Perhaps this was one of the most surprising discoveries of the group of Toronto students who participated last fall in a Canadian Exchange Weekend at Cornell. Along with fifty other Canadians (each appropriately labelled with a green maple leaf), the Toronto delegation spent three days in the Ivy League and returned home with a little better understanding of College life in America — and with a somewhat reconsidered view of things.

American student life seems to be a far more casual arrangement than its Canadian counterpart. Lecturers compete against the clatter of busy knitting needles, and the campus abounds in dogs of every sort and description — from little black mongrels to St. Bernards. Our familiar Engineering jacket is a thing unknown at Cornell, and the standard male attire there consists of khaki pants, black sweater and grey bucks — topped, inevitably, by a crew cut.

The same relaxed attitude is reflected in the academic system. Students have a wide choice of subjects — many of them unfamiliar to Canadian students. One can "major", for example, in American Studies, a broadly liberal course dealing with inter-related political science, history and literature. Browsing through the catalogue, one encounters an English course on William Faulkner, or "Seminar: the Psychology of Religion," or another on creative poetry writing.

This academic liberality can certainly lead to abuses — among them, for example, a course which consisted of discussion on such

A Waste Of Time? Normal School Criticized

The Toronto Teacher's College is primarily a waste of time. This is the verdict of a young second-grade teacher, now in her third year of teaching in a suburban Toronto School. She graduated from Toronto Normal School in 1953, the year its name was changed to the Toronto Teacher's College.

"Lecturers seem to have forgotten when they were in school. Only ideal (teaching) conditions were discussed in most classes," she said in an interview. "Science, social studies and mathematics courses consisted chiefly of rerearning public school work."

Most Ontario public school teachers take a one year course at a Teacher's College similar to Toronto's, after their senior matriculation. They are given both theoretical instruction and practical experience in observing and teaching classes at nearby schools.

"The courses did not offer enough methodology. Subjects such as home economics and arts and crafts were fun but a waste of time," said Miss M., who asked to be anonymous. "English and child psychology were the two subjects dealt with in any detail."

Even in Child Psychology, "most of the time we just walked in and found a book on our desk to read," she said.

She criticized the Normal

Schools for not giving future teachers a realization of the problems they would face. It was usually assumed that classes would cooperate with "enthusiasm, good attention, and discipline," she said. "No one mentioned the outer fringe of a class not being interested."

"Teachers are left to find out those things for themselves," she said.

Miss M. said she learnt most from her practice teaching. "It lets you see into actual classroom conditions. It puts you into contact with children of all ages. Their problems become your interests."

"More practice teaching would create more enthusiastic students," said Miss M. "It's in the classroom that you know whether you like teaching or not."

Asked about the six-week summer course being offered to graduating high-school students, she said; "Men and women are becoming teachers too young in life."

"The training they receive is a bare minimum. Consequently, it is not raising the profession in the eyes of the public."

"The student (taking the six-week course) faces a class of children in September without having had one day in a classroom."

"But I wouldn't change my job for the world," she said as the interview ended.

University of Florida offers credit for courses in water skiing.

Theoretically at least, the American university system is one to which Canadians might well give thoughtful reconsideration. Like our own, it has its peculiar vices and virtues, and we have much to learn from both — as they have much to learn from us.

POPEYE LEADS BOY ON BUT MORALS STILL OK VIC BEATS CENSORSHIP

"Mickey Spillane doesn't make criminals any more than Horatio Alger makes millionaires!" This was the observation of Dunc Campbell, government speaker at the Victoria Debating Parliament last night in support of the resolution "This House Deplores Censorship of the Printed Word." Eric Snider also supported the motion which was adopted by the house with a vote of 21 to 11. Opposition members were John Pierce and Richard Pegis of St. Mike's.

"Take the little boy who read a Popeye comic book and had to have eight stitches in his mouth when he tried to bite through a tin of spinach, said Campbell. "He may have had to have his mouth repaired, but his morals were still intact."

He argued that forbidden fruit is only made more tempting with censorship. He suggested intelligent and careful provision of libraries instead. He suggested intelligent and careful supervision of libraries instead.

No "wishy washy" techniques of banning were being advocated by the opposition, according to John Pierce. "When we say ban we mean ban!"

"No one can deny the influence of reading on the human mind. If it is impossible to deny the influence of a math book on the human mind who can deny the influence of seditious literature? We would only ban books dangerous and subversive to morals. Censorship is sometimes necessary whether it is deplorable or not." Eric Snider, second speaker for the government asked if because censorship was necessary it was any less deplorable, as in wartime the necessary censorship of news despatches.

"Members of the Toronto Board of Education recently influenced by a MINORITY group banned the harmless story "Little Black Sambo." Censorship from a majority or minority of society is in opposition to all basic ideas of freedom."

"Just because something is deplorable it doesn't mean it has to be deplored," said Richard Pegis, speaking for the opposition. "The printed word leads men to action and some actions are unfavorable. "As the law is supposed to prevent men from doing certain things why should it not abolish harmful literature?"

Varsity Vs UWO BBall - HH Gym SPORTS McGill on Friday Threat to Blues

By JOHN WILSON

If the word from Montreal has any meaning the hockey Blues will have yet another obstacle in their path to the Intercollegiate title visting this Friday night. All recent indications show that the McGill Redmen are on the warpath.

Coach Rocky Robillard must have read the riot act to the Tribe and they turned tail and smothered the hitherto almost invincible Laval 12-4 in Montreal last Saturday, after losing their first four games.

The correction arrives a little bit late to give the Redmen anything more than a mathematical chance of overtaking the Blues. Unlike last season, when they got moving about the same time, and could have taken the title by defeating the Blues in three of four games, the Redmen must count on Varsity losing at least one more contest besides the two left with McGill.

This is not an altogether impossible situation. The one doubleheader road trip to Quebec left comes up in a little more than two weeks, with the Blues meeting McGill on Friday and then training it to Quebec City to test Laval on the Saturday.

Until now McGill might have been disregarded, but after so unceremoniously dumping the Rouge et Or on Saturday, McGill must be reckoned with. Big guns in the win were Leo Konyk and Chuck McCann. Konyk fired four goals and added an assist, while McCann scored two goals and picked up four assists to move into third place in the individual scoring race. Veteran Pete Constable scored a goal and set up four others.

Just about every member of the McGill club got into the scoring picture with Dickie Baltzan picking up five assists. Defenceman Len Sigurdson scored twice and set up two more tallies.

Meanwhile a goal by Ken Linseman with Don Cossar drawing an assist kept the two Varsity stars out in front of the leading scorers. Linseman has 11 goals and eight assists for 19 points, while Cossar holds down second spot with four tallies and 10 assists.

After serving such convincing notice of their return to power last Saturday, the Tribe can be expected to make plenty of trouble for the Blues come Friday. With Laval idle for the first time since the outset of this season the Blues can increase their lead by another two points with a win. This one will be a toughie.

Can David slay Goliath? Tonight in the University of Toronto's Hart House Gymnasium, local fans should find the answer to this query as Johnny Metras leads his University of Western Mustangs into battle against the Varsity Blues.

In place of a sling, Toronto coach John McManus will use a special team defence to stop the giant Mustangs from getting under the backboards. This new defence will have to be exceptionally good if he hopes to stop the U.W.O. crew, who beat Bowling Green, one of the better American teams, 71-66 in one of the cage upsets of the year.

Leading the Mustangs attack is a 6'7" centre, from Etobicoke Collegiate by way of Nortown "98's," named Ray Monnot. Monnot has averaged over 20 points a game this season, and is a definite prospect for Canada's Olympic team this year. Metras also has forwards Chris Ellis who stands at 6'5" and 6'4" Rance Smetton.

So whatever McManus' new defence is, it will have to be very potent to handle the Mustangs. The Blues played their top game of the year Friday night when they topped an extremely weak Queens's team 98-50. With high scoring John Dacyshyn, the Blues should put on a better show than they did two weeks ago when they were beaten 86-61 by Western in London.

In the opening game at 7.00 p.m., the U of T seconds meet Nortown Juniors, the toughest squad they'll have to face this year.

Also on Wednesday, the finals in the Intra-mural wrestling championships will be held in the upper gym. Down in the pool, the Varsity swimming seconds take on a team from the Canadian Chiropractic College.

Meds Tie SMC; Dispute Over Goal

St. Mike's A's and Sr. Meds came up with a tightly played scoreless draw in intramural hockey action yesterday. The St. Mike's tie combined with a Sr. UC win over Sr. Vic, 5-2, to create a tie for the league leadership in Group One. Irish reminder Jack Andrews came up with his fourth shutout of the season, having a pretty busy time getting it. Meds' Jim Gordon racked up his first of the season.

The Irish just missed getting a goal in the first period when Bill Reddall, on a breakaway shot the puck for what appeared to be a certain goal. The puck bounced off of the inside post and right out again. The referees claimed that it had hit the outside post.

Sr. UC came up with an unconvincing 5-2 win over the lowly Sr. Vic team. Norm Dysart was the UC spark plug as he netted two goals. Jeans, Scott and Lee added the other singletons. Taking advantage of UC lapses on defence, the Vic players netted two fast goals on breakaways by Truscott and Newman.

What? Our Editors Fired? Damned If We Knew About It

The Co-editors-in-chief of The Varsity — Robert D. Brown and Wendy Michener — have been fired by the Students' Administrative Council, it is reported today in the Gargoyle, University College scandal sheet.

But don't believe a word of it. It just ain't true!

The report is obviously a take-off on a story which appeared in The Varsity earlier this week. The story reported that a Kiss Me Kate publicity director had accused the Gargoyle staff of being "too lazy to put out a special Kiss Me Kate issue of the paper."

The report said that the UC Literary and Athletic Society and the Women's Undergraduate Society had considered firing the Gargoyle's co-editors, Bailey Iscove and Moishe Reiter.

Haw-hawed the Gargoyle: "The staffer, who preferred to remain anonymous, said that he had been approached by a man who had definitely heard that someone had been told that the publicity director of the AVR had said: "The Varsity staff is too lazy or can't be bothered!"

PRESS INFLUENCES JURY

The Law Meets The Press

Says Lawyer Robinette Fraser Defends Press

Absolute accuracy and careful comment based on knowledge were among the responsibilities of a newspaper stressed at last night's second Hart House Forum. Others listed were impartial selection of facts and a witty style of reporting.

Law and the Press met to give their views on a "fair trial or a free press." Representing the press were Blair Fraser, Ottawa Editor of MacLean's Magazine and J. B. McGeachy of the Globe and Mail. J. J. Robinette, Q.C. and J. Sedgwick, Q.C., represented the law. The forum was packed with an estimated 500 people.

Answering the question "What public interest is being served by allowing untrammelled press coverage of judicial proceedings?" Mr. Robinette said that what takes place in court should be open to the eyes of the public but there was the other angle—namely—what public interest is served by the coverage of some bawdy house or divorce case?

Blair Fraser contended that anyone who has a reason for concealing facts should answer why. Asked Mr. McGeachy, "Where will the public learn about the law and the penalty for breaking it, except in the newspaper?"

On the next topic, "When should the power to exclude the public from trials be exercised?" Mr. Robinette replied, "In sex cases when a young girl is the complainant, the truth would not likely come out in a crowded court-room because she would be embarrassed. She would be more apt to tell the facts to just a judge and a jury." "It should be exercised in order to protect an innocent person," stated Mr. Fraser.

Without the laws of contempt and defamation a jury could be influenced by the newspaper coverage of a trial, said Mr. McGeachy.

"Once a case is decided, the press should be allowed to include in fair, outspoken criticism, but it is highly improper for the press to try to influence the result of a case," said Mr. Robinette. "But police officers may tell the press that a confession has been obtained when in reality it was obtained by force and not by the free will of the defendant. Therefore it is not possible for a jury to be unbiased."

"It is the right and duty of the press to criticize what they think is wrong," added Mr. Sedgwick. "But a sentence is frequently influenced by public clamour rather than what the defendant did."

The playing up of words and phrases and the playing down of certain facts can virtually convict a man of murder long before he is tried, contended Mr. Sedgwick.

Concerning the question, "What issues are stake by compelling newspapers to disclose their sources of information when challenged in the courts," Mr. Fraser replied:

"A reporter who has received information in confidence places himself in peril by not revealing the source when called upon to do so, but nevertheless he should

Blackburn Hears SAC Request To Try Later Library Hours

An experiment to see if students here want the University Library open until 11 p.m. was proposed at last night's Students' Administrative Council Meeting. The Wallace Room would stay open until 11 o'clock during the month of March for the experiment.

R. H. Blackburn, Chief Librarian of the University, said he believed students had proved they didn't want the later closing hour by their present use of the Library. He promised to call a special meeting of the University's Library Committee to discuss the SAC's request for the experiment.

An average of only four students a night use the present study facilities in the Library's Smoking Room after ten o'clock, he said. "If there were a demonstrated need for service after ten o'clock, I think it would be feasible."

Blackburn was asked to the SAC meeting to answer questions about later library hours. He spoke for half an hour.

"We need a place for serious study," said Varsity Co-editor Wendy Michener. "It's not an ideal studying situation in the Smoking Room."

Blackburn's appearance before the SAC was indicative of the pressure put on members of the Council, she said.

"If we give any service past 10 o'clock, we have to give complete service," said Blackburn.

This would be to avoid charges of discrimination against the Library. "We are trying to meet the principal needs of 20,000 people."

He said the number of students studying in the Library in the evenings was "uniformly less than half the number at 4.30." He said he must also "plead the inability of our budget and our staff."

Monarch or Dictator For France? Visiting U.S. Students To Debate

Americans and Canadians will debate tonight on France's political problems, at St. Mike's. This is the first SMC Senate Club debate with an American college.

The motion is "that an absolute form of government would solve France's difficulties." The opposition is from St. John Fisher College, in Rochester, N.Y. "Frenchmen no longer put love of country before love of self," said Dick Matrodonato (II SMC), in moving the resolution.

"Until a sovereign, whether dictatorial or monarchical, assumes power, France can never be raised out of its stagnant political and economic crisis," said the second speaker, Charlie Vacanti (I SMC).

The visiting Fisher debaters will probably deplore all attempts to limit democracy in France, showing that instability is the French way of life, said Norm Stefnitz, president of the Senate Club.

Debate starts at 8:00 Thursday night, and is open to all.

Defries Remains With Laboratory

Dr. R. D. Defries has been appointed director emeritus of the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories; Dr. Sidney Smith, president of the University of Toronto, has announced, Dr. Defries retired as director last October, but continues his associations with the laboratories as special consultant.

The Connaught Laboratory is currently engaged in large-scale manufacture of the Salk vaccine for polio for distribution to Canadian school children.

da Vinci's Life Subject Of Film At U. C. Today

The Hand in the Mirror, a play recently televised by the CBC and starring Barry Morse will be shown today at 4 o'clock in Room C, University College.

The film deals with the life, work, and aspirations of one of the world's greatest geniuses, Leonardo da Vinci and is produced by Lester Sinclair. Students and members of the staff are invited.

to advertise the 34th Annual Hart House Photographic Exhibition, and was produced by Don Urganhart, SPS. Don took the photo with a small folding camera two years ago and it won for him an award in the HH Salon that year. The blowup was made from the original negative on wide strips of enlarging paper pinned to a wall, and the print developed in a bathtub.

Entries to the Exhibition must be in to the Hall Porter at Hart House by 6 p.m. on Friday.

Entries in the senior or junior black and white division should be mounted on standard 16 x 20 upright mounts, and colour slides in glass or cardboard. Any subject is permissible, except for the Karsh Trophy, which is confined to campus life and activities.

Judging will be done this Sunday, Feb. 12, by Rex Frost, Gilbert Milne and Victor Crich.

The exhibition will be open to the public from Feb. 14 to 26.

Skulemen Say Schedule Stiff

Skulemen decided yesterday that their faculty timetable wasn't in the best interest of the Engineering profession.

Speaking at the Engineering Debates Club, on the motion "That the Engineering timetable is not in the best interests of the profession," Huntley Christie (II Nechi) said that engineers in industry were assuming more executive responsibility. "Students here have no time to develop fully their character for this greater responsibility."

Ted Dunesan, (III Elec) was of the opinion that no one training was best for the wide categories of the engineer's work, and that the current syllabus was in the best interests of the profession

The motion was voted 13 to 11

Deadline for international exchange applications is Feb. 15. All those interested in a further tuition scholarship at some other Canadian university should apply at the Registrar's office.

Applications for the national short story contest must be handed in before Feb. 15. Liz Binks, I Victoria, handles the contest on this campus.

Students are reminded that they can get lists of student discount stores at the SAC office.

Information concerning reduced-rate flights, tours and sailings to Europe is available at the SAC office from Dick Vohry, II Victoria.

One Application For A. V. R. Director

One application to direct and produce next year's tentative All-Varsity Revue has been received, Miss A. E. M. Parks, secretary of the Students' Administrative Council, told the SAC meeting last night. An ad for applications had appeared in The Varsity yesterday morning.

Mr. MacDonald of the SAC and Jimmy Hoziack, Business Manager of Hart House Theatre, announced to form an advisory board, to tell applicants of the problems they would face. Donna Heineman (III S & M) told the Council, "We have to wait till applications come in," she said.

Final deadline for applications is February 29. The SAC will consider whether or not to have an AVR later, if a director and a producer can be found.

Cat and Mouse

The Verity, student newspaper of Mouse Height's U., was severely censured by their Rodents' Administrative Council last night.

The Verity, according to RAC Publications Commissioner Tommy Robbers, had transgressed "the bounds of decency and good taste by printing an editorial which was an affront to every decent mouse".

"Horrors," squeaked RAC President Micefoot, when he read the offending article. "There are some things which one just does not discuss."

Robbers, in a fury of indignation and embarrassment that any publication of Mouse Heights should so besmirch the fair escutcheon of that institution, growled, "It's not merely the subject matter of that editorial which is in poor taste, but the presentation as well. The whole thing is immature, and unworthy of mousehood."

Another RAC rep worried about the effects of the editorial on the younger mice. "If you mention things like that," she said, "what will be the effects on the minds of the young, impressionable rodents?"

Mice are now ashamed to take home The Verity to their families said another member. "Things like that are just not printed in a family paper," he said.

The papers editor, Winding Mousemore, said she was truly sorry over the fuss that had been created.

"I didn't realize," she said tearfully, "that mice were so sensitive about colds."

PUSSY No. 2

a gloomy thought

It may be a distinct possibility that all the aid now being given to the "have-not" countries of Asia and Africa is being almost entirely wasted.

Most people nowadays have forgotten the half-educated population theories of Malthus, an early English economist.

Malthus held that it was unlikely that the standard of living of the depressed laboring classes could ever be raised. He said that when wages were increased, the subsequent rise in the standard of living would result in an increasing birth rate and a falling death rate. The population increase would in turn result in unemployment, depress wages, and decrease the amount of national produce available to each individual. So the population would decrease, and the cycle would be repeated.

This gloomy prophecy was eventually proved false in so far as the Western nations were concerned. However, recent population surveys in the Asian nations seem to indicate that there may still be some validity to Malthus' predictions. Great increases in total national production have been swallowed up by sharp increases in the population of these countries.

The significance of this trend is highly alarming, for it may mean that there is no use in sending aid to such nations. It will possibly serve only to increase the population, not living standards, and in the long run make the situation worse.

When asked if poetry would find a rebirth in modern drama, he answered, "I would like to think so but there is not a sufficiently large body of authors to declare it at present." Modern poetic dramatists like T. S. Eliot and Christopher Fry put a heavy burden on their listeners, he said. "It is questionable if Fry's and possibly Eliot's plays will exist a hundred years from now," he said.

Blues Fall To Mustangs Ray Monnot Scores 28 Western Still Unbeaten

The University of Western Ontario Mustangs are all they're cracked up to be and more. That view was apparent to the 1500 cage fans who sat in on last night's Senior Intercollegiate basketball game at Hart House. Led by Ray Monnot the Western team handed the Blues an easy 79-69 defeat. The win was the Mustangs seventh straight in Intercollegiate play.

Monnot, as usual, led the Mustang attack hooping 28 points. Sixteen of his total came on foul shots. In an effort to stop the high scoring Monnot the Blues fouled the six foot seven inch centre quite often and Monnot capitalized on their errors sinking almost all his fouls. Chris Ellis, displayed a beautiful one hand set from the corner had 15 and Gord Scratch threw in 14 for the winners.

Ruby Richman topped all Blue scorers with 13 points. John Dacyshyn chimed in with 11, while Leo Madden had nine. The Blues' best player was captain

By HOWIE MANDELL

Peter Potter who fought hard all evening and scored six points.

John McManus unveiled his secret weapon when he started the game using an all court press hoping to upset the lanky Mustangs. It served its purpose for a few minutes as the Blues kept within two points of the Mustangs but when the U.W.O. squad began to pull away McManus went back to the usual man to man defence.

Toronto made one serious threat to get back in the game in the last period. With six minutes to go and down 77-59, successive baskets by John Dacyshyn, John Sheppard, Leo Madden and Florian Matsalla brought the Blues within 12 points of the winners but that's the closest they got.

In the opening game Nortown Juniors, the defending Canadian junior basketball champions, trampled the University of Toronto Intermediates 108-78. Doug Galdy led the Nortown attack with 24 points while Warren Reynolds and Mary Cohen had 18 and 17 respectively for the winners. The Intermediate's high man and the top scorer of the Ray Monnot, who is regarded as one of the top basketball players in Canada at the present time, is shown scoring two of the 28 points he collected last night at Hart House as the Western Mustangs rolled to a 79-69 win over the Varsity Blues. The victory widened the Mustang lead to eight points over Assumption who is in second. Others shown are Al Valchulis (25) and Rance Smeeton (35).

Whites Victorious 2-1 Grant Mills Nets Two

By JOHN BROOKS

Grant Mills and Hugh Curry paced the Varsity Whites to an upset 2-1 victory over Lyndhurst Motors last night at Varsity Arena. Mills scored both Varsity goals, one in each of the first two periods, and Curry held the Motormen to a lone counter in the final frame as the Whites came up with a great show of Kitty-bar-the-door hockey in the third canto.

Moé Galand potted the Lyndhurst goal from a goal-mouth scramble with only 34 seconds remaining to break Curry's great bid for a shutout, which is an almost unheard of thing as far as the Whites are concerned. Cox was in the penalty box at the time of the goal, as the Motormen made a determined effort to get back in the game.

Mills' first counter came at the 13:06 mark of the first as he and Dunc Brodie combined to send the Whites out in front. In the second, Brodie and Kennedy were off for a private duel and just as they returned to the ice, Mills and Ted Lotocki combined in a great passing play which ended with Mills picking up a loose puck in front of the Lyndhurst cage and firing it home.

Bob Church was penalized for tripping at the 5:30 point of the third, but the Whites held off the Motormen while short-handed.

Just Jots . . . John Casey, who has been sidelined with a kidney injury suffered in football, was playing and did a creditable job on defence with Ted Lotocki . . . Clare Fisher was robbed twice by Johnson on point-blank shots . . . The Whites take on Pickin' Chicken, Saturday night at 9:30.

SAC Censures 'Varsity' For Menstruation Article

A motion censuring The Varsity for its "immature manner" was passed by a 13 to 5 vote at the Students' Administrative Council last night. The motion was directed against two editorials and one editorial article on menstruation in The Varsity.

At the end of the meeting, SAC President Michael Shoemaker praised The Varsity's Education Issue. "It is easy to criticize, and seldom we praise," he said.

The motion, contained in the Publications Commission report, read: "That this Publications Commission goes on record as censuring the editorial of February 1st, 1956, and the continuation of the subject in The Varsity on February 6th, 1956, as editorial policy presented in bad taste and in an immature manner."

Shoemaker in the commission stated that the editors of The Varsity had done womanhood a great injustice. The motion of the Publications Commission was carried 4 to 3.

The subject of women's menstruation "should have been dealt with a watchmaker's tool rather than a sledgehammer," said Tom Robinson, Publications Commissioner for the SAC, in discussing the motion.

Defending The Varsity's policy, co-editor Wendy Michener said that she did not think the SAC would pass a motion of censure for the "manner" of presentation of any other subject. "I believe it is a conditioned reaction to the subject matter, not the manner," she said.

Murray Mogan (Law) also felt the Publications Commission were disputing the choice of subjects, not the manner in which the editorials were written. He said the SAC should accept the resolution as a statement of disagreement between the Publications Commission and The Varsity.

McGill Rumours New Blue Coach

Montreal (CUP): Masterson's successor may be found, reports the McGill Daily. Dalton White, assistant football coach at Toronto this year, is rumoured next in line, the Daily comments.

"They don't have to look very far for a new coach. White is very well thought of in Toronto and I think he would be an excellent choice," said Harry Griffiths, McGill's Director of Athletics.

SAC AT A GLANCE

The Students' Administrative Council last night, besides giving the SHARE Scholarship winner, Miss Mihoko Shimizu of Japan, a grant of $500 to be used for one year's graduate work in the School of Hygiene, also:

- spent 15 minutes discussing a motion of censure on The Varsity for articles on menstruation.
- got its knuckles rapped for passing a motion to spend $175 on publicizing the University Settlement without first submitting the matter to the Finance Commission.
- set up a sub-committee to investigate sponsoring the grad ball as the UC Alumni Association no longer wanted to sponsor it.
- heard one-half a brief on the Institute of Canadian Civilization and then passed it on the EAC commission for consideration.

- heard that the best way to find out whether or not they were anemic was to give blood.
- decided to give blood in a body as a good example to the rest of the students.
- heard that there had been one application so far for the position of director and producer of the AVR next year.
- applauded The Varsity for its coverage of the blood campaign.
- discussed the possibility of establishing a uniform of blazers for the SAC in order to make the SAC more "colorful."
- were told that federal MP's did not need a uniform and that colour must come from within.

- voted that all Canadian universities should be allowed into the NFCU debating Union.
- had an audience of fourteen.
- heard nothing from 10 members.

R. Davies Talks On Literature Wants High School Rhetoric

"Teachers of English do not get enough of a crack at students," said Robertson Davies Tuesday evening, to the first Hart House library evening. "If students are going to study English Literature, they should study English Literature and nothing else," he said.

"They should acquire their general knowledge in other fields before coming to university," Mr. Davies said. Mr. Davies, Editor of the Peterborough Examiner, is a well-known Canadian playwright and humorist.

Mr. Davis suggested that Rhetoric be taught in every high school, and elementary grammar in public school.

One of the more than 50 students present asked him if he could explain the failure of the smash Canadian hits on Broadway.

"I would be in a tent at the CNE if I could," Mr. Davies replied chuckling. Speaking seriously a moment after he said, "The American attitude to Canadian drama is that of an indulgent parent towards a clever child. When the child makes a clever remark, he is immediately hushed up because the parent does not consider him old enough to have that privilege."

He added that the business of critics and criticism should be looked into.

"Some very interesting things would come out if you were to invite three critics and a top-notch psychoanalyst to one of your library evenings," he said.

"Every student should be taught how to write whether he is creative or not," said Mr. Davies. He added that good writers do not make good teachers of writing. "A writer is probably illiterate, prejudiced, and an awful person to deal with the growth of sensitive intellect. A teacher of writing should be rather a top-notch technician," he said.

not reveal it. Generally the court would not insist respecting the moral obligation involved. If the answer is needed for the interests of the case involved it should be given. A judge on the bench should decide whether the desired information is relevant or not. The consequences of the right to exact that kind of information from a reporter are obvious," he said.

Mr. Robinette argued that the information could be merely malicious gossip. "If it is the plaintiff should have the right to know it because it may play an important part in the case," Mr. McGeachy argued that if there were no confidential information, there would be no news. A reporter could not carry on without it.

UC BLACK SHEEP IN BLOOD GIVING LIT STILL BLANK AS DRIVE ENDS

The Lit Executive ...

This is the executive of the UC Literary and Athletic Society. As one executive member reads his report, another stares pensively into space. A third glances over his notes, a fourth is reading a magazine, and two others are engaged in a conference. For members, see below.

—VSP by Paul Kyselka

Planning Was Left For Open Session; Just Met Yesterday

With only one day of the University's blood campaign left, UC seems puzzled about what its part should be.

A rapid poll of Lit executive members late last night revealed no one who knew about any previous plans to take part in the blood drive, although a "blitz" seemed scheduled for today.

The issue arose when the campaign — which ends today — came under fire at yesterday's meeting of the University College Lit.

But the criticism was quickly squelched, both by Lit members, and by Josephine Flaherty, SAC Service Commissioner.

The Lit executive reported to the open meeting that they had left the matter of UC's participation in the blood campaign over till yesterday's meeting for a decision by the entire membership.

This was done, it was said, because of alleged assertions that the blood given in the current Red Cross campaign would be sold. However, Bill Smyth, III UC, reported that UC's SAC Rep, Gord Purdy, had satisfied himself at last Wednesday's meeting that all the blood collected would be given away free to needy patients.

The Lit's inaction was termed "inexcusable" by one Lit member. To a statement that it had been "convenient" to leave the matter over till today's meeting, the member said: "Is it convenient for people to die from lack of blood?"

However, Lit executive members protested that they had been informed about the campaign only one day beforehand, and had investigated the matter as fast as possible.

Miss Flaherty, in charge of the campaign to get 1,600 blood donors on this campus—said she "just could not understand" how there could be any misconception about the blood campaign. She said that all blood given to the campaign would be definitely contributed to hospital patients free of charge by the Red Cross.

"I don't know how the Lit could have been misinformed about this", she said. "Information was sent to them weeks ago covering all details of the campaign".

Although UC's Blood Chairman, Noga Kaplansky, could not be reached for comment late last night, it seemed evident that no arrangements for blood collection had yet been made at University College, with only one day to run.

Open Meetings Remain 'Valve' As UC's Lit Struggles On

Open meetings of the University College "Lit" will not be abolished—not yet. The 22 members present at yesterday's meeting—out of a total membership of over 700—decided open meetings were a good thing, for a "safety valve".

Part of the proceedings were extra constitutional, for when today's meeting opened, 20 minutes late, there were only 17 members present, three short of a quorum. The meeting was in session for 10 minutes before a legal quorum was present.

The "Lit"—the Literary and Athletic Society—listened unsympathetically to a motion by Bill Smyth, III UC, to abolish the open meetings, and transfer its functions, "if any", to the Lit executive. Only Smyth voted for the resolution.

A special committee appointed to inquire into the problem of improving the Lit's open meetings came out with the "revolutionary" suggestion that the meetings should be held in conjunction with those of the UC Womens' Undergraduate Association.

"Our open meetings would be heightened greatly", said one Lit member, "both in atmosphere and content, by the inclusion of the women of our college".

The meeting was started with an accusation that the executive was negligent about the handling of UC's Blood campaign. In answer to an explanation that it was a matter of convenience to leave the matter of UC's participation in the blood campaign over till today's meeting, one member asked "is it a matter of convenience if someone dies in the streets, because of lack of Blood?" He charged that the executive had betrayed its responsibility.

The open meeting decided that the Lit executive should support the campaign. "The machinery will be set in order," announced the President. Today is the last day of registration in the campaign, he said. It will be the only day of registration at UC, due to the delay in starting registration.

The UC Gargoyle, the student newspaper of the Lit and the WUA, came under fire also at the meeting. The lack of a definite publication "schedule" was criticized by several speakers.

The meeting voted to include the Gargoyle in the Lit's constitution. They also decided there would be no more issues of the Gargoyle this year, unless the UC Alumni Association came through with a promised grant.

...and Member(s)?

Here one of the 12 students present looks on as the Lit debates abolishing the open meeting. The empty chairs in the background show the sparse attendance. Several times the ten executive members present were more than the number of members, which fluctuated between seven and 12.

Hapless Hamlet Has No Habits; Blitzed In Blaze

Five costumes, for the Hart House Theatre production of Hamlet, went up in the smoke at the Malabar Costume company last Monday, reported Hart House Business Manager James Hozack.

The five costumes were ready for a cast fitting that was to be held this week. These were the only costumes ready for the Hart House order.

It is expected that the costumes will be replaced without difficulty since Hart House production assistant, Marian Walker, has her original designs. The Malabar company is re-copying these designs.

Already two of the costumes have been remade. The remaining are expected to be finished in adequate time for the fourth and final Hart House Theatre production of the year, starting February 24 to March 3.

Alien Journalists Infiltrate Varsity

Rival students invaded The Varsity office last night in a bid to infiltrate its staff.

They were led by a bearded youth brandishing a printed pamphlet labelled "The Ryersonian."

The alien quartet — which included a short-haired girl — denied they had anything to do with recent student riots in Madrid.

Their purpose, they insisted, was to establish friendly relations between The Varsity and Toronto's other campus paper, The Ryersonian, organ of the Ryerson Institute of Technology.

Varsity Co-Editor Wendy Michener guaranteed that any help they gave The Varsity would be strictly supervised.

Hart House Elections Coming Up Soon Only Forty Posts Represent All Males

"Elections for Hart House Committees will take place March 7," said John Becker, Undergraduate Secretary of Hart House last night. "Nominations will be accepted from February 20 to February 25."

Every male undergraduate of the University is a member of Hart House and pays an annual fee of fifteen dollars towards its upkeep. Activities of the House are administered by democratically elected committees, on each of which are representatives from the three types of members, undergraduates, graduates and faculty. The undergraduates have the largest membership on each committee because they form the largest part of the House membership, said Colin Graham, Hart House Publicity Rep.

Five standing committees cover major aspects of the life of the House. These are the House Library, Music, Art and Debates Committees. The House Committee is responsible for all those matters which affect the comfort, of members of the House, (for example the juke box in the Arbor Room).

Eight new members are elected yearly to each of the major committees, and serve with three members from the previous year, who are carried over to ensure continuity.

HH Theatre Small, Fills Too Fast Holds Too Few For Another AVR

An AVR will be impossible because of prohibitive costs, maintains Walter Gonet, producer of "Kiss Me, Kate", the biggest on-campus show.

"As Vasoff said in his Varsity article, the AVR would require a $3,000 budget. From working on Kate I can tell him now this is definitely a minimum figure," he added.

"If they do go ahead, they've got to count on going in the hole to the tune of $500. This has nothing to do with ticket sales—unless they charge Royal Alex prices, or move the show into Varsity Arena—Hart House Theatre holds just so many."

"The AVR should take a warning from the strange position we're in with 'Kiss Me, Kate'. Judging from last year's 'Brigadoon', and the way tickets are going, we will probably be close to sold out . . . as a matter of fact, Friday and Saturday nights are almost gone already. Yet we will undoubtedly lose money; we can have only ten free tickets for any one night to break even. "Donna Heineman said she thought that an AVR would do better than "Kiss Me, Kate" box-office wise. I just don't see it," Gonet continued. "For one thing everyone knows the show we're doing is good entertainment, although a review might have some drawing power because it is about campus activities. And we already have an All-Varsity cast and production staff. But the main point is that you can get just so large an audience into Hart House Theatre."

Gonet attributed the situation to rising costs, both in production, advertising; and the difficulty of getting enough ads to fill the program. "It will be almost impossible for any large show to break even," he stated. "We see the same problem on Broadway today—where the prohibitive costs of putting on a musical are bringing back the 'dramas'."

Last year's "Brigadoon" which was a similar production, involving a cast from all the colleges, although it was officially produced by two colleges, UC and St. Mike's, was a highly successful production, both financially and artistically, he said. "Brigadoon" was budgeted for $2,000 (not including the program of $1,000), and came out about even. Gonet said this was mostly due to luck. In the first place, advertisements for the program were much easier to get. In the second place, "Brigadoon" had both a competent costumer and a director on-campus.

Liz Marani, who designed the costumes last year, won the J. M. McAndrew Award for her contribution to the Players' Guild and Leon Major took the Dale Award for the undergraduate who had contributed most to theatre in the U of T. Having to pay to have these jobs done has added another seven to eight hundred dollars to the budget. There is also the question, particularly important for a review, of obtaining an adequate choreographer, he said.

Open Meetings - about 50% this year, for the Gargoyle," reported Peter Larmour, President. As a result, actual costs are up much over estimated costs. Bob Brown, Editor of The Varsity, suggested that if the Gargoyle had a definite list of publishing dates, more advertising could easily be obtained for the paper.

"More ads means more money means more papers," he said.

The Arts Ball, while it may have been socially a success, was not a financial one, reported Social Director Harry Malcomson. He said that several couples had entered the dance without paying due to inadequate ticket-taking arrangements. He was unable to give any definite estimates on the amount of money lost by the Lit due to this, but figures ranging from $35 to over $100 were quoted as the probable loss. The dance itself lost $300.

"I take the responsibility," said Malcomson. "I thought I had made adequate arrangements, but they turned out to be unsatisfactory."

MCGILL WINTER CARNIVAL TRAIN

A party of 15 has been formed so far, allowing a reduced train fare of $14.65 return. An additional ten people in the party would further reduce the fare to $12.90.

Further information regarding skiing, carnival, etc. may be obtained in S.A.C. Office.

VARSITY TAKES ON MCGILL REDMEN

Blues Can Stretch League Lead With Win Over Aroused Indians

The McGill Redmen, fresh from a stunning 12-4 victory over the Rouge at Or de Laval, provide the Varsity Blues with formidable opposition in tonight's Intercollegiate Hockey attraction at Varsity Arena.

After dropping their first four league games, in which they had 23 goals scored against them, the Redmen suddenly came to life last Sunday in the Montreal Forum and completely outplayed a surprised Laval crew to gain their first win of the year. The Indians move back to Montreal on Saturday to take on the University of Montreal Carabins, with whom they share the cellar spot in the League.

But, although the Redmen finally seem to have come to life, they are up against a team that owns a two point lead on top of the ladder, and they will be going all out to increase that margin over Laval, who is idle this weekend.

The game will also bring together five of the top six players in the scoring race. Ken Linseman seems to be making a run-away of the top spot, but only one point separates the other four who will be in action tonight. McGill's McCann holds down the number two spot with 12 points, while right behind him with 11 are teammates Pete Constable and Dickie Baltzan and the Blue's Don Cossar.

Al Fleming, who played the game against the Carabins last week with a six inch gash in his leg suffered just before game time, will likely be guarding the team in injury free and ready to go, so it would be well worth your while to turn out and support the Blues in their drive towards the Queen's Cup.

Varey Collects Fourth Victory

PHE's Bill Varey, freshman middle-distance star, claimed his fourth straight triumph in Tuesday's University track meet. Varey set a new indoor Hart House record as he ran the 3/4 mile senior race in 3:16.8. Close on his heels were: Bill Gelling (SPS) and Ron Toop (UC), who finished second and third respectively. Bruce Hughes (UC) finished fourth.

The junior version of the 3/4 mile was won by Angus Bruneau (SPS) with Bill Leslie (SPS) close behind. Jim Canzi (SPS) and John Robinson (SMC) finished third and fourth.

The 4 x 2 lap relay was taken by the SPS team of Dick Harding, Doug Mason, Don Shepley and Bill Gelling in 2:33.1. UC, with Blue Basketballer Ruby Richman filling in nobly, placed second, while SMC took the show spot.

On Friday afternoon, Coach Fred Foot will accompany eight of the senior team as they make their annual visit to East Lansing, Michigan, for the Michigan State Relay Championships. Off their Hart House showings, the boys should put up a good show against some of the best talent that American Colleges can offer. The team is entered in three relays and hurdles events.

The Sportswoman

By JOAN BOND

With the Senior Intercollegiate Basketball schedule well under way, we can see the achievement of a strong team under the capable coaching of Mickey Bernette. Four victories of the five games played is an impressive record for any team to enter into the Intercollegiate playoffs at the end of the month.

After final cutting, the team is now composed of the following players:

Joy Taylor—An energetic forward, Joy uses her speed and expert ball handling to great advantage. This is her first year on the Senior squad and her experience with Intermediates two years ago is an asset to her.

Sylvia Kerr—Sylvia also played on the Intermediate squad of two years back. Her effective shooting and screen shots more than make up for her lack of height on the forward line.

Jan Tennant—In her first year, Jan is a valuable asset to the forward line. Jan's well-coordinated team play and ease of movement has served the team well.

Marilyn Charters—Marilyn highlights the play with her well-timed hook and jump shot. It is her first year on the Senior team after playing with the Intermediates two years ago.

Lillian Bobson—Lillian came to the Seniors from last year's Intermediates. Her ability for close teamwork is outstanding in the forward line with Jan Tennant and Pru Smith.

Pru Smith—Pru graces the forward line with her outstanding long shot, as well as her innate sense of team play. It is Pru's first year here.

Pam Miles—Pam is back for her third year as a steady asset to the guard line-up. Her tricky dribbling and passing serves the team well.

Meredith Robinson—Meridith is a hard-fighting guard who comes back into play this year after managing the squad last year. Her team playing experience on the defence with Pam Miles and Lou Martin on the team of '54 was invaluable.

Lou Martin—Lou stalwartly defends with her expert shot-blocking. In the centre guard position, Lou returns for her third year.

Gwen Thom—Gwen uses her height to a definite advantage on the guard line-up. This is her first year at Varsity.

Audrey Lamb—Audrey, back for her second year, is a steady defensive player who holds her own and uses her height to advantage in blocking shots.

Pat Davis—Pat is an excellent ball-handler and shows to advantage her experience in the realm of boys' basketball. This is Pat's second year on the Senior squad.

Mary Foster—Mary is a valuable asset to the team as a very enthusiastic manager. She played for the Intermediates last year.

Looking ahead to the Intercollegiate play-offs at Queen's on February 24th and 25th, we view Varsity's '56 representatives as the round-robin series. Meeting Western in the first game of the weekend will probably be Toronto's most difficult hurdle. Best of luck, girls.

Hoopsters Visit McMaster Expecting Little Difficulty

The University of Toronto basketball Blues take a jaunt over to Hamilton tomorrow night to do battle with that city's McMaster Marauders in a regularly scheduled Intercollegiate Senior Basketball game.

The McMaster team have only managed one win this year in the college hoopla loop and that against the lowly Queen's Gaels, nosing out the Kingston team 65-59. Bert Raphael has been Mac's top player averaging about 15 points a game. Another top Marauder performer this year is Noel Mason. Mason started the season off slowly but has begun to show signs of great scoring ability.

Toronto should have little difficulty in subduing the Hamilton five. Back and playing great ball after an ankle injury that kept him out of the line-up for two weeks is Ianky Al Vachulis. Vach played a standout game against Western Wednesday night. John Dacysyn has also been one of the better Blue performers so far this season. He's hooped 168 points in 11 games to lead all Blue scorers with a 12 point per game average. Leo Madden is close behind Dacysyn with a 15 game total of 161 points. Guard Ruby Richman played excellently Wednesday and was the Blues high man with 13 points. Richman has a 15 game total of 128 points.

It doesn't seem that the Blues will have any difficulty Saturday.

Wrestling Results

The following are the results of the Intramural Wrestling Championships run off at Hart House on Wednesday night:

- 123 lbs.—Jim Hendy by default.
 - 130 lbs.—Wally Kamitakahara gained a fall over W. McCutcheon at 1:52 of the second period.
 - 137 lbs.—Jack McQuat gained a decision over Jim Dart.
 - 147 lbs.—Chuck Mayer gained a fall over Al Mills at 2:54 of the first period.
 - 157 lbs.—Doug Anakin gained a fall over Ray Smith at 2:31 of the third period.
 - 167 lbs.—Ben Hooyer gained a fall over Bob Alexander at 2:30 of the first period.
 - 177 lbs.—Bill Chykalukik by default.
 - 191 lbs.—Bob Herod gained a fall over John Graham at 2:59 of the first period.
- Heavyweight—Eob Sibthorp by default.

Trinity Tops Pre-Meds

Trinity A's knocked off another obstacle in their march to a Group 2 playoff spot as they trampled Pre-Meds 6-1 on Wednesday.

Loving and Giffen shot the Artsmen into a 2-0 lead in the first, and they added four more in the second. Loving picked up another tally, Osler netted two, and the other went to dePencier. Hamilton tallied the lone counter for the losers. The hockey Panthers meet Junior Skule today in the regular schedule wind-up for both teams.

In Division II hockey action yesterday, Emmanuel dropped Wycliffe 3-1. Burrows, Cook and Chapple scored for the winners, while Drummond tallied the Wycliffe goal.

Major League basketball action saw Sr. SPS top Sr. Meds 46-31, and SPS V trample UC III 47-27.

In the Group I game, Wedd was high for Skule with 11, while Glick hooped 12 for the Doctors.

Read paced the Engineers in the other game with 10 while Estman topped UC with eight.

Two minor league games saw II Electrical A smash Meds I A 76-19 and Meds I B turn the tables on II Engineering Physics B by a 57-29 count.

Varsity Victors Take Badminton With 24 Wins

The University of Toronto Badminton team retained possession of the Jemmett Trophy, emblematic of Senior Intercollegiate supremacy, with a decisive series of victories in Kingston on Saturday last.

Varsity played in sixteen singles matches and four doubles matches, and went through them all without defeat. McGill finished in second place with 14 victories, while Western was third with 12. Queen's fourth with 10, and hapless McMaster trailed winless in the cellar.

The four members of the winning Varsity team were: James Carnwath, Ray Cornish, Peter Ferguson and Ted Alexander.

UC Juniors Trounce Vic Track Scores 24 Points

By STAN WEISMAN

University College Juniors continued their winning ways by trouncing Victoria University Juniors 65-45 in a major league basketball game yesterday afternoon at the Hart House Gymnasium.

The Redmen shone in all departments in coasting to an easy victory. Danny Track, playing a great two-way game, potted 24 points for the winners. In grabbing most of the rebounds and leading the offensive attack, Turack was easily the individual star of the game. C. J. Wood played a great defensive game, helped Turack control the backboard during the closing minutes for UC won League Nickel with 11 and Ken Horvath 11 nine. Winner had seven.

Little Bobby Stone was the man for Vic, playing a great game all the way for the losers. Pocklington with 11 and Ferguson with eight, were the next high men for Victoria.

With this win, U.C. has moved back in contention for the major league interfaculty title.

Go, Ken, Go!

Varsity Blues' starry winger, Ken Linseman, here when the Blues take on the surprising McGill Redmen at Varsity Arena. A win for the Blues would boost their lead to four points over idle Laval.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Utter Ecstasy Is Deflated

Editor, The Varsity;

May I congratulate W. M. on her brave attempt to deflate one of our most subtle and pernicious myths: that of the utter ecstasy of a woman. She has dared to step down from the antiseptic and sterile pedestal upon which we have placed her.

The sin of our age is this: it denies reality. Unwilling to turn seriously to the past (in order to learn and know) it cultivates a superficial mode of existence; an intense personalism which feeds itself, which exudes only saliva to digest. It is as a result of this romantic complexus, this baseless striving and struggling merely to define the corporeal limits of our existence, that we must have woman, not as a fellow-human, but as a goddess who will succour us in time of need in some exotic narcotic fairyland.

To be sure, a Marilyn Monroe promises us a swift and fatal absorption; but she can do so only by suggestion, by tease, by a possibility. She must hide behind the facts, must do a dance of the seven veils of seduction. It is this lack of blunt fact, this defect in realism that allures us ever on, unsatiated, only to be fooled.

Let us see woman as she is: human, a partner in the glory of life, whose source of dignity is our own: God, the absolutely real.

give it the college try

We were very disappointed in the chief librarian's representation to the SAC.

The students' council invited the chief librarian to speak to a meeting because students had expressed a need for the library to be open later in the evenings.

Mr. Blackburn's answer to the honest, though perhaps uninformed questions of the SAC were evasive.

He was asked to talk about night hours and spent considerable time outlining the day schedule.

He was told that students did not consider the smoking room a suitable studying place, and yet he continued to quote statistics on the use of the smoking room as indicative that students did not need the library open later.

He mentioned that there were agitations in some places for a two o'clock closing time, and that the students approaching him had all approached him because of the need of others, not their personal need. These answers do not represent to our minds a sincere attempt to face the issue honestly.

The SAC has now asked that the Wallace Room be kept open until eleven for the month of March. This is a reasonable request. If it is not granted, it can only mean that the administration does not wish to cooperate with the students.

Let's give it the old college try, Mr. Blackburn.

love and escapism

Love, they say, makes the world go around.

Idly wondering if such be the case, we look at modern society and find: tooth-paste advertisements, teen-age fan clubs, Hollywood "love" stories, true "love" magazines, soap operas, the tepid depths of Young people's minds, the accent on the Saturday night party.

These are all associated to some extent with the conception of "love." We wonder: Is this "really" love?

We observe that the majority of persons are searching desperately for love, and that their conception of it is manifested in their behaviour and reactions. Perhaps they are making up for a lack of faith in supernatural beings; perhaps they are running away from the new science, which reduces existence to a grey world of fact.

Love is personal; love represents a comfortable substitute for the lost meanings, that it is fashionable (in the light of modern psychology) to discuss these days.

Therefore we decide: love (or, better, romance) is becoming the God of our modern, industrialized man. He seeks love, an ideal which, to him, implies four major patterns of existence: sexual fidelity to the loved person, some sort of possession of the loved person, a state of "liking" of the loved person, and "romance."

Unfortunately for our modern man, these are ideals unlikely to be realized. Sexual fidelity is out of fashion these days in a surprisingly large proportion of the western world; "possession" is a nasty word to use in a population which idolizes "freedom" and "democracy"; romance is unlikely to last after the honeymooners return from their blissful sojourn in New York.

"Liking" of course is quite overlooked, since it is taken for granted and doesn't appear to matter much anyway.

The result is that modern man is disillusioned. He does all the terrible things he does, almost despite himself. He cannot cope with the other forces of his environment; he is drifting in a sea of conflicting ideas.

It is difficult to foresee this wealth of ideas being decreased. It is difficult to foresee any improvement in the divorce rate or the outlook of the much-maligned man on the street. There will, it seems, always be this conflict between the ideal of love, and the immediate gratification of desire.

In fact, it might almost be a good idea to try to change the ideals to suit the situation.

Preparation

Editor, The Varsity:

This letter is to serve two purposes — primarily to agree with Jim Vasoff on the necessity of the All-Campus Show and also to enlarge on a few of his statements. Leon Major was asked to direct the U.C. show before he was approached by S.A.C. I think that his final decision was based on the preparedness of U.C. to undertake the venture.

The statement that an All-University Show has been absent from the campus for the last 3 years seems to me unfounded for the casts of both Brigadoon and Kiss Me Kate have been composed of students from the 4 Arts Colleges, S.P.S., Arch., and Meds, although the shows have been financially backed by U.C.

If there is to be an A.V.R. next year, it must be preceded by a great deal of preparatory work — most essential being a centrally located rehearsal place.

Producer — Kiss Me Kate.

Ill Will And Publicity

Editor, The Varsity:

We of Canterbury Club, the Anglican organization of the campus, cannot let stand the statement of Mr. Neil McLean in The Varsity of Monday, Feb.

Lack Of Dignity

Editor, The Varsity:

I beg to disagree with the opinion presented in Monday's editorial, stating that the somewhat reactionary comments on "A Women's Eye View" are a sign of social immaturity. On the contrary, I would suggest that Miss Michener's article was but an echo of the immaturity of most members of this University.

They are under the misapprehension that ceaseless bragging about feats in sex and drink call forth the admiration of fellow students and serve to assert their superiority. They are like small boys so fascinated with a new toy that they can speak of nothing else.

Has it ever occurred to Miss Michener that women have suffered similar experiences throughout the course of history, and simply because it is a thoroughly natural process which everyone is aware of and takes into consideration, it has not been considered necessary to write about it in a literary capacity?

Not many people nowadays shy away from such subjects in intelligent discussion, and certainly not in the University.

It is not that I object to discussion on the subject in the Varsity if there were anything important to say but Miss Michener's paragraph was simply a manifestation of the appalling lack of dignity, taste and sophistication of the students of this University.

Judy Bootoch,
I. U.C.

Editor, The Varsity:

The Varsity is on its way out. There was one good editorial in last Wednesday's issue. The one on the B.A. may have contained the germ of an idea, but cannot the editors come up with something more constructive than the lamenting wailings of a chronic beeper?

As to the "Woman's View", the writer probably knows that the only solution to her problem is temporary and impractical. None the less, better she try it than waste everyone's time.

Last Wednesday's was one bad issue, but it typifies most of the recent issues. A newspaper is not the place to air useless complaints about insoluble problems. Neither is it the place for meaningless moanings, with no hint as to the problem's solution.

The S.A.C. has resorted to arbitrary action before. I suggest they do it again, in the face of incompetence.

Karl Jaffary, I Vic.
Ed. Note: "Lamenting wailings of a chronic beeper..."

6, that "The Canterbury Club has ripped down many Mother Courage signs and replaced them with their own publicity advertising A Night of Sin."

We wish to exonerate ourselves from this despicable accusation, for it is completely false.

Canterbury has for many weeks past placed posters around the campus. We have never in any way tampered with other advertising.

Canterbury is so far from being opposed in any way to the production that we have contracted to purchase a block of 15 tickets for Friday night.

Mr. McLean appears to have been successful in drumming up a good deal of ill will as well as advertising.

The Executive,
Canterbury Club.

HH Concert

Kathleen Parlow, hailed by many as the world's greatest woman violinist, will be the guest artist at this Sunday Evening's Hart House Concert. Since 1941, Miss Parlow has been the leader of the Parlow String Quartet in Toronto. As a young girl she achieved world fame as a virtuoso and since has made many triumphal European and North American tours. In North America she has appeared with all the important symphony orchestras, one notable engagement being sixteen recitals with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Parlow's program will consist of three Sonatas by Brahms; Sonata A major, Opus 100, Sonata G major, Opus 78, and Sonata D minor, Opus 108. In these numbers she will be accompanied by Mario Bernardi, pianist, who was a soloist earlier in the Sunday Evening Concert series.

Members of Hart House may pick up invitations for themselves and their guests at the Porter's desk.

Chicken Feathers

BRECHT'S EPIC THEATRE

Trinity Play Encouraging

Brecht is a social realist and the plays he writes are epic. As a socialist he is in some respects an anti-individualist, and the epic form of his theatre was developed as a result of his attempt to express the plight of man rather than the plight of the individual. Theoretically, he is an anti-Aristotelian: he rejects the notion of purgation through catharsis, and attempts a kind of will to action by stimulating the audience's sense of social justice.

Brecht tries a reversal of the usual dramatic triad of purposes, passion, and perception; by making the audience the hero; he teaches them by example, they are roused by the plight of the characters, and go home determined to alter the conditions which provoked the action. This is the theoretical basis of Brecht's dramaturgy. The practical results must as in this week's Hart House production, be another matter; one could hardly imagine the elders of Trinity College rushing home to join the Party.

Mother Courage is Brecht at his second best, with his radical dramatic theories not too much in evidence. The plot (and there is one) concerns the plight of Mother Courage and her children, who run a supply wagon during the Thirty Years' War. At the beginning of the play Mother Courage, by drawing marked bits of paper from a hat, foretells the death by war of her three children. Her attempts to prevent this and to sustain a profitable business form the substance of the ironic action.

Mother Courage, played with zest and genuine sensitiveness by Juliana Gianelli, I take to be a symbol of mankind, depending for a livelihood on the war that slowly destroys her. Her sons, played competently by Neil McLean and Phil Spencer, represent two types: Eiliff, dark, impetuous, quick-thinking, and Swiss Cheese, blond, loyal, simple, honest. Catherine, her daughter, a mute, hurt, pitiful, and infinitely suffering thing, is very well played by Margaret Hogarth. The cook, well played by John Mackenzie Wilson, manages occasionally to look like a greying Hemingway. Highest praise, though, goes to James Mainprize, the weak, hypocritical, humorous Chaplain who unfrocks himself at the time of the first Protestant defeat and travels in disguise with Mother Courage until the peace, when, deepened by his experience, he hesitatingly reassumes his robes.

The sets are splendid. The use of a series of simple, suggestive ground sets against a plain drop was effective in setting the individual mood for each movement of the action.

The production and direction were of professional calibre, but I had expected something more of the Brechtian manner. Brecht's style of indicative acting might have been more suitable for amateur players who tended towards the overly emotional in their roles. On the whole, the production provides the dual pleasure of seeing the rarely performed Brecht and enjoying a good evening's entertainment.

Don Owen.

BOYFRENZIED

By this stage in the week, little more need be done for The Boyfriend than give it an affectionate envoi. It ambled into the Royal Alex Monday, with a boop-boop-a-doop-a and a razz-a-mattaz (also a record advance-box-office sale), and if it isn't sold out for its closing two days, it damn well should be. This light-hearted spoof of the mannered musical of the 20's has everything the tired old second-run Broadway shows lack—ingenuity, wit, humour, originality, and (most of all) an apparent spontaneity that implies the cast is loving every minute of it. Being English, they're happily not over-belligerent about it.

Perhaps the show's most outstanding quality is its constant flow. Plot elements are given a tongue-in-cheek lack of emphasis, and the basic humour lies in the situation, extrapolated from the typical product of the romantic manques of the 20's. Rich girl pretending to be poor girl falls in love with rich boy pretending to be poor boy. The various ensuing entanglements are obvious.

Throughout the evening, Toronto's double-chinned dowagers and the older set in general seemed to have themselves quite a time—the Alex can seldom have been the scene of almost overwhelming applause for a musical's overture. But perhaps it was more wistful wishful thinking than nostalgia.

Everything relies on extrapolation—the songs are spoonier or more frantic than they ever were thirty years ago, the girls more fluttery, the boys more vacuous, and the acting more stylized. Lines are delivered with a blatant stare at the audience, even a bug-eyed "Oo, look, here comes Polly," when Polly enters onstage. And grand exits have never been grander, or funnier.

Jo Ann Bayless as Polly and John Hower as Tony are always in impeccable taste and good voice, and yet are only slightly superior to the massed inanity that makes up the general cast. And if last year's social criterion of acceptance—being able to do a mean Charleston—still operates, The Boyfriend cast should be acceptable in the very best circles.

Mendelssohnic Hardly Tonic

On Tuesday night the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir jumped out of their Handelian rut to attack three spectacular works. The first was an arrangement of God Save the Queen by Sir Ernest that vies with The Star Spangled Banner for dazzling effects. Fortunately the sound was a little muzzy, so the more imperialistic verses passed harmlessly over the audience's head.

That same muzziness in Vaughan Williams' Dona Nobis Pacem made the programme notes vital, though the music conveyed all the drama of the work. Sir Ernest obtained magnificent results from the orchestra, particularly from the percussion in The Angel of Death. The words of this Cantata are from scripture and poems of Walt Whitman.

The Mozart Mass performed is called The Great to distinguish it from another in the same key. It is completely rococo. Parts are banal. The Credo is naive. The five part choruses were indistinct—the double chorus nearly catastrophic through uncertain gestures from Sir Ernest. All the rest was highly entertaining. The choir was best in the Messianic ending of the Gloria.

Lois Marshall was able to exhibit a fluid operatic style in the Mozart and great feeling in the Dona Nobis Pacem. Donald Garrard, baritone, was effective when the scores gave him a part. Mary Morrison's voice was not pleasant and she seemed prone to ingratiating mannerisms peculiar to Oratorio sopranos—excessive facial distortions in particular. Jon Vickers was the tenor soloist and inadequate.

Chris Wilson.

critic in the dark

Mudge Budge Not Grudged

Subversive sections of society once more imperiled the Hart House orchestra on the Sabbath. This time it was some fanatic who stole the Mudge from Boyd Neel's unattended music stack. As Dean Neel announced this disaster before the start of the concert, an audible sigh of something went round the Great Hall. It seemed to indicate that the audience thought this theft a Felix Culpa, but their relief turned to chagrin when told that Mudge was a contemporary of Handel. He is indeed an elusive gentleman. No one quite knows where or when he was born, except that it was somewhere in England and that his six concertos were written around 1750. We were assured that it is a delightful work and that we shall have an opportunity of hearing it when the parts reappear.

The first of Handel's 12 Concerti Grossi, published in 1739, was played instead. Many are already familiar with these works through Boyd Neel's recordings. The Hart House Orchestra matched these with equal precision. The first movement was attacked with tremendous verve. The tranquil Largo was followed by a brilliant fugal movement in which the whole structure and intricacy of the writing was brilliantly exposed. The bite of the cellos in the final air even gave the illusion of a harpsichord in their midst.

The next work was by the Swedish composer, Dag Wren. Written in 1937, it contained none of the neurosis so often associated with contemporary composers. Unfortunately, this did creep into the playing of first movement, which was exceedingly taut. The Romanza was a complete cure, the cellos very rich and the orchestra playful, finally tossing the sound away to scamper into the next field.

Beethoven's Septet was composed in 1800 and said to be the last piece of "Useful Music" that he wrote—that is, music specifically intended for amusing young ladies. The scoring is for bassoon, horn, clarinet and string quartet—it is however quite legitimate to increase these forces and it is certainly justified by the results. Throughout the piece the orchestra was most responsive and produced some real virtuoso playing. The strings sang as one, as intended, while Albert Fratz soared to sublime heights in the solo part of the last movement. The one pitfall was avoided, since the numerically stronger violins did not drown the cellos and violas, who for their beauty of sound were matched only by the clarinet.

I suppose someone will say I am falling as a critic if I omit to mention that the horn made some rather rude noises in the variations.

Note—The last programme of the season has not been completed. Members of the Association are invited to give suggestions to Boyd Neel, or Henry Best, chairman of the Association. These should be works suitable for a small orchestra, usually string, so Schonberg's Gurrelieder and a few others would not be sensible.

Chris Wilson.

Sea Shames Disney

In three different ways, Walt Disney is made to look just a little foolish at the Towne this week. First of all, the preview of his latest, The Littlest Outlaw, shows him at his most sickeningly winsome, with closeups of sunny little smiles and of tears trickling down chubby pink cheeks. Secondly, the currently running Musical Land, the latest re-pickings from his old garb-bags of episodic music-animations (Make Mine Music, Melody Time, etc.) brings back some of the nightmarish lack of taste that reached its peak in The Three Caballeros. Most of all, the independently produced feature-film, Naked Sea, makes his own "true life adventures" seem amateurish (though infinitely painstaking) by comparison.

If you think North-Sea herring and Pacific tuna are caught in pretty well the same way, you should see this film. It traces the sixteen-week trip of a San Diego "tuna-cutter," the hunt for the hold-filling 350 tons of tuna that takes the crew down the west coast of the American continent all the way to Peru. On the way, the camera-man catches a typhoon and a volcanic eruption, and captures them for us with some magnificent colour photography.

A haunting musical background of harmonica and guitar, miraculously avoiding self-conscious folksiness, a crisp, gruffly poetical commentary, and the NATURAL beauties and cruelties of the "Star-Kist"'s domain, play considerable parts in making this a considerable film.

Jarvis Exposer Exposed By RIT

Running the gamut from jazz to judo to Jarvis Street, third year journalism students at Ryerson Institute have published a Ryersonian imitation of Maclean's magazine.

Sprinkled in between, are features about the increasing number of good restaurants, a short history of Ryerson and an inside story of the women behind the principal of Ryerson.

Earle Beattie, one of the men behind the recent Jarvis Street expose is himself exposed. Beattie, a former journalism instructor at Ryerson, has led an interesting life and is now in the process of writing a feature for Maclean's about Ryerson.

A prize winning short story, The Duel is included as a bonus feature. Another short story set in Toronto deals with a lonely youth who spends a night in a bag and at a hotel party where he meets with his fate.

The Ryersonian annually publishes a mock edition of leading magazines. In the past such publications as Time and Newsweek have been the object of the staff's journalistic endeavours.

The magazine gives the student's a chance to display their wares at writing magazine stories. Usually assigned as a Christmas project, this year the publication was delayed because of other work.

"But we plan an intensive campaign Friday", said Lit President Peter Larmour. Larmour said that he had had the blood campaign "drawn to his attention for the first time" on Wednesday, and therefore the delay on UC's blood collections. Miss Flaherty stated she had contacted the Lit weeks ago about the campaign, but Larmour denied receiving the information.

Miss Flaherty said she was surprised to learn that UC had not started on its blood campaign. She said the campaign was going fairly well, but not enough returns had been made from the various colleges and faculties to tell the exact number of donors that would be giving blood all next week at the School of Nursing.

"Miss Flaherty asked all students desiring to give blood to contact their blood reps immediately, as the campaign closes today. "We'd like to meet our quota", she said.

Rochester's Oratory Tumbles St. Mikes Debaters By 20-15

By BEV LEEDS

The resolution that "An Absolute Form of Government Could Solve France's Difficulties" was defeated by a vote of 20 to 15 in a debate in Brennan Hall Thursday.

The speakers for the affirmative were Richard Mastrodonato and Charles Vacanti from St. Michael's College. Speakers for the negative were John Pettigrass and Don Pandena from St. John Fisher College in Rochester.

The affirmative stated that in times of crisis some form of absolutism is necessary. Canada and the United States recognize this fact, he said, by giving the Prime Minister and the President the right to assume the role of dictator in such times. Another example of the advantage of dictatorial methods was Mussolini, who under his Fascist regime, pulled Italy out of its worst economic crisis.

"Any fool can see," he stated, "that France today having 28 political parties, is in a political crisis severe enough to warrant an absolute form of government."

"We are not such fools," thundered the opposition, "to advocate a government that would be free from limitations and responsibility."

When the affirmative asserted that the French people were inadequately informed about their government—the political parties having only 10 minutes to speak on television and radio—it was countered that 82 per cent of the people had voted, an indication of the "alertness and interest of the electorate."

"It was further significant," claimed the opposition, "that although passing from one crisis to the next in the past eight months, France has not turned to Communism—another indication of their repulsion for a one-party system.

"France cannot stand an absolute government, as was proved by the revolutions against absolutism in the 18th and 19th centuries. There is something in the French people," it was concluded, "that puts liberty and individualism above everything else."

"Liberty and individualism were not suppressed under absolutism," the affirmative argued. "Under Louis XIV and Napoleon, France realized her greatest playwrights, artists and philosophers—this is what the French are particularly fitted for, and this is exactly what absolutism provided for."

Carabin Weekend

By DOUG HUBLEY

The Carabin cavalcade to the University of Montreal is described by an excursion member.

Students' Administrative Council made it possible for 43 Toronto students to experience several days of French-Canadian life.

Through speeches, group discussions and coffee talks, French and English traditions were well analysed. The Toronto students were given an opportunity to see French-Canadian architecture, paintings, home life and religion. It was quickly realized that only experience can give a true insight into the French-Canadian environment.

At the Mayor's banquet in Montreal, Father Lavery of St. Mike's said English culture and French-Canadian culture stems from different traditions and environments.

"We can hope for a harmonious Canada only after its citizens realize each must develop in its own way with mutual appreciation for the other, and a common goal for all," said Father Lavery.

The parties of the tour were a continuous roar of laughter and toasts. Smiles could still be seen through the bruised complexions that were acquired two-thirds of the way down Mount Gabriel. French songs filled the air 23 hours a day.

President Moore of Victoria College amalgamated parties with some Dinah Shore philosophy—"You Can't Have One Without the Other."

Donna Lough and Hugh Little of the Toronto committee made perfect arrangements for U of T and University of Montreal students.

Meds' Careers Is Forum Topic Meeting Tonight

A forum on post grad problems for medical students will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in Falconer Hall. Dr. A. D. Kelly, general secretary of the Canadian Medical Association will discuss "Your Career After Graduation." A question period will follow.

Dr. Kelly has been dealing with undergrads, interns and practising doctors for a number of years and is aware of their problems. He will include a discussion on such questions as socialized medicine, setting up an office practice and specialization.

The last forum of this type was held two years ago and was attended by over 200 med students.

Big Bad Boys From Burwash Hall Attempt Terror In Residence Raid

Residents of Annesley Hall and the Victoria Women's Residences on Bloor Street registered general disgust and annoyance Thursday morning following a minor furor caused by two smart alex pranksters who raided the residences the previous night.

Entering Annesley Hall about 2 a.m. they proceeded by various stunts to awaken the sleeping girls. They entered one room and set off an alarm clock and shone a strong light in another and then raced up and down the stairs.

"I was scared and my roommate gave her usual nightmare scream," said one awakened resident.

Moving on to the Bloor Street houses they hid all of the fuses in one and then rang the fire alarm. "Every one was down in a minute," said one girl.

In another house they played a piano.

Finally, to cause still further disturbance, they called the police, told them of their prank and then beat it before the police arrived.

Their identity is not known but their familiarity with the buildings has led residents to believe that they were from Burwash Hall, said one of the girls in the residence.

The Annesley House president expressed the girls' "disgust and indignation" regarding the incident. "We felt that it was a completely childish prank, not worthy of boys of university calibre. We would not even consider retaliation!"

Abroad For Free WUS Will Pay All Apply by Feb. 29

World University Service of Canada invites applications for five positions as study tour leaders for the 1956 summer tour program. Greece, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Russia and Yugoslavia are on the summer's agenda.

Applicants may be men or women graduates who plan to return to a Canadian University next year as a grad student or faculty member. They must be willing to assist WUS work on their own campus following their return.

A speaking knowledge of French, German or Spanish is desirable but this may be waived.

WUS will pay travel, accommodation and meals except during free periods. Each leader will help work out an itinerary for his group.

Deadline for applications is February 29. Candidates should submit age, academic qualifications, citizenship, birthplace and experience in business, language and travel along with letters and other supplemental documents giving character and leadership.

Epstein Lack Explained

N. J. Endicott, chairman of the University College Committee on Creative Writing issued the committee's report last night on the Epstein Awards in Creative Writing. They are open annually to undergraduates of University College, and provide up to $800 in awards annually.

The report said that the committee has been "very disturbed by a real deterioration in the quality of material submitted for the Epstein and other prizes in recent years."

"It seems," the report continues, "as if there are few undergraduates of literary talent able or willing to give their time and effort in writing."

"There were signs of talent in some poems and short stories, but after a considerable discussion the committee decided to make no awards rather than give one or two consolation prizes."

It was further stated that the committee proposed to make a vigorous effort to give greater publicity to the awards, to again post subjects in various classes and to reduce somewhat the length of critical essays and to send notices to all instructors in University College suggesting that they urge students of ability to submit work.

Mr. Endicott said that individual awards as high as $500 may be won and that the total amount of prizes each year is approximately $800.

"This should be an inducement to write during the summer," said Mr. Endicott. "It is possible that the date for submission of material may be set later in the year."

The present yearly deadline is November 30.

Several previous Epstein Award winners have been fairly well known writers. James Rainie, whose winning story, The Box Social, was reprinted in several magazines, is now teaching creative writing at the University of Manitoba. Six awards were made last year.

SENIOR MATRICS POOR?

HS Finals Antiquated, Staff, Students Ask U. Entrance Exams

University sponsored exams should replace the antiquated Senior Matriculation system for entrance to university, said students and staff in a Varsity forum last week. The new system would be province-wide, for all Ontario universities.

"The matriculation examination... is bound to become mechanized both in its papers and marking and is not very suited to bring out the qualities required for good scholarship; the emphasis is bound to be on memory rather than on intelligence and originality," said G. M. A. Grube, professor of Classics at Trinity.

University-set examinations would "test intellectual calibre and independent attainment more effectively," said Mr. A. D. Lockhart, Instructor at the University of Toronto Schools.

Several of those questioned suggested psychological tests as well as scholastic one, to see if prospective students can profit from university. A "General Knowledge" exam, was suggested for future arts students.

About a quarter of the student group were satisfied with the present system, based on Senior Matriculation results, though some of these thought university exams might go along with the fifth form results.

Several professors said they wanted some indication of the student's aptitude for university. "Some assurance of students' motivation and general fitness for university work (is needed)," said Warden McCulley of Hart House. "Discover (his) ability to profit from course entered," said Prof. W. J. McCurdy of University College.

Students were concerned with the problem of standards of entrance. One student, however, disagreed with the majority. Standards should be "more lenient than they are now." "Let universities weed out the mediocre, not the high school," he said.

Another student was concerned with "extra-curricular" activities. "The usual requirements, with the exception of money," he specified. "An honest desire to learn, and not marry or be promiscuous, if the application is for Arts."

High school courses "should not be designed with university requirements in mind, but rather to be complete in themselves," said Mike McMordie, (III Eng. Phys.).

AVR—Yes Or No Advocate Argues Finances Needed

Proponents of the All Varsity Revue have been circulating many arguments in favour of this all-campus effort.

A well-known supporter of an AVR maintained last night that Walter Gonet's unfavourable comparison of AVR with a college musical show like Kiss Me Kate was invalid on three accounts. Firstly, he said, $700.00 is needed to secure the copyright for a Broadway show like Kiss Me Kate, a sum which an AVR needn't spend. Secondly, continued this anonymous enthusiast, "only an AVR is motivated by a true all-campus spirit, a contrast to the more parochial spirit of a college or faculty show."

He suggested finally that the very wealthy SAC should not even hesitate to pay any losses that an AVR might incur. "After all," he observed, "the criterion of a worthwhile campus effort is not financial solvency, so why the hell shouldn't SAC be willing to help subsidize something as worthwhile as this?" After all she is subsidizing the all-campus Varsity so why not the all-campus revue?"

Choral Festival At UofT Sunday At Convocation Hall

The University of Toronto is this year host at the eighth annual inter-varsity choral festival, the event involving over 280 students from Guelph, the University of Western Ontario, McMaster, and the U of T, takes place on Sunday, February 19th at 8:30 in Convocation Hall.

What? Only One Nude? Anyway, See HH Photos

The Hart House Exhibition of Photographs is now hanging on the walls of the Art Gallery, committee members reported last night. The show, however will not be open to the public until Tuesday noon.

Much to the regret of the committee, only one nude was accepted by the judges.

A record number of entries since

This is the second major appearance of the U. of T Chorus this year. In addition to singing their individual selections, the four choruses will combine for three concluding numbers under Mr. Alfred Rode, conductor of the University of Western Ontario chorus.

Canada Materialistic; Lacking Art Czech NFCUS Student Observes

"Canada is an historical vacuum. Her cities are void in artistic decoration. She is excessively materialistic and Canadian students work very hard."

These are the observations of Jiri Pelikan in the February issue of World Student News, published in Prague by the Communist International Union of Students (IUS) in an article on Canada and her students.

Pelican was a Czech IUS observer at this summer's NFCUS conference at Edmonton. He visited the University of Toronto in November. In the article written for left-wing students throughout Asia, Africa and Europe Pelikan analyses his impressions of Canada.

Canada's lack of a lengthy historic tradition leads Pelikan to observe that he was in an "historical vacuum." Canada's modern cities are unique not only for this historical lack (which he agrees a pioneer country could not be expected to have) but also for a complete void in "artistic decoration."

He observes that the people have no emotional need for that cosmopolitan artistic atmosphere of the older European peoples, a fault, he feels, undoubtedly caused by Canadian excessive materialism.

"A chase after money that brings to the life of the country a nervous haste, a restriction of broad social interests and a shortage of friendliness so important for a really happy life."

But Pelikan thinks that Canada does have some saving graces: Her people and students impressed him as working very hard and very long. This was rudely impressed on him when he was awakened at 5:30 every morning at the NFCUS conference.

The highly developed industrial technique that has blessed Canada with a magnificent standard of living has been possible only because of the "hardworking and active nature" of her citizens. "Yet," he continues, "this industrial technique has not enabled Canada to make any significant contributions to artistic creativity."

He is profoundly disappointed at the Canadian student's universal unawareness of those pressing problems that he feels torment European, African and Asian students—"national and social problems, the development of national culture, the orientation of the national economy, the relations between university and society."

Spanish Colleges Riot For Freedom Of Student Gov't

Madrid, Spain: Feb. 10 — (Exchange) — Clashes between police and university students continued for the third straight day. One student, a Falangist (Dictator Franco's party), was severely wounded in the rioting, and doctors fear that he may not live.

Police officials express concern that the death of the student would touch of a new wave of rioting.

The riots began over the desire of some students at Madrid University to have a student government free from Falange influence. They were opposed by fascist students, and in the ensuing riots the police were called out. A total of three fascist students were injured.

Labor Problems Will Be Probed

"What's Ahead for Labor" will be the topic of a discussion sponsored by the Woodsworth School of Workers of the Ontario Woodsworth Memorial Foundation.

The seven-part series, to be conducted each Wednesday between February 15 and March 28, will feature many outstanding speakers in the labor field. They will deal with some of the problems to be faced by labor in the years ahead.

re-gilled

Robert Gill, Hart House Theatre's resident director, is back in business after languishing in a Baltimore hospital for several weeks. The director, whose efforts here in the past ten years have done much to raise the standards of Canadian theatre, has just finished fighting off a bout of cervical neuritis, and has embarked on a production guaranteed to give anyone a headache—a full-scale Hamlet, to be staged at Hart House February 23 to March 3.

"The gimmick for this production is—no gimmick," says Mr. Gill, who intends to emphasize the play's qualities as a play, concentrating on action and leaving the audience to ingraft their own psychological theories.

Callboard

All sorts of things in their second, third, or fourth week. Among those that ought to be caught up on, if you haven't done so already, is the BRITISH SCULPTORS show at the Art Gallery, and THE BOY FRIEND at the Alex. THE FIFTH SEASON continues at the Avenue, for some reason.

This Tuesday and Wednesday the TSO appears at Massey Hall with MIECZYSLAW HORSZOWSKI, pianist, as soloist. THE TANEC, Yugoslav National Folk Ballet group, promises well for Massey Hall tonight.

KISS ME, KATE, this year's UC musical (last year it was BRIGADOON with St. Mike's—remember? You should), runs from tonight to Saturday at Hart House Theatre. Warning—tickets at last tally were available only thru Thursday.

OCE turns up this weekend with their annual play—this time, Andreyeff's esoteric comedy, THE SABINE WOMEN.

Hordes of new ones—best is NAKED SEA at the Towne, a complete sleeper with vivid documentary punch. And when it goes, comes Olivier's RICHARD III.

Bard Goes Modern As Kate Hits Campus

Brush Up Your Shakespeare with Cole Porter's Kiss Me, Kate at Hart House Theatre this week, the musical about an assorted group of 'strolling players,' gangsters, chorus cuties, movie stars and has-beens putting on Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew. The University College Production is by an All-Varsity cast under the direction of Leon Major.

Major chose the play for its spirit and appeal to a University audience, and for its possibilities of exciting, imaginative staging. His version, as he puts it, "will move with the rapidity of a machine-gun." He is stressing the relationship of the two plots, a clever twinning of a free adaption of scenes from Shakespeare's "Shrew" with the back-stage, low-down love-life of the four principals. The scenes from Shakespeare are designed for action and colour, with tumblers and jugglers, dancers and singers romping over the stage against the background of Padua, as designed by Major and Lawrence. The Elizabethan costumes, by Catherwoods, will add to the spectacle.

Kiss Me, Kate is the second big musical to be produced at Varsity, chosen to follow the success of Brigadoon last year (which was also directed by Leon Major). "Kate" was an immediate Broadway hit with both critics and audience. The songs (e.g. "So In Love, Wundabar") swept to the hit parade, the play took the Antoinette Perry Award (best play of the year). As the arch-deacon of New York critics cooed, "Kiss Me, Kate is a blissfully enjoyable musical show."

Fleming Alone

Although the Blues played well they just did not have the spark to hold the Redmen off the score sheet. Here a lone Redman goes in on Al Fleming, who played an outstanding game in the nets for the Varsity crew, while Brian Anderson and Red Stephen are just out of distance. Both Stephen and Anderson played their usual excellent brand of hockey, but they, along with their team mates, were no match for the fast crew from Montreal. As could be expected, fiery Len Sigurdson of McGill got into the picture.

Hockey Blues Lose 2-1 Linseman, Fleming Star McCann, McMullen Score

By JOHN BROOKS

Rocky Robillard led his McGill Redmen into Toronto Friday, and they entrained for home some twelve hours later after handing the Varsity Blues a stunning 2-1 defeat. The victory marked McGill's second straight win, both over the front-running clubs in the League, and although they seem to have hit the warpath of victory, first place is still a long distance off. They trail the leading Blues by six points, and have six games remaining. On Saturday night, U. of Montreal defeated McGill 7-6.

It was strictly McGill all the way in the first two periods as their pretty passing and close checking kept the Blues a bit bewildered. Varsity came to life in the third, but just couldn't cope with the determined tribe. The Toronto crew looked like anything but league-leaders and it wasn't until the final canto that things began to click, but the Redmen were not to be denied.

Doug McCann, who stands number two in the individual scoring race, shot McGill into a 1-0 lead midway through the first frame, beating Al Fleming with a long shot from near the blue line. It was a floater, and had Fleming baffled all the way as he tried to kick the shot out before it reached the cage and slid between his legs. Don Cossar missed a great chance to tie it up minutes later, when he took a perfect pass from Ken Linseman and blasted a drive off the post.

After a scoreless second, the Blues came roaring out of their doldrums and the pressure they applied paid off at the 2:03 mark of the third when Linseman counted his 13th goal of the season to keep himself well out in front of the scoring. John Akitt garnered the puck from a face-off in the visitors' end and slid it back to Linseman who blasted a low, screen shot past Frank Shaughnessy in the McGill cage.

With the score tied 1-1, the stage was set for Jack McMullen's game-winning goal at 11:43. Gord Currie started the play deep in the McGill end zone, with a long pass to Pete Constable. Constable relayed the puck to McMullen who was roaring down the left boards, and he beat Fleming with a 30-footer, catching the righthand corner of the net.

Fleming, who turned in a stellar performance despite his first-period slip, was easily the best Blue on the ice. He was mainly responsible for keeping the score down to what it was, particularly in the second when he robbed McCann on a clean breakthrough and then went to his knees to block the rebound shot from the stick of Leo Konyk.

Big Len Sigurdson provided the 2,000-odd fans with something to make a noise about with his grandstand antics. He spent a considerable portion of the game in the penalty box, but his toothless smirk and active tongue made him the centre of attention on numerous occasions.

St. Hilda's Tops Downs UC 1-0 Gordon Scores

In the Friday afternoon women's hockey game, St. Hilda's College II downed University College II, 1-0. Although UC was greatly at a disadvantage in that they lacked any bench strength, they played a good game and on several occasions, looked as though they might have broken into the scoring column.

The Trinity gals, time and time again, had excellent opportunities to pop the puck in behind Joan Rudson in the UC nets, but because of her excellent playing, they were unable to chalk up a large score. Particularly, in the first period, when the Saints continually had the puck, did Rudson star.

The lone goal of the game came in the first frame, when speedy Marg Gordon found the open side of the net as she came in on a break away. This was the only occasion that she was able to beat Rudson although she was close on many tries.

The play in the second and third periods continued somewhat sloppy and muddled, but on the whole Trinity dominated the play with Pat Arthur and Ann Johnson playing good defensive hockey in front of goalie Molly Metcalfe, while forwards Glenna Hart, Marg Gordon and Mary Lynn Boys did an excellent job in the offensive department. Coach John Goodwin was scintillating on the bench.

Whites Victorious Down Chicks 5-3

Varsity Whites struck with vengeance on Saturday and thoroughly trounced Pickin' Chicken Bar-B-Q to the tune of 5-3. Despite the closeness of the score, the Whites outplayed the Chicks throughout the game, and, by virtue of their win, climbed out of the League cellar for the first time this year.

Varsity racked up a 5-0 lead by the end of the second period, and tired badly towards the end of the final frame, allowing Pickin' Chicken to close the gap, but held off the desperate last-minute rally long enough to win.

Ted Lotocki and Dud Kearney each fired a pair for the winners and Clare Fisher triggered the other. Right-winger Mike Elik picked up four assists.

Lotocki and Kearney put Varsity in front 2-0 at the end of the first. Just seconds before the period ended, Gord Brockie went off for hooking, and the Whites took advantage of the shorthanded Chicks early in the middle canto as Fisher scored from Grant Mills. Lotocki added his second two minutes later before Brockie went off again, this time for tripping, and Kearney rounded out the Varsity scoring, counting from Elik and Lotocki on a pretty passing play.

Varsity weakened in the third, allowing three goals, but their lead was too great for the Chicks to overcome. Hughes with a pair and McFayden scored for Pickin' Chicken, Hughes getting his with less than two minutes left.

Both teams played with eleven men, Riley, Brodie and Stewart missing from the Whites lineup.

Seniors Falter Intermeds Lose Play McMaster

The basketball femmes of the campus are crying the blues. Things have not looked so bad in many a year! Both the Intermediates and the Seniors lost over the weekend. Particularly discouraging was the showing of the Seniors who lost to Hamilton Teachers' College by a rather one sided score of 44-27.

With the Intercollegiate games only two weeks off at Queens, Toronto's chances of even giving Western a run for their money looks pretty shaky. The Toronto team was off in every department and looked poorly beside the squad from Hamilton.

In the Intermediate game, on Friday, the highly-rated Toronto squad bowed to Ryerson 42-38. It was a close game all the way with Toronto fading toward the end per usual.

On Tuesday evening, at the Ryerson gym, the two Toronto teams will play McMaster.

Hoopsters Win Beat McMaster In Rough Tilt

Hamilton (Staff) — In one of the wildest games the Intercollegiate Basketball League has seen in some time, the University of Toronto Blues decisively defeated McMaster Mauldrons 83-70 Saturday evening in Hamilton. Seven men fouled out in the rough contest, five of them Blues.

Despite the score the win was not an easy one for the Toronto team. Having led by 13 points for most of the game the Blues faltered in the last ten minutes. These ten minutes saw McMaster players parade to the foul line in a steady stream. With Blue men fouling out one after another, Mac narrowed the gap to four points. But that's as close as they could get. The Blues then regained their lost poise and pulled away once more. Within four hectic minutes Pete Potter, Barry Stroud, Hesh Rotman, John Sheppard and Al Vaichulis were forced to leave the game on fouls.

John Daesyhyn again played a standout game for Varsity hooping 21 points. He also grabbed more than his share of rebounds, Leo Madden netted 11 and helped hold the Blues together in the second half scoring most of his shots and outbounding everyone on the court. Hesh Rotman, Jerry Edelist and Barry Stroud, up from the Intermediates, had eight each.

Bert Raphael, the 6'5" McMaster centre, was the game's top scorer with 25 points. Fifteen of the 25 came in the last few minutes and on foul shots when Raphael set up shop at the free throw line. Russ Jackson and Max Wooley had 13 and 11 respectively for the losers. Wooley was Mac's best player of the evening.

In other Intercollegiate activity over the weekend, Assumption won two, beating Queens on Friday night and McGill 71-59 Saturday evening.

Trinity Hockey A's Grab Playoff Berth Lovering, Ellis, Goodwin, German Shine

Trinity A's grabbed a Group Two playoff berth in last Friday's hockey action by upsetting Jr. Skule 3-0. The winners came on the ice to do battle with the chips stacked against them, but they were up for it and showed great team spirit.

The Arstmen struck hard and fast in the first five minutes of the game for two goals and from then on contented themselves with rushing only when a clear-cut opportunity presented itself. Despite this defensive effort, there were several good rushes made by both teams. Although few penalties were called 'both teams were repeatedly guilty of glaring offences, especially elbowing and high-sticking.

In the first minute of the opening period, Bill Lovering scored what proved to be the winning goal from a scramble in front of the SPS net. Minutes later Brooke Ellis scored on a pass from Johnson who made a very nice rush to set up the goal. Rentsis scored for the Engineers, but the tally was disallowed as the buzzer which signals the end of the period did not sound loudly enough to be heard by the players and the "goal" was actually shoved into the net after the period had ended.

Ellis potted the game's final goal with two minutes to go in the game and Skuleboy DeCarlo doing penance. Tdo SPS shots hit the goalposts and this as well as the sparkling play of Goodwin in goal seemed to take a lot of punch out of their offensive. Bill Sanderson of Trinity was tremendous on defence and stopped numerous shots a la Bob Goldham. Gray, Rentsis and Bielewski played well up front for Skule. DeCarlo and Crawley gave their best in a losing effort on defence and gave goalie George German, who had no chance on the shots that beat him, ample protection.

STAFF, STUDENTS

there is a point

Why a university? What purpose does it, or should it, serve?

The university in our society often appears as a mild sort of anachronism, struggling along in its ivory-sided depths, searching for unknown objects, and vainly trying to resist the pressures which a modern and commercial society subject it to.

Often, to an observer, it must seem as though the university — or at least the arts faculties within it — had lost all purpose and point, and that the more technical instruction could be given easier and more cheaply in institutions erected solely for this purpose.

And the half-ashamed, apologetic attitude of many university administrators in pointing out the "practical" services of a university — chlorophyll toothpaste was discovered at one — must help to confirm this impression.

But the university does have a place in society — a place of the utmost significance. Its purpose is to stand a little apart from the rest of the group, to criticize it and hide it, and to always press on to new limits of knowledge and experience. The university is the life of society — it is its hope for the future. Unless we are all completely indifferent to what has gone before and what will come after us, there is a very real, a very vital purpose to be served by these institutions — a purpose that gives meaning to life itself.

A better realization of this fact — a better understanding of the role of the university both on the part of those within and without these institutions — would help to make the university more an understanding critic of society, rather than an apish imitation of it — would help the university to lead society rather than surrender to its baser interests.

worthy of attention

Education as a subject should always be of interest to university students. On these pages The Varsity presents a forum on the problems of education today: the problems that should concern everyone, staff and student, at a university.

The forum may not produce definite answers to the problems under scrutiny. But it may provoke discussion and interest; and discussion and interest are the prime essentials needed for the intelligent solution of any problem.

Profs Offer Criticism On Educational System

PROFESSORS

A great deal of criticism of university and high-school education is needed, say the professors at the University of Toronto. One professor refused to comment "without further study." "The attempt to suggest reforms would require a book rather than a paragraph," said Warden McCulley of Hart House.

But some professors did have comments: Abolition of the lecture was proposed by Prof. Robb of Architecture. "No one ever learns anything in a lecture and there are much more efficient ways to distribute notes."

Prof. Robb proposed as a substitute classes of a dozen or so students, and the development of the seminar system, with individual tutoring.

A change in student motivation was Prof. W. J. McCurdy's (of UC) suggestion. "Does the student come to the course to get what it introduces? Or only to fulfill the next stage of requirement, or get a step ahead?" he asked. "The vets had it," he said. "Many individuals do. How to increase the number? I don't know."

... fewer lectures, but it should be clearly recognized that this places a greater responsibility on the student," said Prof. G. Grube of Trinity. Lectures "that merely 'cover' a course" should be abolished, he said. "If the university confined itself to real university lectures, it should be prepared to fail a large proportion of its students if they do not respond, as many would not. It would, and should, also mean more academic work in the vacations. A three-week vacation before final exams is badly needed," he said.

In the high-schools, Prof. Grube said, some senior people should have few official duties. "This would give them time to remain scholars abreast of their subject and change the whole atmosphere of the schools," he said.

STUDENTS

A wide variety of reforms in university and high school education was also proposed by students answering The Varsity's forum last week. They ranged from special attention for the gifted child to more time to travel between lectures.

Most Say Yes

For Junior Colleges

STUDENTS

Students seem to be generally in favor of two year Junior Colleges, although not without reservations.

For instance, E. D. Lister, II Trinity, viewed the idea as the preparatory step towards the creation of a new full-fledged university.

But others had different ideas. "The idea is no good," said Tom Middlebro, Grad, "it tends toward localism." "I do not approve," said Ronald Barnes, IV Trinity, "education should be kept on the same high basis commensurate with traditional B.A. standards."

One student put his views this way: "The junior college idea, if properly handled, is one solution to the problem of giving a liberal education to the students who will eventually be required to study narrow intensified fields. On the other hand, it can be merely another attempt by the authorities to cater to the ridiculous notion that every Canadian child has an inherent right to a university degree. This 'right' should be based on ability and capacity."

PROFESSORS

Professors also seemed to favor the idea of Junior Colleges but with more reservations and qualifications than students.

Professor George A. Robb of Architecture put his opinion succinctly: "A junior college would only be satisfactory for those people not capable of benefiting from a university education. As a sop to the present day universal desire to have a diploma of sorts, it might be merited, but as a contribution to intellectual achievement, its effects would be nil."

Professor Nelson of History thought the idea worthwhile. Junior colleges, he said, fit into the pattern of an expanding educational system. They cut the costs to students in their locality.

They could help "sort the sheep from the goats" more effectively than the universities with their elephantine freshmen classes, he said.

The colleges could also fit into a pre-professional training program, and may in time develop into universities by themselves. "Several small vigorous liberal arts colleges with high standards, privately-owned, and hence freer of government influence, could have a stimulating effect on our educational system, and our community," he said.

Several students suggested shortening the Ontario highschool course. "At present it is, to a large extent, a waste of time." One man suggested kindergarten at four, high-school at eleven, and a liberal arts course after high-school, with postgrad work at university starting at 18 or 19.

Ron Barnes, (IV Trin.) said fewer lectures and more tutorials, fewer examinations and more long essays or theses, would make better-educated students. Another student asked for "fewer, more stimulating lectures."

"I think all high schools ought to be residential, with permission for week-end leaves granted to anyone with satisfactory standing," was one comment. Language study should begin in public school, as in Quebec, the student said.

"The 'ever-narrowing circles of interest groups' which are threatening the core of democracy—which is the free communication and compromise of ideas," should be broken down, said J. Brownlie (III Trin.).

And an engineer suggested: "Eliminate the present ten minutes break between lectures allowing only enough time to get from one lecture to the next."

Professors Starve On Low Salaries?

Professors at the University of Toronto do not feel that academic working conditions in Canada are ideal.

The chief criticism came for the present scale of salaries.

Said Warden Joseph McCulley of Hart House, "Unless universities can offer reasonable inducements to adequately trained persons to remain in the profession, we cannot hope to compete with the rewards of business and industry, and the quality of instruction will necessarily deteriorate."

Prof. Grube of Trinity Classics emphasized that fact that professors are not so much underpaid as overworked, leaving them little time for research. "It should always be recognized that teaching and tutoring should not take more than a portion of a professor's time; writing and research are important; time to read is even more so.

The whole problem was overrated and simplified according to Prof. H. I. Nelson of the History department: "Who wouldn't like to teach at Harvard or Columbia from a professorial chair paying $15,000 to $20,000 a year and be surrounded with bright, eager research assistants? But, there are not many of these desirable posts. And who would want to teach in Dropsy College or share an office like a clerk with fourteen desks and twenty colleagues, including the department chairman?"

Staff No, Student In Over Academic Gov't

PROFESSORS

None of the professors of the University of Toronto questioned by The Varsity were in favor of academic government by students.

Almost all of them, however, thought that students should be allowed some comment on academic or curriculum matters, or be taken into consultation.

"Quoting a wise president friend," W. J. McCurdy, Professor in Ethics at UC said, "Students shouldn't decide what should be offered, since they don't know it yet; but they should be allowed to judge after they have taken it."

"The academic authorities cannot and should not, shuffle off their primary responsibilities," said Prof. G. M. A. Grube of Trinity. And he added, "There should be more channels for exchange of opinion on academic matters between students and professors, and the university as a whole."

Warden Joseph McCulley also thought that "intelligent students who have experienced a given programme of education might well have some opportunity to make criticisms.

STUDENTS

Students were divided on the question of academic self-government. Some went whole hog, some went half-hog and some went no hog at all.

I. G. McHaffie (OCE) parried the question with another: "Should a child teach child-

Arts And Technical Here To Stay

PROFESSORS

Engineering, science, and arts faculties must stay on the same campus to avoid over-specialization. This is the view of the professors questioned by The Varsity last week. Only one instructor thought they should be separate. "It would be advantageous to the liberal arts," he said.

The professors felt that engineers at present do not derive sufficient benefit from their contact with artsmen. "The present serious shortcomings of technical courses are the result of over-specialization and the lack of almost any exposure to the humanities," said Prof. George Robb, of the School of Architecture.

"The devotion of 7% of an engineering curriculum to the humanities... seems inadequate," said Professor Nelson of the Department of History. One solution he proposed was "a pre-engineering curriculum similar to the familiar pre-med course." "The common geographic location of various faculties is not enough to solve the problem of over-specialization," he said.

Another professor pointed out the advantages of general contact between technical and arts students in non-academic activities.

STUDENTS

The technical and arts faculties should stay together on the same campus, as they are complementary. This is the view of two-thirds of students questioned in The Varsity's forum. Two students suggested that the arts faculties should be thrown out!

Several students were concerned with the humanities education received by engineers. "At present the 'Arts' part of the (Engineering) degree means practically nothing," said John McPhee (III Trin.).

"The arts student learns to think abstractly," said Ronald Barnes (IV Trin.), in favour of moving the engineers. "The engineer, on the other hand, tends to think concretely." "For a well-rounded social life it would be highly inadvisable to remove the technicians," said Bruce Hughes (II Vic.).

Engineers should have the place, said an engineer. "I think you should kick out the Arts Faculties," said 'Shirley'.

But, "they are complementary, not mutually exclusive," said I. G. McHaffie, from OCE.

What Purpose?

PROFESSORS

What is the purpose of a university? There seemed to be no general agreement on this point among staff members, although this was perhaps to be expected with so general a question.

George A. Robb, professor of Architecture, put it this way: "The aim of a university should be to develop in the student an ability to think and an intellectual capacity with some particular emphasis on the field in which he is most interested."

"To preserve knowledge, to increase it, and to communicate it" was the succinct observation of Professor Grube of the Trinity Classics Department. He added that the university is interested in helping to create the type of civilization in which this is possible.

"Research to advance man's knowledge of the universe must be the primary aim of a university," said H. I. Nelson of the History Department. "But if this research is to be fertile, teaching in its broadest meaning must be the second major function."

The ability to think, leadership in society, maturity, and an accumulated body of knowledge; these are the aims students here outline for a university.

Several students commented that the ability to think was more important than knowing facts. "The university has done well if it has succeeded in planting the desire for a wider and more comprehensive study of 'life'."

The development of a philosophy of life in its students was another important function of the university. "To educate people to the point where the cathartic satisfaction of the hero-worship of God has been replaced by a rational, flexible philosophy of life, arrived at with as little emotional interference as possible," said Peter Brawley (II Premeds).

One student expressed his idea less seriously; "If a person has learned to use his brains for more than blob of glup in his cranium, then the university has fulfilled its function."

equally important problem, however, is the way they are taught, and how far the good pupil is challenged to extend himself. It continually amazes me how little comparatively good freshmen manage to know of subjects upon which they have spent a good deal of time."

Professor Nelson of the History Department doesn't think too badly of the present day crop of students. However, he feels they could be better trained in critical thought and clear, oral and written expression.

"High school education is too stereotyped at the Grade 13 level," said another professor.

Warden McCulley pointed out that while the Ontario High School system is open to criticism, it is attempting to do "an almost impossible job." It tries to provide a terminal education for those leaving school for jobs, and also a suitable education for those planning to enter university.

STUDENTS

Students, as well as professors, don't think much of our present high schools. But when it came to deciding what was wrong with the high schools, there was little agreement.

"Not very much" was one student's reaction when asked what he thought of high schools.

I. G. McHaffie, OCE, thought the trouble with the high schools was that they were too general. "There should be more opportunity to specialize," he said. "The result is a broad shallow viewpoint which is not a good preparation for the narrower, deeper study of an honor course."

"One merely takes subjects in high school," said Tom Middlebro, Grad, "one no longer studies them. High school education is too shallow. It is better to allow students to go deeper into specialties than to cheapen the subjects so that everyone can pass."

Other students had odd comments. Neil MacLean thought the study of classics should be obligatory "for suitable students," and Pete Brawley, II Pre-Med, said when asked about high schools: "Idiotic enough to produce an idiotic population."

For Staff And Students

The Questions

THE VARSITY'S POLL

1. What do you think the requirements for entrance to university should be?
2. What do you think of the Junior College idea?
3. Do you think technical and arts faculties should be on the same campus, or separate?
4. What do you think of the high school education university entrants receive?
5. What reforms would you propose in university and high school education?
6. Are we losing staff and prestige because of lower pay or working conditions than highschools or American universities? (Not asked of students)
7. Is the standard of Canadian University education declining or improving? (Not asked of students)
8. What should be the aim of a university?
9. Should students have any share in academic government?

Education: For Better Or For Worse?

Professors of this university were rather reluctant to express any opinion about the present standard of Canadian education. They were asked whether they thought the standard of Canadian University's were declining or improving.

Several professors would offer no comment whatsoever.

"Whether the standard of Canadian University education is declining or improving is entirely a matter of opinion," said Warden

McCulley. "It is my opinion that the standards in this university are still good."

Prof. George A. Robb of the School of Architecture declined to speak for the whole University, but said of his own school: "It has very definitely improved in my own school. Over 75% of those graduating ten years ago would not progress beyond second year today."

One professor's answer to the question is the standard declining or improving was: "Probably no!"

What's news at Inco?

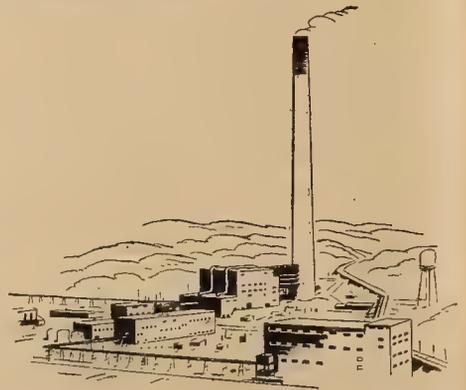

ACTUAL SIZE

These are pellets of iron ore from Inco's new plant at Copper Cliff

This ore contains over 65% iron and less than 2% silica. This is higher in grade than any iron ore now produced in quantity in North America.

This is the $19 million plant which, with planned enlargements, will eventually produce about 1 million tons of iron ore a year. The present unit will treat 1000 tons of pyrrhotite concentrates daily.

Inco's process for the recovery of iron ore took years of laboratory and pilot plant studies. It opens the way for increased recovery of other elements from the complex Sudbury ores when economically feasible.

This latest major result of Inco's process research is one of a series of planned, long-range developments by which its ore treatment processes are being revolutionized. It is a further step toward one of Inco's primary objectives—the maximum utilization of its ores.

Frye Exploring Blake

Sunday's CBLT Exploring Minds offering was a repeat of last year's half hour on the fifty-odd productive years of William Blake, poet, painter, engraver, and darling of Vic English grads. With Professor Northrop Frye supplying the scholarly commentary, Barry Morse supplying the poetry readings, and a choir of kiddiewinkies supplying a surprisingly pristine rendering of Jerusalem from the poet's Milton, the total effect to this viewer was a casual diffusion that proved vaguely dissatisfying.

Prof. Frye seemed a little uncomfortable—perhaps owing to slight embarrassment at being involved in such a boiling-down of a great artist's mind. He could do little else but throw out hints of theory, and we could scarcely absorb the implications while the camera lingered over Blake's etchings themselves and we tried extrapolate that all-important Gestalt from a close-up that was too close up.

In spite of inevitable fragmentariness, the program was an admirable appetite-whetter, and may even draw undergraduates into reading Blake if he's on their course. To someone who has read Blake, though, the whole thing was disturbingly neat.

UC BACKS BLOOD BLITZ

Appointment Cards Due But Still May Sign Up HH Rotunda Forms

"Bloodless UC" came through Friday with over 100 blood donors, as UC student officials carried on a one-day blood blitz to get under the blood campaign wire. The blood clinic opens today, and runs all this week.

The objective of the UC "blitz" was to make up for the delay in UC's participation in the blood drive, said one campaign official. Up to Thursday evening, there were virtually no blood appointments made at UC, and the UC Lit Thursday afternoon even briefly debated the question of whether they should give blood at all.

The question of UC withholding their participation in the campaign was termed "ridiculous" by Al Davidson, IV Meds, publicity chief for the Rer Cross drive.

And Noga Kaplansky, UC's blood drive head, said she was well pleased with the 100 cards turned in in the one day drive.

However, Josephine Flaherty, IV Nursing, and campaign chairman, said that no appointment cards have been received from SPS, Denistry, Trinity, Vic, and Pharmacy. "We must have all these appointment cards in by noon today," said Miss Flaherty, "or the result will be complete chaos."

The blood clinic for all university students is located at the School of Nursing, 50 St. George. If any students have not yet registered for the campaign, they will still have an opportunity to do so today, even though the campaign officially closed last week. Booths are to be set up in the SAC office, and in the Hart House rotunda.

"Are campus males a spineless lot?" Fraternity women intend to find out the answer during the campaign, announced Georgia Dom, president of the Panhellenic Association, following the issuing of a "blood" challenge to the men's fraternities by the women.

"Fraternity members donating blood will be given both fraternity and faculty ratings," stated Miss Flaherty. "In this way donors assist their fraternity groups and boost their faculty's chance of winning the Skule Cannon Trophy."

Campaign officials have set a goal of 1500 pints, exceeding last year's total by 100 pints.

French Canada To Meet Anglos On New 'Plains'

Since the Plains of Abraham the French and English have been trying to cooperate on a friendly plane. And now they've succeeded.

Prof. Sanoillet of U.C.'s French department, working with a French Canadian drama group "Les Treteaux," will produce professionally a bilingual version of the classic play "Antigone." Directing the English version will be Curt Reis, well known campus director, with Martin Stambler, II Law, as producer.

Casting of the English version, and also of a musical chorus, will be in the basement hall of the U.C. Men's Residence, Tuesday night from 7:30 to 10:00.

"Antigone" will run March 22-24 in the new Lawrence Park Auditorium.

Christian Science Discussed By Eminent U.S. Advocate

Application of the understanding of individual and world problems will be the topic of a public lecture on Christian Science to be given on Monday, February 13th, by E. Howard Hooper of St. Louis, Missouri.

at 8 p.m. His subject will be "Christian Science: The Revelation of God's Ever-presence with Man." All students are invited to attend.

Queen's Drops SDS Scheme College-City Strife Is Feared

Kingston: The Alma Mater Society executive of Queen's University will drop the discount service scheme proposed by NFCUS.

Chief cause for this decision is the plan might endanger relations between the university and city administrations. The Queen's NFCUS chairman said the Student Discount Service would not function in a city the size of Kingston where students constitute a large portion of the population.

Kingston Chamber of Commerce and university officials indicated that the city is already contributing $15,000 a year to the university. Any discount scheme might lead participating merchants to cease supporting university and student activities in future. At a recent conference in Hamilton, Peter Martin, NFCUS national president, suggested that SDS could eventually defeat itself by antagonizing the public and merchants.

'There Are No Beds'

A Student Bride

This beauty shows why an increasing number of undergraduate males are being lured into matrimony. —VSP by Ed Hoshkiw

Say No Accomodation For Couples Never had any Problem Dean Says

University of Toronto officials yesterday confirmed that there are no college-sponsored residences here for married couples. The Deans of residence said they had never encountered any difficulty over the matter.

All the women's residences are willing to accept girls whose husbands live outside Toronto, Victoria and St. Hilda's have both had married girls living in residence this year.

The Dean of Women at St. Michael's College saw no objection to taking married girls, but this year, she said, "there are no beds".

Mrs. Innes, Dean of Women at University College, said that the problem had not come up but that, "if there were no other undergrads wanting rooms, there is no reason against having married students."

Officially, the University does not, in any of its college or other residence policies, recognize that married couples want to live together while attending university.

The only two organizations vaguely connected with the University that have tried to accommodate married couples are the Student Christian Movement House and the Campus Co-op.

This year there is one married couple, and one girl whose husband lives in Port Hope living in the SCM House.

Last year the Co-op gave over the top floor of Rochdale House to two married couples. The plan of eventually establishing a married couples' house was dropped, however, not because last year's arrangement did not work out, but because, according to one Co-oper, there was not enough demand for married couples' quarters. There are no married couples living in the Co-op this year, although one resident has a wife living outside Toronto.

It seems quite reasonable that married couples should not want to live in residence where there are also single students. It seems even more reasonable that single students should not want married couples around. Married couples frequently find the spontaneity and high spirits of single people rather overwhelming.

Married students find accommodation in various places. Some of them live with parents, but this solution is the least satisfactory for young people trying to make a life of their own.

There are one or two boarding houses in the University area affording cooking facilities as well as a bed-sitting room. Most offer only a bed-sitting room and a hot plate.

The only other solution for married couples is an apartment in the University area. Apartment rates have a tendency to run high. Unless there is some means of outside support, it is almost always necessary for one of the couple to work to support the other and after that the ideal of student marriage goes up in smoke.

Urquhart Wins Karsh Trophy Judged Best In Photo Contest

The Karsh Trophy, awarded for the best photograph depicting student life and activity was won this year by D. A. Urquhart, an instructor in engineering drawing, with his print entitled, "Solitary Student."

Mr. Urquhart also was awarded the runner-up spot in the 34th Annual Hart House Camera Club Exhibition.

Winners in all groups were announced last night at the salon. Senior award winner was J. B. Foster ("Owl On The Prowl") runner-up, D. A. Urquhart, (Florentine Craftsmanship"). Winner of the Junior award was P. F. Eidinger's "The Tower Of Florence". Second to this, the judges chose "Solitary", submitted by R. Kurkjian. In the color section, W. J. Blackall's, "Winter Gems", was awarded first prize, "Hoar Frost By The Don", by J. B. Foster, was runner-up.

Varsity photographer Ed Hoshkiw had five "Honorable Mentions" topping any other entry. Senior award winner, "Owl On The Prowl" appears beside this column.

Other "Honorable Mentions" went to B. Best, H. Farah, R. Huffman, G. E. Sparrow, D. A. Urquhart, J. Evans, R. Kurkjian, Paul Kyselka, and M. B. Lennox.

Adequacy of Ont. Liquor Policy Debated by Engineers, Trinity

Alcohol will come under the scrutiny of the engineers again this Wednesday, as the Engineering Society holds a debate with Trinity on the Ontario government's liquor policy.

The debate, to be held in Room 102 of the Mechanical Building at 1:00 p.m., will have Leo Gray and Tony Morganstein, both of SPS, as the Negative, and Michael Davis and Pat Fleck, of Trinity as the affirmative.

The text of the resolution reads as follows:

"RESOLVED: That the present policy of Her Majesty's Government in the colony of Upper Canada with regard to the distribution and consumption of alcoholic beverages is more than adequate and is absolutely expedient."

"Owl on the Prowl"

It's Difficult

How Not To Get Married

By QUENTIN BURKE

Do you like to spend vacations in the Caribbean or Florida? Or would you prefer a life-long "holiday" carrying paychecks home to an omnivorous wife and family?

Would-be bachelors beware! They're out to get you if you don't watch yourself. These are the danger years.

Marriage-wise, university years are dangerous ones for the male undergraduate. The years 20-24 are when most men get married. Specifically, of the men who marry each year, 80% are between age 20-29 and of these two-thirds get married between 20 and 24. College graduates, however, take the trip to the altar a little later in life than the general run of the population, but the greatest toll is still taken before thirty.

Greatest risk of getting married then, is during university years and the few years after graduation. All kinds of traps are placed during these years for the unwary. Wily mothers send their daughters to university to acquire husbands as well as degrees. Nurses throng hospitals to prey on young internes.

And the female must be more strategic: women tend to marry younger than men. Twenty-seven percent of women who marry do so under 20, 51% more are married by age 24. Fewer than 6% beat a path to the altar past thirty. So the female is on the warpath early.

Preferring to wait till they are established in a regular job at their chosen profession, many students wait till after graduating to get married.

Here lies the secret of the anti-marriage standpoint. Don't get established. Drift from job to job. Eschew offers of "fine opportunities for advancement." This will remove any tendency by a female to want to establish herself along with you.

Again, when they do marry, college graduates tend to marry somebody they have met during student years, and in whose friendship they have continued after graduation.

These two facts point to definite procedures for any who would take evasive action against the peril of matrimony.

First: Keep moving. You can stave off the peril by keeping on the move. Travel to Europe. Emigrate to Australia. Stay a while, but keep on the move. Make sure you always have a valid passport so that you can get mobile should an emergency arise.

Don't collect things. Books and records are bad enough, when it comes to furniture, it is the end. Book of the Month Clubs are the worst traps. Bachelors who join these outfits soon have so many books that they shortly need a bookcase, then a house to store the book cases and a wife to dust them off occasionally. Acquire only sufficient worldly belongings to pack into two suitcases.

Situations will arise however, when you find somebody trying to take the reins from you. In the interval that must elapse before getting a passage on the next ship, certain more direct methods must be used. These include. Littering your apartment with oddments of female underclothing, and lip-stick stained cigarette butts.

Arriving maudlin drunk on three successive dates, or better, before the offending female's parents.

Exhibiting a malevolent abhorrence for small children, kittens, home-cooked meals and pop tunes with love themes.

If all this fails and you miss the next boat as well, you have only yourself to blame. Your methods were not sufficiently thorough.

Better give in and give in gracefully. I'll send you a butcher knife for a wedding present and I'll be along to bludge a meal at least once a week.

CORK or PLAIN FRESHER...MILDER...THEY'RE TODAY'S CIGARETTE

They're Unmarried...

This couple, necking in a parked car on the University grounds late at night, are perhaps an example of the practices encouraged by non-marriage. The streets around residences are crowded with parked cars every night from 12 till 2, filled with students with repressed desires. If these students were married, they would not be led into sinful or perverse behavior, and would save themselves and others a great deal of embarrassment. But as it is, students of 21 or 23 years of age have no other outlet for their passions than a parked car late at night.

As one famous dean of women is reported to have remarked: "I don't see why they stay out there where it's so cold. Why don't they go to bed where they would be warm?"

Races, Beliefs Involved

Mixed Marriage Problems

Technically speaking, a mixed marriage is one that involves two people of different religions, beliefs, or of different races. Actually, the term takes in more than this. Two people who marry, though they may be of the same religion, but who hold different philosophies of life or different attitudes, may be said to be entering a mixed marriage. Similarly with two people who come from different economic or cultural backgrounds. The problem really breaks down into two areas — philosophical and ethnic, and each must be considered separately.

In a philosophically mixed marriage the main problem is one of children. If two people of different beliefs, be they religious or otherwise, have decided to marry, they have agreed that each will respect the ideals of the other. This excludes the marriage in which one partner changes his beliefs to those of the other for this marriage is no longer mixed.

But when the child comes, who is to say what is his religion, or who will set his attitudes? The Roman Catholic Church decrees that any children of a mixed marriage will be brought up in the Catholic church. This is but a formal statement of the attitude that must exist on the part of any member of a mixed marriage who holds to his beliefs, for while one partner respects the ideals of his mate, he nevertheless must believe that his own are preferable, or else he would change them. So what becomes of the child? He asks questions, as all children do, of his parents, and when his mother tells him one thing and his father another, he becomes confused and loses faith in both of them.

While it may be said that the ideal thing is for such parents to explain to the child that different people hold different beliefs and to encourage him to seek the answers that are meaningful to him, this is an untenable position when dealing with young children who must have some concrete answers to establish a basis on which to search. In the case of two people who cannot agree on how to raise children, or how to answer their child's first questions about the nature of the world and social standards, a compromise is not only impossible but immoral, in view of the effect on the child.

In the ethnologically mixed marriage, the problem is a social one. A negro, happily married to a white woman, once said, "A mixed marriage presents no problems other than those of any marriage." This may be true for him, for he is an intellectual whose friends accept him as an individual. In such a mixed marriage, the problem is one of overcoming social prejudice. In the lower class, mixed marriages are to a certain extent accepted, for a man makes his way on an individual basis. In the intellectual group a mixed marriage can exist, for here too, each person is accepted as an individual.

It is in the middle class — the middle class of ideas and ideals, that mixed marriage is doomed. The middle class mind must protect itself from any foreign idea that might destroy its complacency and therefore cries shame on such a marriage. And in such a situation this marriage must die, for marriage, being a social institution, cannot live without society.

Try-Out Before Marriage Helps Society, Saves Grief

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

Trial marriage may be a solution for students trying to decide: "Who to marry and when?"

The experimental period could be six or twelve months, and the marriage could be dissolved by agreement at the end of that time if it proved unsatisfactory. Living together is a great eye-opener; for people who feel they do not understand or know each other well enough, it might give them an answer.

Marriage is no longer the permanent institution we once expected it to be. It's a tentative thing now, approached with reservations. The "till death do us part" clause in the marriage ceremony is no longer valid. The number of divorces, on grounds from adultery to "mental cruelty" is soaring. As sexual promiscuity increases, the prestige of marriage declines.

Yet our society assumes that a marriage will be permanent. It also assumes the married couple will be "happy. These two ideals are often incompatible. Those individuals who will enter unhappy marriages in the future need help.

A decision to marry may be based on a wrong emphasis, such as personal sexual, economic, or emotional problems. Marriage cannot usually solve these problems.

If we demand permanence in a marriage, then we should not refuse a period of experimentation. A man who leaves his new job after six months, because he doesn't like it, is it censured by society?

In the same way, trial marriage would let the couple foresee their future problems, and ascertain their sexual compatibility.

There are drawbacks to trial marriage. If people approach it with an insincere approach, it can be used as a legalized form of satisfying personal desires. No responsibility could be imposed. If the partners are not confident their marriage will work, trivialities could disrupt the union.

And trial marriage could abrogate mature decision by young people, in favour of a "what the hell! It might work out" attitude.

A READER WROTE:

Married Students Good Students

The Editor, The Varsity:

I am quite sure that the desirability of student marriages is acknowledged by many of us, if not by all. (There will always be those who would rather spread their affections thinly over a number of persons of the opposite sex, rather than concentrating all their affections on one person.)

How much inconvenience, how much unrest of mind and body, how much behavior called by some antisocial and unnatural, by others perverse, and by the Word of God simply sinful, could and would be avoided if students were married!

The two main objections to student marriages are children and money. To my mind these objections are completely invalid and groundless.

From my own experience I know that it does not cost a cent more for a married person to live than it does for a single one. It costs less! One does buy cheaper by the couple. Single students do live now, wherever they get their money from. If they were married, this would not in the least change their financial status. It would just mean that two budgets, so far kept separate, would be pooled.

This presupposes, of course, the willingness of many a father to continue sending that check to his married daughter or son at university. And why shouldn't he? As for the "babies that would invariably arrive," it is incomprehensible to my mind how students of this University in 1956 can be so ignorant on matters of birth control, or do they not mean what they say?

I would urge every student to enter into a "companionate marriage" which is a real marriage except that children will have to postpone their arrival until they can be properly supported. There are many other values to be derived from marriage. It is not sensible to forego these because procreation cannot be part of marriage at once.

Once the majority of us are married, we will get married quarters. Why are we lagging behind?

To my mind, early marriage would solve many of our problems. Certainly, I know that there are difficulties, but they can be overcome if there is the will to overcome them (eg. hubby will have to help with the dishes).

For most students, marriage would be a great asset, and, after the first few discords would be relegated to the past, marriage would be beneficial to studying rather than interfere with it. And we would have a good chance of celebrating our diamond anniversary, for, I am sure, most marriages would stay together. Let's stop talking about marriage. Let's act now!

A Case In Rime Against Paid Time

By CATHERINE OLVER

Here a student presents a hashery of the arguments against subsidizing student marriage in the manner of Ogden nashery.

Government money is not properly spent on the propagation of the species.

When given to needy students, it should result in degenerates and original theses.

And here we have a plan that would not merely facilitate but positively encourage marriage.

(A state which, parenthetically, as a state, I for one have no reason to disparage,

Having as little first-hand knowledge of it at the moment

As has my honourable opponent.)

But from the second hand knowledge I have, which is all any of us has to go on Marriage involves not only a wedding gown and champagne, but the development of happy interdependence, and so on.

And though there are various opinions as to which years are the worst,

Almost anybody will tell you that it's either the first ten years or the first.

Now whichever of these estimates is truer, and as I say I have no first hand knowledge,

If the newly-wed is a student, the most difficult years are inevitably going to coincide with those difficult years at college.

And as we all know, the endeavour to pack force or otherwise insert enormous quantities of otherwise useless information into one's noddle, puts an almost unbearable strain,

On the grey matter, cerebellum or brain.

You may turn round to me my honoured friend and say

That the gentle hands of a good woman are the best possible instruments for smoothing these worries away.

But if the good woman is not also a student she is working to put food in the larder, And if she is a student, then she's probably working harder.

And don't you go telling me that government subsidized marriage will mean that the non-student wife of the student husband won't have to go out and earn money—

Because if you think the government subsidy would be big enough to be of any real or appreciable use, you'd better think again honey.

Married students don't form a big enough section of the voting population to take dollars away from farmers;

And being young, they haven't enough power to force the government to think they're the cat's pyjamas. And to say that they're the leaders of the future isn't enough.

Everyone's kind of cheesed off with that kind of stuff. But all this is straying rather from the point of my argument which is not that the government subsidy would be so small as to make little difference to the married student's situation,

But rather that the government in subsidizing students has better things to encourage than their incurring a wife more quickly than you could say pestidigitatation.

For the government, if it did not go messing about with subsidizing marriage as such

Could get on with subsidizing students whether or not they had got into somebody's clutch.

And it is the student himself who needs money to enable him to carry on with the work he is doing, And not as a nice little prize resultant upon successful wooting.

And in spite of the fact that the dear paternal bureaucracy might come up with a baby bonus, Mindnitch feeds and wet diapers could be a most definite onus.

It is difficult to keep one's mind upon Aristotle While giving the infant his bottle!

You could go off and read in the library and spend all your life in the stacks,

But all the time you would be wondering whether junior wasn't having one of his choleric attacks. And altogether the increased responsibility and expense

Wouldn't be worth the odd dollars and few cents. Here you will say that plenty of married students get along without an addition.

But here I would point out the elements of risk attached to maintaining a childless condition.

Moreover, if we examine the service for the solemnization of matrimony we shall find that one of its chief purposes is the production and good education of kids,

And if we are going to accept the good offices of the church in marrying us, we must also do as it bids. Once we have admitted its authority in matrimonial ruling,

We are forced to delay the date until after we've finished our schooling.

Thus, I would sum up by saying, by all means let the government subsidize students,

But that to subsidize marriage among them would inevitably lead to imprudence.

And whatever we may say about the virtues of marriage while yet young,

Those who attempt to combine it with study may finish up with their nerves coming unstrung. Either your study will suffer, or else your daughter or son should university

If you try to combine getting an MA with being one.

for married quarters

There are none here. No married quarters at all.

Toronto is Canada's largest university and yet no provision is made here for married couples to live in university quarters.

Most British and American colleges have married quarters, and some Canadian. At the University of British Columbia quonset huts, admittedly not luxurious, are available to married students with light and water for $33 a month. The conditions are not ideal, but they are decent and make it practicable financially for students who wish to marry.

A co-operative house on campus last year made an attempt to arrange for some married couples. The experiment was a failure because there was little privacy and no cooking arrangements. This is the only pitiful attempt that has been made on this campus.

The age for marriage in this country coincides largely with the age for studying. This is particularly true of students involved in medicine, law or post graduate studies.

A possible solution to the problem here would be for the university to take over some of the houses on St. George St. upon which it has an option. Or maybe even the "Trinity Apartments" at Harbord and Saint George which are condemned anyway. Married residences could be made to be reasonably self-supporting like any other residence, especially considering that it would not be necessary to serve meals. The university, if it saw fit, could use its connections to have such a house endowed.

In short many students are married and need quarters, at the university, and many could get married if there were quarters. How long will the University of Toronto lag behind?

Couple Needs Dough, Dough To Live In Matrimony

By ROBERT BROWN

Can two live as cheaply as one? That's the question that hundreds of young engaged couples ask themselves every year on this campus.

And it's a pretty hard question to answer — in the affirmative.

Money problems are probably about the biggest single bugbear faced by students wanting to get married. The high cost of mixed living, for instance, makes it practically impossible for two students to get married, and live in anything but utter squalor, unless they have outside support.

A rough budget for a married couple (both students) in Toronto would run about $1,800

The Cons

While marriage may be the normal state of human beings, it is not the normal state of students.

There are lots of good sound reasons why a couple — though they may think themselves really in love — should not get married before graduation. They should wait until they are secure and sure.

For instance:

—the basic purpose of attending university is to get an education, not a man (or woman). Studies come before family relationships, and marriage offers too many distractions to the academic life.

—the economic factor is a big deterrent in the consideration of marriage. Either a couple struggles along on the subsistence level only, with lowered standards of living, or they have to accept outside help. This means facing post-university life with a debt hanging over the heads of the young couple, rather than starting out with a couple of thousand in the bank.

—too often university students are still too immature in their attitudes to be able to accept the responsibilities and make the adjustments required in a successful marriage.

—suitable living quarters for married students are almost impossible to obtain. An unmarried student can live at home or in a residence; no married living quarters are at present provided for students.

—one natural result of marriage is the appearance of children. This can have an almost fatal effect on the young, struggling student—both economically and academically.

—a marriage, as an escape from emotional or family troubles, rarely turns out successfully. Students, who seem to be especially prone to these troubles, too often rush into marriage in haste, and repent in leisure afterwards.

—one's student days should be the time of expansion and exploration. Marriage is certainly a limiting factor, and in this respect undermines much of the value gained from student days.

Organs Atrophy With Disuse...

For a universal condition, both in its chronic and acute manifestations, curiously little is to be found in the professional literature on the physiology of love. Admitting that this type of information is the dominant and predisposing factor to the married state, especially in as susceptible and relatively inexperienced age group as university students, a discussion of this subject along medical lines is not only risky but very likely to lead to a faulty diagnosis.

Students planning marriage very likely need a psychologist much more than a doctor. At least, in the beginning. They could also use a rich aunt or two, conveniently and distantly located, or a well-maintained history of deposits in the neighbourhood bank.

To the doctor, economics merely means the patient's ability to pay for the treatment, and "maturity" the well-oiled functioning of his (her) sexual equipment. The psychologist and economist have their say elsewhere on these pages, and so it remains for the medical man to answer a few stray questions, mutter a bit of pleasantly vague advice, and depart in the direction of a promising adenoid.

Yes, one should start early if one plans on a family of ten children, several cats, and a parrot or two. No, it does not matter whether a woman bears her child at twenty-two or thirty-two, other things being equal. No, sexual abstinence does not necessarily have adverse physical effects on a young person (what does that have to do with marriage anyway?)

Mental effects? Well now, if a student is unfortunate enough to become afflicted (infected?) with love, the sooner he can remedy or (this is a big, fat "or") stabilize this situation, the better for everyone concerned. If he can wait, economics and the "maturity" aside, and if she can wait (mustn't forget her), well, then...

In a drawn out professional course, encompassing a period of five or more waiting years, but with a definite and more or less secure goal in mind, a student is well advised, once having fallen, to be quick about it, and marry. He will thus avoid not only the many energy-consuming and distracting complications of prolonged courtship, but also when the time comes to adjust himself to his newly-won profession, he will not have to cope with the added strain of establishing a home. But, again, this is none of the medical man's professional business.

If the student is engaged in a relatively brief general course, with the present not too demandingly loaded with direct educational responsibilities, and the future none too securely in focus, perhaps it would be better to complete this engagement before becoming involved in another one—leading to premature marriage and a rash of worries.

What's that you say, you're going to join a monastery? Then I must refer you to a specialist friend of mine destined, no doubt, to become a great gynaecologist. He will tell you, before showing off his set of scalpels, that organs atrophy in disuse.

Student Marriages Are Dangerous

By VERN GILBERT

Probably our parents would never have thought of marrying while still at university. Since the second World War, the old order has been overturned, and student marriages are an accepted part of campus-life.

How are these unions progressing? Under what conditions are they most likely to "succeed"?

There are two main groups to consider. Those who are post-graduate students and those who are (young) undergraduates.

In the first class, it is almost invariably the husband who is a student, his wife the wage earner.

Under these conditions, also, both partners are liable to be at least in their mid-twenties, or even older. They might be called mature without risking too much argument. The serious problem which remains is one of finance, especially if there happens to be any family.

One year of student marriage is a justifiable risk in these circumstances; more than one calls for some serious thinking, which can only be based on some experience of living outside university. Three years (e.g., a PhD) in a one room apartment can test a marriage to the limit.

On this basis, the thought of marriage for the young student in first or second year of a four year course is, to say the least, foolish.

Marriages contracted between young people end more often in the divorce court than those of the 25-and-up group.

For real stability, a marriage needs a goal. Students can rarely hope to see this fully until they have begun to put their specialized knowledge to work. Life is the pre-requisite for marriage, not the ivory tower of the university or the dark corner of a teen-age party.

The Pros

Why get married? Why not?

Marriage is the normal state of human beings. It is natural; it is satisfying; it's lots of fun.

There are lots of good sound reasons why a couple really in love should get married immediately, long before they graduate. As soon as they are sure about the state of their own feelings, the plunge should be taken.

For instance:

—is a natural state of man. Waiting long years for marriage can lead to an unnatural situation, and contributes to sex crimes.

—waiting to get married is an open invitation to a loss of virginity. Sex becomes a plaything, an amusement with too many people who have had their legitimate desires suppressed.

—marriage is economical. Two can live as cheaply as one — or darn near it.

—marriage is emotionally maturing. Learning to live with someone is a highly satisfying, highly adult attribute.

—marriage is the whole socio-philosophic basis of our civilization. To refrain from it is to court disaster from unsocial behavior.

—to avoid marriage requires a conscious effort; it may be a habit difficult to break.

—you only live so long. If you love someone, why spend four or five years apart when you could be together?

—the university is just the time when men and women meet on an equal and free basis, perhaps for the first time in their lives. It is a time when they are intellectually active and maturing. Marriage would fit in well with such a process.

—the delay of marriage by several years means inevitably a decline in the birth rate; and Canada needs more people.

—married students get better marks, because they are relieved from the constant hue and chase of a co-educational university. They tend to spend more time at home studying and relaxing in the evening. Their health improves, and their mental frustrations disappear.

—one partner can help put the other through college.

All At U of T CAN Marry

All students enrolled at the University of Toronto this session are of age, legally, to marry. In point of fact, though, how many do?

The vast majority of Canadians marry before the age of 30, about two-thirds by the time they are 25.

The ages of university students vary generally from 17 to 30. The majority of students are between 19 and 25, precisely at the most marriageable age for Canadians.

It is not possible to determine accurately the number of married Varsity students. The registrar's office keeps no record of it. Married women are requested to specify they are "Mrs." on enrollment, but no note is made.

The only figure which gives any indication of the percentage of married students is one obtained from the U of T Athletic Association. The number of books of tickets for wives or husbands sold for football games last season was 215. Total sales were 5,005.

Whether this percentage of four-and-one-half would hold throughout the student body generally is difficult to say. There are certainly not enough facts, statistically, to apply it.

Morning Sickness?

Why can't you hide behind the Globe like other men?

DON'T GET MARRIED

when he's wrong, and usually when he isn't. Student politicians need no further warning.

Clergymen, non-professional moralists and freshies frequently lament the fact that students are immature. As proof, they cite the even more obvious fact that students are pre-occupied with sex. This is both natural, in the unnatural situation which is university life, and a good thing. Students have to have something to think about. Married students are not preoccupied with sex, and their minds deteriorate from lack of exercise.

If students marry, they tend to have a statistically larger number of children than if they don't. And, as parents try to subject their offsprings to the same hardships they suffered themselves, all these sons and daughters will eventually be over-crowding the universities of tomorrow. This is bad. We can't all be leaders, can we? That would be democracy, or worse.

Frustration, we all know by now, is indispensable to creation. Artists, then, biographers remind us, are miserable most of the time, and make up for it by producing works of inspiring and magnificent ugliness. Unhappy, tormented geniuses work off their feelings by leading revolutions, writing sonnets, sneering at everything, and generally making the world a better place. Contented geniuses sit back, smile, let the others do all the work and are never heard of. And, geniuses, get this! If you are weak enough, short sighted enough, impetuous enough to get married, the danger of your becoming contented is almost incalculable.

Yellow Jackets In Town To Do Battle With Blues Seconds Meet Tri-Dents

University of Toronto Basketball Blues will be in action tomorrow night at Hart House when they oppose the University of Rochester in an exhibition tilt. The preliminary game at 7.00 p.m. will bring together the Baby Blues and Tridents of the fast Sunday league. Wrestling and swimming are also included on tomorrow night's bill of fare.

The Blues will be looking for their first win in nine starts against American opposition when they engage Rochester. Varsity should find the going pretty rough since the Yellow Jackets are reputed to be a better team than last year's squad which scored an easy 82-59 win over the Blues in Rochester. Their two leading scorers from that outfit, 6'4" centre Dick Wood and 6'2" forward Les Nichols are both back. Wood averaged 18 points per game last season while Nichols averaged 16. Guard Bruce Thompson, another member of the starting five, averaged 13 points.

Against that impressive array of talent, Coach John McManus of the Blues will send John Dacyshyn, Pete Potter, John Sheppard, Ruby Richman and Harold Rotman. Dacyshyn has been scoring at a 20 point per game clip in recent contests and the improvement in his play is having a noticeable effect on the Blues. John threw in 21 points when Varsity downed McMaster 83-70 on Saturday. Another boy that McManus will be pinning a lot of hopes on is Sheppard, John turned in an outstanding rebounding effort against Mac and will have to duplicate that chore against Rochester if the Blues are to pose any serious threat to the Yellow Jackets.

The wrestlers will oppose O.A.C. in the upper gym. Coach Kirk Wipperfurth will have two teams in action as the Blues attempt to avenge a previous defeat to the Aggies. The University Swimming Championships will be held at 8.00 p.m. in the pool.

Whites Spell Trouble For League Leaders

Coach Ducky Skinner, whose Hamilton Tiger-Cubs are buried deep in the cellar of the OHA Junior "A" series, said last week, when his team had been mathematically eliminated from the playoffs, "Our job now is to be spoilers, and that's what we're going to do."

The Varsity Whites are in the same position in the THL Major Series. When the season began, the understanding was that the Whites would not enter the playoffs, even if they finished in a playoff spot. Thus, it was obvious that as the teams came down the stretch, the Whites would be in a position to throw caution to the winds and toss a monkey wrench into the playoff hopes of other clubs.

Much to the dismay of the other clubs in the League, the Whites have chosen to get hot just when the opposition hoped they would fade out. They literally wrecked Pickin' Chicken's playoff hopes with a 5-3 win on Saturday.

They have four games remaining, three of them with the two clubs, Kingsway and Lyndhurst, who are battling it out for the league lead. The standings to date show that the Lumbermen own one point lead over second place Lyndhurst with the Whites seven points back of the leaders.

A Varsity victory on Wednesday, coupled with a Lyndhurst win would move the Whites closer to the top and push Kingsway into second place.

Meds, Skule Play To Tie In Fight For Playoff Spot

By JOHN VOJTECH

Sr. Meds and Sr. Skule went after each other yesterday in an important intramural hockey game which saw both teams go all out in an effort to get the third and last playoff spot in Group One. After two periods of rough and tough hockey, the two teams emerged deadlocked at 4-4. Sr. Skule still has a chance to tie the Doctors for third place if they can knock off the second place Sr. UC team tomorrow. The Meds team has finished its schedule. Early in the first period, Meds struck with Day getting the goal. A few minutes later the Doctors increased their lead on Paul's goal, the first of two which he scored. Late in the period Skule suddenly came to life with a quick two goal burst. The first came off the stick of Thomson from a pass by Bidowski. Donny Hewson tied the game up with a quick shot which got by Gordon in the Meds' nets.

The Engineers, taking a new lease on life scored in the opening minutes of the second period as Rex McAllister let go a long shot from the blue line. Paul tied it up again for Meds as he took advantage of a scramble around the Skule net to tip the puck in. Ed Rohacek, who played a stalwart game at defence for the Skule team, scored his first goal of the season to put the Engineers out in front again. With five seconds left to go in the game, and Skule shorthanded, Wilkie put the puck into the net for the score which knotted up the count.

In the other game played, SPS V defeated Trinity B's to take first place in their group (4) and gained entry into the playoffs. Shannon, Laywine, Quartz, Selby and Shikaze each scored a goal apiece in a genuine team effort. Valenti recorded the shutout for the Skule team.

Niagara Defeats Blue Swimmers

On Saturday afternoon, the Varsity Seniors were host to the Niagara swim team at the Hart House pool. In the hour of events, the spectators were treated to one of the more exciting meets of the season as Niagara edged out the Varsity team by a score of 50-33.

While the visitors had the edge in points throughout the meet, a win by Varsity in the last two events would have put them in front. Realizing this, the steam was turned on by both teams with every swimmer putting just a little more into each stroke.

This weekend, the Varsity Seniors will leave for Brockport and Rochester. The next weekend will be the last meet for the Seniors, when they travel to Montreal.

Interfaculty Summary

In Major League basketball action yesterday afternoon, St. Mike's B trounced SPS IV to the tune of 44-29. Iglar paced the Irish with 13, while Aureadan had 11. Shaver was high for the losers with 13, while Aureadan had 11. Shaver was high for the losers with 10.

Electrical B topped Pre-Meds II B by a 38-33 count in Minor League play. Mucci was tops for the Engineers with nine, while Thompson took care of most of the Doctors' scoring hooping 16. SPS continued its march towards a playoff spot by blanking Trinity B 5-0 in hockey play. The Stulemen divided their scoring amongst five players, with Shannon Layvine, Quartz, Selby and Sukiz: netting goals.

A near riot broke out in the St. Mike's A-Architecture water polo game, which saw the Double Blue top 3-1 when the final whistle sounded. Seltzer had a pair for the winners, with singletons to Quinn Scanlan and Rambusch. Burton scored the lone Architecture goal.

Trinity A won by default over Pre-Meds in squash play.

Universities

Open To All

This article, written by Miss Gogo Sokolee, III Vic, is intended to refute the suggestion that university education should be restricted to the few, rather than open to the many. Miss Sokolee is a former exchange student from Smith College, USA.

From an American point of view, it seems to me that university requirements in Ontario are too select—perhaps due to the scarceness of universities, perhaps due to an elevated opinion of the intellectual level of the university.

In the States all one needs is a high school diploma regardless of grades and she is accepted at the state university to which her family pays taxes. There is a term "probation" which entitles a university to drop a student with a high school average that is below fifty per cent if she does not pass her first set of exams. For students seeking a school with higher standards there are over 1,000, providing her grades are above fifty per cent. Stanford University and the Ivy League schools require the top students, and their acceptances are based on the high school average, personal recommendations and results of college board entrance exams (six hours of tests, three of which test general aptitude, and the others are general knowledge tests in three chosen subjects).

It follows that no one is excluded from college because she didn't make a certain average. Everyone can seek her own level of education, and each college or university decides if a student can stay. The rote memory education in high schools as compared with the free thinking atmosphere of a university is a big change.

The advantage of the latter is one that everyone should be able to enjoy.

A M & D
Kampus Kate

UC's second production of a Broadway musical, this year Kiss Me Kate (at Hart House all this week), deserves a good deal of admiring respect. Leon Major's direction brings out, in intent at least, some of the best of the two worlds Cole Porter and the Spewacks combined in the musical's conception.

A story combining a stage-Shakespearean shrew-taming with a real-life parallel played out by those enacting it is bound to present some casting problems. The two principals, Don Sutherland and Audrey Bassett, seemed a little perfunctory in their supposedly "onstage" bits, and considerably happier in their sweeter numbers as actor and temperamental leading lady. Both of them have remarkably smooth voices, but in the brassier numbers they fought a losing battle against a wheezy orchestra. Don Sutherland in particular, as the roistering woman-taming Petruccio, roared us as gentle as any sucking dove.

The standout of the singers was undoubtedly Annette Oelbaum as the soubrette now going more or less straight. Her raucous voice and easy movement were in considerable contrast to wooer Ray Carl, who combined the singing voice of a Lawrence Olivier with the dancing of an unsure second-row hooper.

As the two stage-struck mobsters hell-bent on culture, Stan Daniels and Colin Hamilton produced some merciless mugging with a sure instinct for split-second timing. Their hawdy ballad, Brush Up Your Shakespeare, was deservedly the hit of the show.

In its ensemble effects and all-over pattern, the production is far above the usual college standards. Most of the credit for this goes to the director, who has caught some of the breakneck pace and spectacular brassiness associated with a life on the boards. Incidentally, I hope he's very grateful to Joan Donawa, whose richly resonant voice helped establish that no-business-like-showbusiness feeling far more than the chorus swirling around her in the big set-pieces.

Something was lacking in most of the ensemble numbers. Helped by eye-catching and imaginative costuming, the effect was bright enough, but was very little out of the ordinary. This does not apply to a Too Darn Hot number that proved positively torrid. Here a word might be said in praise of an overture straight out of Elmer Rice, during which the cast lolled about the stage indulging in coughs, spits, and aimless chatter, and the usually unseen backstage-workers ambled about all unconcerned-like.

The musical misses the Broadway brassiness, but helps compensate for the loss by a clean-cut vivid simplicity (helped no end by stylized sets trimmed to the bone by Major and Les Lawrence), and many gratifying moments of lyrical beauty. Such comparatively quiet numbers as I Am Ashamed That Women Are So Simple and So In Love are superlatively handled. In fact, the show's only faults come from over-reaching, a more forgivable offence than most.

Dave Dunsmuir.

Blood Drive Under Way

Over 21? Look and See!

Some beverage room operators near the campus have come up with a new "wrinkle" in the eternal battle over under-aged students drinking. Because of a recent crackdown by provincial authorities, the operators are forced to watch the ages of their student imbibers carefully, to see that no one under 21 gains admission. One novel way of doing this is to examine the skin on the back and fingers of a student's hands. Operators claim to be able to tell with certainty whether a student is over 21 by examining the wrinkles. Can You? Examine the two hands, one of which is under, and one over, 21. Then turn to the bottom right hand corner of the page for the answer. —VSP by Ed Hoshkiv

Nursing Leading Drive As 230 Students Give In First Day's Activity

Exactly 230 students gave blood in the opening day of the Red Cross Blood Drive yesterday, leaving 1370 appointments to go to reach the university objective. Nursing, with 59 donors, has given the most blood so far.

The drive is organized as an inter-faculty competition judged on the percentage of students in the faculty contributing. The winning faculty will be awarded the Skule Cannon Trophy.

The drive, which is in its third year, was won first by Forestry. The next year the competition was changed to an arbitrary quota basis. Forestry objected, since although 97% of its enrolment gave blood, it ranked very low on the quota basis. However, St. Mike's obtained the highest per cent of its quota, well over 100%, and won the trophy.

In the words of Miss Josephine Flaherty, in charge of the drive, Forestry took the attitude of "their SAC rep versus the world", and refused to give up the trophy.

Although it is impossible to tell this year's results as yet, yesterday's donations are tabulated as follows: Nursing—59; UC—43; SMC—39; Knox—22; Engineering—19; Dentistry—15; Architecture—11; Victoria—7; Trinity—4; Graduate Studies—2; Emmanuel—1; Medicine—1; Social Work—1.

Miss Flaherty was satisfied with the Students' Council's "red-blooded" showing. Approximately fifteen SAC reps gave blood in a group yesterday, on Miss Flaherty's invitation to prove they were not anemic.

Universities from all across Canada have entered the Corpuscule Cup Competition sponsored by NFCUS. The Cup is awarded to the university with the best returns in the annual Red Cross Blood Drive on each campus.

Montreal: (Special) — The Hart House chess team crushed the McGill Chess Club last Monday evening with a record of six wins, two draws, and no losses.

The Toronto chess club, in Montreal for the intercollegiate match, had the following members: Jack Kagetsu, Ken Brown, John Scott-Thomas, Dave Sweeney, Tom Enright, and Ian Yamanaka. James Forward and Gerry Venier of the Hart House club had draws.

Operation Fails

Girl Dies Despite UofT Blood

An operation on the heart of three-year-old Lynn Davidge, performed last Thursday night at the Hospital for Sick Children, proved unsuccessful.

Despite donations received from eight U of T students possessing blood of the uncommon ORH negative group, the child suffered a relapse following the operation and died at 4:30 Friday morning. She suffered from a rare heart condition due to two holes in the wall of the organ. Surgeons were attempting an intricate operation to correct the trouble.

Mrs. W. A. Brown, aunt of the child, last night released the names of students who were selected to give blood for the operation.

They were: Dorothy Hutchison, Nursing; Renee Zale, III UC; Rosalie Marsh, III P&OT; Joyce Britton III UC; John Lusher, II UC; Wendy Simpson, P&OT; Paul Secker, Forestry.

These students, with forty others, responded to an appeal printed in The Varsity for the unusual blood type required for the operation.

The child's mother expressed her thanks to all who so generously offered their blood to give the operation every possible chance of success, and regretted that she could not speak to them personally at this time.

SAC Board Up Next Week

The much-talked-about, long-awaited University of Toronto bulletin board outside the office of the Students' Administrative office.

"But I wouldn't like to promise anything," said Ted Sievenpiper last night.

The bulletin board was to have been put up last fall.

The $150 all-steel frame for the board is being manufactured — free of charge — by the Dominion Bridge Company.

"I was in touch with them recently," Sievenpiper reported. "They said that they had been having difficulty with shortages of steel but they said something would be coming through soon."

The bulletin board will be set on a tripod base and two sides of the triangle will be used to post bulletins, Sievenpiper explained.

A New Contest; Science--MP&C

Another challenge in the university blood campaign was issued during the weekend. Honour science students at University College called upon mathematics, physics, and chemistry students to "engage in a blood-letting contest, with the by-products of the struggle going to the Red Cross."

Passion In Poverty Preferred To Wealthy Womanless Setup

"Love is a many splendoured thing," to the University College Parliament at any rate. Last night its members voted overwhelmingly that "it's better to be dishonest though poor than never to have loved at all."

Amid cries of treason, impeachment, and censure, unchastity and celibacy, the 343rd session of UC's Mock Parliament upheld its government — and the rule of love — by a vote of 20-9.

After the motion was passed, the two members of the opposition were attacked for "trying to bring about the extinction of the race." The first speaker for the opposition, Walter Bowen, (III UC), had recommended celibacy "to avoid the degraded and sinful love advocated by the Government."

After a long, heated discussion, during which time the Speaker of the House Bob Brown, (IV UC), took a recess ("so that I can read the constitution") it was ruled that a motion for impeachment of the opposition was in order, and that a motion for adjournment was out of order.

The two opposition members were impeached (voted 16-3) and ordered "to be taken out and shot like dogs."

As there were no rifles available, the Sergeant of Arms omitted this part of the sentence.

Defending his position, and the position of love, Prime Minister Pete Gowzski told members of the parliament that there was no love in Hell. This was the worst punishment that the Almighty could think of for the Devil.

"No spiritual love, no heavenly love, no platonic love, no bawdry, tawdry, bodily love, no silent, violent love, no virtuous, tortuous, arduous love, no love of wealth, health, sin, gin, or crippled men, no love of God or Mammon, no love, Mr. Speaker, at all." This would be the result if the motion were defeated, he declared.

The first speaker for the opposition, Mr. Bowen, who sprinkled his speech liberally with illustrations from The Varsity's marriage issue, begged his colleagues never to sacrifice moral values to the libido.

"The difficult way of life is the good way of life, and to be dishonest though poor" is very difficult. Therefore it is the good way of life," declared the second speaker for the opposition, Joyce Britton, (III UC). She deplored the narrow, petty, and low approach of the opposition.

The opposition countered with the retort that the debate was obviously concerned with dishonest love, and that dishonest love did not lead to marriage.

The debate was originally scheduled for a UC-Victoria contest, but at the last moment the members from Victoria were unable to attend. Two students from University College took the opposition, instead.

NFCUS Deadline Extended For Regional Scholarships

The deadline for the exchange scholarships applications has been unofficially set forward one week to Feb. 22, it was announced today.

The delay rises from what was described as an "appalling lack of interest" by Toronto students. "I think that many students don't realize the opportunities that the exchange programme offers," said Bill Smyth, NFCUS co-chairman.

"The student has a chance to go to some other Canadian university with tuition paid.

"All that is required are respectable marks and a reasonable interest in student affairs."

Deadline for applications was originally Feb. 15.

Although the Registrar's office reported that many applications were taken out, few have been returned.

The exchange program permits students at Toronto presently in first year of a three-year course or in second year of a four-year course to spend a school year at some university in the west or maritimes.

The only stipulations are that exchange scholars agree to take part in extra-curricular activities on their new campus, and similarly when they return to their home campus in their final year.

Two exchange scholars are at Toronto this year: Marjorie Chepeswick, from Dalhousie University, and Henry Johns, from the University of British Columbia. No students left Toronto last year.

Applications may be picked up at the Registrar's office, and are to be filled out in quintuplicate.

Student Wages To Be Surveyed

A survey to estimate student earnings is being conducted to provide information to persuade the government that more aid for students is needed.

A U of T NFCUS committee will conduct the survey by telephone during the evenings.

Said Harry Arthurs, the campaign chairman, "No information so gathered will be made public with the name of the student concerned attached."

Nurses Tops

UC Leads Engineers In Blood

University College is ahead of the Engineers by sixteen pints in the current Blood Campaign. Total amount of blood collected stands at 765 pints as of Tuesday night.

The Nurses admitted that they had expected more competition from the Engineers.

"The response was not as good as we hoped," said Josephine Flaherty, chairman of the campaign. "People just don't seem to be interested."

There will be a recruiting booth in the rotunda of Hart House today for both males and females who wish to make appointments. Or anyone can go to the blood clinic at the School of Nursing without an appointment.

There are only two more days left in the campaign — Thursday and Friday. Any student who cannot manage to donate blood this week may make an appointment at the HH booth to give blood at the main clinic at 67 College St. sometime during the next two weeks.

Combines Are Forum Topic Tuesday At Commerce Club

"Combines in Canada" is the topic of a timely forum to be sponsored by the Commerce Club next Tuesday.

During the past six months several cases of breaches of the Combines Act have come before Canadian Courts. These include investigations of alleged price-fixing in the automotive tire industry, in the cable and wire industry and in the electrical appliance manufacturing industries.

Members of the Commerce Club will hear from Prof. Bladen, Mr. B. I. MacKinnon, Mr. L. A. Skeoch, and Mr. J. Sedgwick, Q.C.

Professor Bladen's comments should be especially interesting: two weeks ago he presented a private brief to the Gordon Commission investigating Canada's economic development, in which he criticized the content and administration of the present Combines Act.

The meeting will be held at eight o'clock Tuesday night in the Music Room, Wymilwood, Victoria College.

Special Issue For Settlement

A story is told on the four inside pages of this issue of The Varsity: the story of The University Settlement.

The University Settlement, a Red Feather activity, is located in rather dingy quarters at 23 Grange Road, about six blocks south of the University campus.

It serves as a community centre and social-work headquarters of the area north of the waterfront, south of College, and between University and Spadina.

The settlement was originally founded by President Falconer of this University, and in its early days students and staff had a large share in running it. However, in recent years, the connection between the Settlement and the University has grown more tenuous.

The directors of the Settlement, anxious to reverse this trend, decided to make an appeal for the interest and support of the students and staff of the university. They convinced the Students' Administrative Council to finance a special four-page issue of The Varsity to publicize the appeal, and this issue is the result.

The inside four pages of this paper are called The Skyline, the publication of the Settlement, and were written by Settlement staffers with the help of Varsity staffers.

stop talking, kids

The University Settlement, a social service and welfare center close to the campus, has served its community well for over 45 years. It has always had a close connection with the University, a connection that has been maintained throughout the years by students and staff-members who have unselfishly given of their time to help their fellow man.

The Settlement today offers a real opportunity to anyone who is interested in climbing down from the University's ivory tower, and actually doing something to improve the world.

It would be a deep disgrace to this university, and to the ideals for which it stands, if the Settlement were to suffer from lack of personnel and assistance as the result of apathy on this campus.

The Settlement offers the student a chance to stop talking about great things, and to start doing them. There is no higher calling than aiding your fellow human being.

The Varsity's

Masthead

A paper's masthead is not something that a flag flies from: it is the official list of the paper's name, publishers, and editors which usually appears on the editorial page of every publication.

The Varsity's masthead, which appears to the right of this column, has at its top the emblem of The Varsity pin. This pin is an award of distinction that is given at the end of each publishing year to those four or six Varsity staffers who have contributed the most to the student newspaper.

The masthead also lists the editors of each department of the paper, who are the "masthead members". Am & D, by the way, stands for art, music, and drama. Each departmental editor is responsible for his or her department, under the over-all supervision of the editor-in-chief. (This year there are two co-editors occupying the top position. All masthead members are appointed by the editor, and must be confirmed by the Students' Administrative Council, the paper's publishers.)

At the bottom of the masthead each day appear the names of those people who have worked on the paper for that particular issue. The In Charge is responsible for the make-up or layout of the news pages in the paper, and the placing of stories in position. The Chief Assistant helps the In Charge in the layout work. Assistants copy-read stories, write "heads" (headlines) and help with make-up.

The list of reporters contains the names of all those who have written stories for that issue; The Varsity does not give by-lines on individual news stories unless they are of exceptional merit. The Night News Editor is responsible for the preparation and handling of all news copy that appears in the paper. He checks all stories for "news-style", corrects any errors of fact or of grammar that he notices, and passes the stories over to the In Charge.

The Sports-In-Charge is responsible for the editing and layout of the night's sports page, which is usually done separately from the preparation of the news pages.

The AM & D editor usually prepares and lays out the AM & D page by himself. The preparation of the editorial page is done directly by one of the two co-editors, who decides what material shall be printed on it.

Hi There!

Here three settlement children indulge in various poses of contentment, hunger, and glee, as they enjoy a pre-Christmas dinner at Hart House. Each year, Hart House has a large group of the Settlement's children up for a dinner and party.

Volunteers Help Group Activities

By MICHAEL SPIVAK

"How are your volunteers working out? (Bill Stern, Director of general program at the University Settlement, is talking to one of his section heads). "Have you got enough volunteers for tomorrow's program?"

This term, "volunteer", gets kicked around more times than any other word in the entire vocabulary of the men and women who inhabit the two blue buildings at 15 and 23 Grange Rd. The Settlement, of course, is for people of all ages, but let us focus our attention on the youth program.

On almost every day of the week, dozens of children come pouring through the door of Boulton House to take part in the activities provided for them. On some days, the children, can go to whichever activity they choose to—wood-working, cooking, arts and crafts, dramatics, active games, board games and trips), while, on other days, they go to their club groups. In the clubs they meet the same children every week and, as a result, have a real opportunity to make and develop friendships with other children from their own age.

Underlying all these stimulating activities the volunteer leader serves as a vital focal point. Every child who comes to the settlement knows his leader is a friend—someone whom he can trust; someone who really cares about him; someone who will hold his hand while he is crossing the street; and, very important, someone to have a whole lot of fun with.

The volunteer leader works for the children and with the children; but, above all, he works because of the children. Sure it's hard to get a bunch of shouting kids to be quiet and to listen to you, but the satisfaction of finally getting to know the kids and accomplishing something worthwhile is much greater than the difficulties overcome to make those accomplishments possible. Moreover, the volunteer leader has a chance to meet other people his own age, with whom he can discuss any of his difficulties.

If you're looking for an exciting, challenging and rewarding experience, become a volunteer.

200 At Settlement Carnival UofT Students Help Out

Over two hundred parents and children came to the Settlement's annual Winter Carnival, in Grange Park on Tuesday night, January 24. Several University of Toronto students were there too, to help look after the younger children.

The Carnival has been held in Grange Park for several years now, and is a highlight of the Settlement's winter program.

Sid Smith, captain of the Toronto Maple Leafs hockey team, was guest of honor. Smith is a former Settlement member, and learned to skate in Grange Park.

Settlement children played a hockey game with a team from the Settlement staff. "We won, of

Settlement Grows Again Members Number 1400 There's Not Much Room

There are over fourteen hundred members at the University Settlement this year. And if there was more space, there would be even more. "It's the building," said executive director Harry Morrow last week. "We really can't handle many more."

In spite of its facilities, the Settlement finds space for almost fifty different activities each week. The Settlement deals with "everything which concerns the life of the people where it is located," said Morrow. "It tries to serve as a focal point for the neighborhood." Members' activities are planned from the cradle almost to the grave.

Morrow, a middle-sized man of about forty, has been directing USU since last April, when he took over from Kay Gorrie. He comes from Vancouver, and is the first male director the Settlement has had.

"A big city can be the cruellest place to live," he said. "There are tremendous problems... such as impersonality... in the centre of the city."

"Relating the city and the university and helping the one to see the other" is one of USH's major jobs, he said. "It's a neighbourhood community centre where students interested in social problems can have a fling at leadership, where students can get an appreciation of what life is like in this part of the city, and where the student in social sciences can do research."

Although members come from all over the city, most Settlement-goers come from the College-University Ave.-Waterfront-Spadina district. The greatest number live within half a mile of the Settlement, which is at 23 Grange Road, just south of the Art Gallery, one emigrant to Buffalo is still a member, and comes back occasionally.

"This area is one of the main focal points for immigrants in Toronto," said Morrow. He outlined the pattern: Immigrants move into the centre of the city to be near other members of their ethnic group. They stay in the area for an average of about two years, and then move towards the city limits. Settlement membership, which spreads mostly to the north and west of the city's centre, reflects this constant transition.

"In North America, the one social agency that has made the greatest contribution to the immigrant is the settlement," he said. "They come in waves. The Jewish and Japanese people here after the war have now largely left

What Settlement Is

The University Settlement is an independent social service agency, a community centre for the area immediately west of University Ave. and South of College St. It was started in 1910 by Sir Robert Falconer of the University of Toronto, and is now largely supported by the Community Chest of Greater Toronto. Its two buildings are on Grange Road, just south of the Art Gallery, and a ten minutes' walk from the university campus.

This special issue of The Settlement Skyline is possible because of a grant by the Students' Administrative Council of the University. It was written by the staff of the Settlement, volunteers and the staff of The Varsity, the campus daily newspaper.

TV Set was New Year's Gift Is It a Curse or a Blessing?

A television set—a New Year's gift to the Settlement—came to 23 Grange Road in early January. This was just another cooperative effort between the Settlement clubs and one of Settlement's neighbours.

Plans for the set, a 21-inch one, were made in November of last year by a group of ambitious young adults, members of Club Cosmo.

The TV is used by most of the adult clubs at the Settlement—USH—at one time or another. The graduate students, residents at USH who help with programs find it a curse. "I can't get away from it," complained Mehroo Cooper, an Indian student from Bombay.

Lionel Axler, manager of the Victory theatre, near the Settlement, matched the clubs' contributions in buying the set. Further donations brought an aerial, which now stands on top of the main Settlement building. The set is serviced by adult members of the Settlement, some of whom are TV repairmen.

UNIVERSITY SETTLEMENT

There is still a need . . .

The Settlement movement had its beginning in England in the second half of the nineteenth century. As the great changes made by the industrial revolution became increasingly apparent to many socially minded scholars, more and more students from the University began to frequent the east end of London seeking to identify themselves with the life of the poor and seeking ways in which they could be helpful. Some took houses and spent their summer vacations in the east end.

The outcome of this concern which was stimulated in part by some of the distinguished leaders in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge was the establishment of the first settlement house, Toynbee Hall, under the direction of Thomas Barnett, a young Church of England clergyman. He had developed a very interesting educational program in his parish in the most depressed part of the city.

The first settlements had three main functions: they were centres where the people from the universities and the local residents could meet together and come to know one another, they were centres for education and social activity, they were centres of social research. (The first research projects were initiated as the results of the work of the settlement pioneers.) Many of the leaders in these varied activities lived in the settlement and tried to be a part of the life of the neighbourhood.

The University of Toronto Settlement had its beginnings in 1910. It was started by President Falconer of the University and a group of interested students and faculty members. The original purposes of the Settlement were similar to those that had determined the founding of Toynbee Hall.

Very quickly it became a social and education centre and through the years has served as a bridge between the residents of the neighbourhood, the University and other parts of the city.

Students and staff have given leadership in the activities of the Settlement. Through their participation they have come to understand something of life in the crowded downtown section of a modern city. While the Settlement is not an integral part of the University, at the same time it has had close associations, and the majority of the Board of Directors is composed of members of the staff and graduates of the University of Toronto. Most of the volunteer leaders come from the campus.

While the original job of the Settlement was a little different from the needs of today's world, there is still a great need for a University Settlement in the community. City living presents many problems. People are lonely even amongst crowds. Many people need the hand of friendship and understanding. Increasing leisure is bringing new problems. Today as in 1910 there is a need for a group of concerned and informed citizens to work for needed social reforms. University Settlement has a continuing job and it needs the support of the University community. There is a job for the volunteer worker and a challenge to the student to prepare himself in the School of Social Work for full time work in an exciting and challenging area of work.

Development of Insight Thru Settlement Tasks

By LLOYD B. GRAHAM
Settlement Worker; Candidate for the degree of Doctor of Social Work, University of Toronto

In the seven years since I had the privilege of serving as a student on the staff of University Settlement, there have been many occasions when I have felt great gratitude for the broadened understanding of people and community which that experience provided for me. I can testify to the invaluable opportunities which service at a Settlement brings for meeting, knowing, understanding—and loving people of all sorts.

For the last few years, natural science with its tremendous significant nuclear discoveries, has tended to overshadow the greatest study of mankind which is Man. Our efforts in developing the more important abilities required for living harmoniously together are less spectacular, but no less vital.

The study of the natural sciences is vital for our material progress, but unless each human being develops concurrently his or her capacity to live peacefully with other human beings of differing hues and opinions, we run the collective risk of annihilating what Our Lord intended to be His noblest creation.

Many people think that a Settlement is just a recreation center. To my everlasting gratitude, I discovered that it was a place for learning not only how to play and get along with others, but also for developing insights into the reasons people are the way they are.

Feeling of self-righteousness and supposed superiority go out the window when we realize the disabilities under which many fellow human beings labour. Experience with groups of children in a Settlement enables one to blend these insights with personal beliefs to form the social conscience which is essential for successful achievement in any field of endeavour.

Service as a volunteer at University Settlement brought opportunities for widening my circle of friendship, for sharpening my social conscience and for preparing myself for my career. No matter what career a person may have in mind, success will depend ultimately on the possession of a sympathetic understanding of fellow human beings.

There is no better setting than University Settlement for developing such an understanding and for rendering worthwhile service in the process.

New Club

A new club has been organized at the University Settlement, so young teen-agers and the "before-teens" can dance. It's called Club Flamingo, and the music plays Wednesday nights at 15 Grange Road, from 7:30 to 10:15.

Hart House Men Give Xmas Party

By HAL JACKMAN
Hart House Rep to University Settlement

For the last twenty years, the Christmas season has come early to the undergraduate members of Hart House. Ever since the days of the administration of former Warden Bickersteth it has been the practice for the men of Hart House to entertain the boys of the University Settlement at a gala Christmas party.

The annual Christmas party is looked upon by all that have a hand in it as a valuable contribution to understanding between the University and the downtown community immediately to the south of us. But, probably most important of all, everybody comes home full of the Christmas cheer and the feeling of satisfaction that one derives from having helped the younger members of the community enjoy themselves.

Coming-Up

Annual meeting of the University Settlement, Wednesday March 14th, at 8:15 p.m. Prof. G. De B. Robinson, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Settlement, particularly welcomes students and neighbours.

A folk-opera, 'The Magic Piper,' coming around April 27th. This is based on Robert Browning's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.' It's an attempt to bring together the general Club program and the Music School's program.

President's Message

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

The University Settlement, one of many good works of my distinguished predecessor, Sir Robert Falconer, has been a living manifestation of the spirit of humanitarianism that should pervade every university. Although the Settlement is not an integral part of the University of Toronto, it has been aided over the years by hundreds of students and scores of staff members. All students who heed the old, yet ever new, question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" will rally to its call for supporters and helpers.

The President of the University of Toronto, Dr. Sidney Smith, is the Honorary Chairman of the University Settlement. Dr. Smith's message on the University Settlement is printed at left.

Enjoy Settlement Work Student Volunteer Finds

By MARY PAWLUCK
Student at U of T, Volunteer Worker at Settlement

Every Thursday afternoon, at a little past 3:30 the heavy blue door at 23 Grange Road bangs loudly, high pitched voices call out for "Charlyn!", a table scrapes as the children put it in position for taking attendance and the Junior Girls' program at the University Settlement House begins.

Within a short time 40 to 60 young girls have scrambled up or down stairs to the rooms where their activities for the day are to be held. These could be cooking or dancing, painting or wood-working or sewing — depending on what the club chose the previous week.

Recently I learned that the buildings of the University Settlement House were condemned by the city. This will give the reader an idea of the state of the facilities provided for children interested in joining a club or taking ballet or piano lessons. The point I want to make is not that the Settlement needs funds or new buildings (it does) but that the children who belong to it, notwithstanding their surroundings, are developing their personalities, learning new skills, expressing themselves in creative work and are, above all, having fun.

This, to me, is the ultimate end of a club or group. In my opinion, the Settlement does not exist expressly to keep boys and girls off the streets, or to give them things which they may or may not be able to get at home nor even to teach tolerance or co-operation.

In my year and a half at the Settlement I have never had occasion to mention tolerance in regard to race, colour, or creed. Intolerance presents itself in other respects — the chubby girl, another with braces on her teeth — these are the ones who suffer bars.

The most exciting thing for me has been the gradual development I have noticed in my club group since September. In its beginning it was just a gathering of children who happened to be under one leader. Since, it has progressed and relations within the group have developed to make a real feeling of friendship. They still have their personal friends but now they are members of a still wider fraternity.

Students will volunteer at the Settlement for many reasons. Some need the working hours for credits in Psych. 2a, others do it for interest and still others because they intend to enter the field of social work. Each in turn will react to his work differently. For one it will be a bother, for another a diversion and for another a fulfillment of certain needs.

I personally have found it a revealing experience. Never having worked with children before I have found it to be an introduction to a whole new world, one which I think worthy of more investigation.

More to Say ...

No attempt to list all the activities of the University Settlement house can ever be completely successful. On this page, you can see some of the things being done there. Other important parts of the program:

The Nursery School: which takes in 30 children every morning from nine till twelve, charging their parents only what they can afford. The Nursery school has a yard to play in, books, and games for the kids.

The Beginner's Program: Rene Roseman, director of the beginners' says the five to seven year-olds are 'very individualistic.' "Play is the focal point upon which our program evolves," she says. The kids go in for wood-working, cooking, painting, train-making, or just have fun being noisy in the rompous room.

The Juniors: Objectives of the Junior leadership, say director Charlyn Howze, are "to give the children an opportunity to have a good experience among children of their own age; to gain status in a group; to work out any problems and emotional needs in a constructive manner." Their program, on a higher level, is much the same as the Beginners'.

The Music School: With 160 pupils, it's one of the biggest activities in the Settlement. The School has four studios, one practice room on the third floor of 23 Grange Road. Fred Skitch, the director, has eleven teachers working with him. Any neighbourhood child or adult is welcome to take piano or violin lessons, or to join folk-dancing and ballet classes.

rent these skates to the children in the neighbourhood for 25c a pair. At the end of the skating season they return the skates and we return the money. Without these skates a great many children would never learn to skate.

One of our most recent ventures at the Settlement has been our boxing club. It takes in all ages. Our younger children up to eighteen do a little boxing with other clubs. Our older boys do their boxing at the Palace Pier. We hope to produce a champion. The boxing trainers are very capable persons. We have with us Earl Brown, Les Garrell and a former champion, Danny Webb.

Without our volunteers we would not be able to have such an extensive sports program.

Gull Lake Camp Gives Kids Outdoor Life

By DAVE CRITCHLEY
Settlement Staffer

"Summer is for Kids" is the title of a movie on camping. The thousands of Canadians who go to a camp either as campers or staff would probably agree. A good camp brings together a combination that is hard to beat in the field of youth work. Let's see what one in particular is made up of.

Take a liberal slice of the out-of-doors 107 miles north of Toronto as the train runs; add boys and girls from a city not planned with them in mind; and carefully and selectively add a staff made up of Counsellors, Nurse, Waterfront Director, Village Heads, Caretaker, campers are making a hide-away after having spent half an hour discussing where and how it should be built. On the boulder at the tip of Sunset Point, a camper is telling his counsellor that he wants to go home because he is afraid his parents are going to leave him.

But this isn't the whole Boulderwood Story. It's also the permanent Settlement staff and the male and female counsellors, drawn largely from the ranks of students. They reach the end of the summer ready for a couple of weeks holiday, but feeling that they know and value others, themselves and Canada a little more.

So, although it's true that Summer is for Kids, it isn't the whole truth. It's also for Canada.

He Might Fall In!

We mean the fellow with his bottom turned to the camera. Perhaps some rambunctious Settlement youngster will give him a shove.

This is a scene of the dock at Camp Boulderwood, on Gull Lake near Gravenhurst. Settlement youngsters use the camp all July and August. One of the two-week periods has musically-inclined kids at the yearly Music Camp.

Look again. Has he fallen in yet?

COUNSELLORS and a Waterfront Director are urgently needed for Camp Boulderwood this summer. Good supervision, pleasant surroundings, and some salary are enticements. If you're interested, or know someone else who is, call David Critchley at the Settlement, EM. 6-8046.

Programme Assistant, Arts and Crafts Director, Cook, Campercraft Director and Camp Director.

This is the formula used by University Settlement's Camp Boulderwood (on Gull Lake, near Gravenhurst) to help develop young Canadians who will be able to meet constructively the demands that will be placed on them as adults.

Nor is this merely the stuff that theory is made of. Though it is often slow, and sometimes frustrating, the process working towards this end is always present. Glimpses of it can be caught daily by the trained eye.

Over there on the dock, two boys are watching a sunfish and one of them has forgotten that two weeks ago he could identify his companion only as a "Dirty DP." And coming out of the water is a ten year old who has just lost a race for the first time without crying.

New Canadians Go To Settlement University Students Teach Classes

By ANNA CAPPON

People from many countries flock into the Settlement every Monday and Thursday night. At 7:20 the hall is like a beehive, but 15 minutes later all is quiet, while behind every door a small group sits around the table struggling with the English language.

Lucy Shea of St. Michael's College knows that: "This book is here" and "That book is there," but she enjoys with her pupils the thrill of mastering a new language step by step and she feels as all the teachers do, that it is well worth the effort. Often it is not only teaching new things, but also undoing what they have picked up on the job.

Beth Armstrong's class was very confused when she taught: "He doesn't" because the foreman always says, "He don't." Spelling is a big problem all over, but it sure is a challenge for the pupil who tells at the initial interview: "My father no send me to school, I no go." Of course, this is a great exception, but many have gone to school for only 3 years.

The books are provided free of charge by the Federal Government. Most of the explaining is done through pictures. For instance, when introducing the past tense, calendar blocks get the idea of yesterday and today across. The Teacher's Guide explains the system and gives suggestions on teaching techniques.

Citizenship training is added to the curriculum as soon as the pupils know enough English to communicate. This includes a lot of little and big, but very important things, from the fact that the man always walks on the streetside (instead of staying on the left side), to government structure. But there is more to taking a class than teaching English and Citizenship. In the small group of 5 to 10 people the teacher gets to know the pupils personally and for many of them the teacher is the only positive link with the world outside their ethnic community. Here they come with not only all kinds of forms for income tax, driver's license and sponsoring relatives, but also with often baffling problems of housing and unemployment.

The teachers, many of whom are students, find their volunteer job gratifying and fascinating. As a fringe benefit Beverly Allan extends her knowledge of Italian, one of her subjects in university along the way.

After the classes there is a social program of informative movies or dancing. Dancing is tops in popularity. Even though there are always far too few girls, everybody has a good time, especially when some of the Italian boys bring their accordions and guitars along. Mixing is no problem at all. The friendly atmosphere just takes everybody right in and the lively waltzes and polkas keep the mood sparkling and gay.

The group has its own council, made up of one representative from each class (except one or two in which nobody can speak English). This council organizes special parties and discusses suggestions from the general membership.

The University Settlement provides its New Canadian members with a place where they are happy as part of a Canadian setting and we find that this stimulates their desire to learn English and Canadian ways, which in turn will help them to be happier in the general Canadian setting.

Volunteers Meeting Tuesday Night Hear Lawson on "Settlement Family"

Volunteers with questions or doubts about their job can come to hear about "The Family of the Settlement," next Tuesday night.

The speaker is Mr. W. T. "Lon" Lawson, former program director of the University Settlement, and now director of Group Services at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital.

"This discussion is particularly geared to the volunteer, to help him to a greater appreciation of his work," said Bill Stern, director of General Program at the Settlement. For an understanding of their group, volunteers need an understanding of its background, he said.

This will be the second meeting for all volunteers at the University Settlement. In December, about sixty volunteers, staff, and board members came to a tea in the basement lounge of the University College Men's Residence Dining Hall.

The meeting is at 8:15 Tuesday night, in the Library of 23 Grange Road. Anyone, even though he hasn't worked at the Settlement yet, is welcome.

Settlement Grows

There is no predominant group now.

Settlement membership varies from 1,000 to 1,400, he said. There are nineteen staff members. New members are found through their children, by visiting, or by word of mouth.

"City planners have predicted that the Settlement area will remain residential for many years," said Morrow. "There will still be an important place in the community for USH."

"And with the shortened work week, the problem of leisure will take on new importance," he said.

This schedule is some guide to the many activities at the some 1400 participants, 100 volunteers, and more than ten staff.

Whites Trample Kingsway Dunc Brodie Scores Two

By JOHN BROOKS

Currently the hottest club in the Major Series, Varsity Whites continued in their winning ways last night by solidly trouncing Kingsway Lumber 5-2 at Varsity Arena. The win was the Whites' third in a row and moves them just six points back of the Lumbermen and three ahead of Pickin' Chicken who lost to Lyndhursts 3-2.

Dunc Brodie paced the Whites with two goals and an assist, with other counters going to Lotocki, Kearney and Mills. Hunyer and Schill scored for the losers.

Lotocki and Mills pushed Varsity into a 2-1 lead at the end of the first after spotting Kingsway the opening counter. The goal by Mills was the best of the night, as he was Johnny-on-the-spot to flip home a perfect pass for Brodie.

Kingsway came to life in the second, but their burst of power was only temporary. Brodie counted his first of two at the 5:43 mark, only to have Hunter put the Lumbermen back in the game at the 13:45.

Kearney and Brodie salted the game away in the third frame with unanswered goals. Kearney's came with Kingsway two men short.

Blues Thump Rochester 85-73 Dacyshyn, Richman Pace Varsity

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Varsity Basketball Blues were at the peak of their game last night when they posted an 85-73 victory over the Rochester Yellow Jackets. The Blue win was the first in ten starts against American opposition.

John Dacyshyn and Rube Richman led the way for Varsity, scoring 22 and 20 points respectively. Pete Potter hooped 13 while Leo Madden chimed in with ten. John Sheppard, fifth man on the starting quintet, scored nine for the Blues. Dick Wood was high for Rochester with 12.

Rochester led for the first twelve minutes of the game, but the Blues, paced by Richman came back to tie it at 25-25. Ruby threw in three sets from 30 feet out and Potter hit on a set from the side to send the Blues in front

27-25. Thereafter, the Blues never relinquished the lead. The Blues led 41-34 at the half and were up by as many as 14 in the last stanza, before Rochester rallied in the last five minutes to cut their deficit to six with one minute and a half remaining. Toronto then scored three quick lay-ups to end the game and give the Blues their twelve point margin.

Dacyshyn and Sheppard turned in excellent rebounding games while Madden hit on some outside shots at key moments in the game. Dacyshyn was a bearcat on defence, blocking three shots in the last ten minutes of the tilt. Richman thrilled the crowd with his fine outside shooting and two spectacular driving lay-ups. Potter performed in his usual brilliant manner, setting up scoring plays

In the preliminary game, Tridents defeated Varsity Intermediates 95-86. Mike Baida topped the winners with 25, while Ed Rigby was high for Toronto with 19.

Toronto defeated O.A.C. in both senior and intermediate wrestling action while SPS captured the interfaculty swim meet to round out the evening.

Badminton Girls Intercol Champs

Hail the victors! Varsity women badminton team came triumphantly home from a two day intercollegiate match at McGill last weekend. The other five schools represented were McGill, McMaster, Queen's, Western and O.A.C. Toronto won with a total score of 15 points—five points ahead of next in line McGill. Queen's and Western followed with nine and eight respectively.

Pat Goddson (III Viv), Lyn Rouke (II Trin), Rhonda Swarbrick (I POT) and Noreen Beasley (III POT), Toronto's talented four, each played 5 games of both singles and doubles on Friday ending in round-robin play which was carried over to Saturday morning.

We were sorry to see that Mary Bodrug, an excellent contender for Intercollegiate badminton, was unable to participate because of an injury.

After Friday's matches, the McGill team capably played the role of host at a dinner in honour of their visiting opponents. The keen enthusiasm and friendly competition felt in a weekend such as this is credited to the small size of the teams represented.

EAC MEET

Talks on Japan and West Africa will highlight tonight's meeting of the External Affairs Committee. It will be held at 7:00 p.m. in Falconer Hall.

Maybe she likes to go OUT for dinner now and then. On Sunday, for instance, she's been hitting the books all afternoon — it's 5:30 — she wants a change of scene — she wants some comfortable, relaxing place — good conversation, fine food. So you take her to Scott's, because it's got that terrific buffet dinner, and you can have as many helpings as you like for no extra charge.

And Scott's has ATMOSPHERE. You know — soft lights, white linen, pleasant, efficient waitresses. She's impressed, of course, because the food's excellent—the surroundings just right, YOU'RE impressed too. Scott's is so close — just over Tremont and Yonge — and that tremendous food is so reasonably priced! It's remarkable! She'll want to go back again and again. So will you.

With the girls' hockey schedule drawing to a close and the finals looming on the horizon, some mention definitely needs to be made of the present officiating in the league. Whether the referees have not been explicitly instructed by the hockey curator as to the interpretation of the rules of the female brand of the game or whether they are taking the games "as a lark," I do not know. However, the fault does not lie with these congenial gentlemen entirely, because it is mainly a case of the rule book itself.

Penalties have been very few this year; on the other hand, infringements of the rules have been increasing without any nods by the officials in the direction of the "sin bin". Particularly dangerous, has been the great amount of boarding and high sticking, without any padding, the number of minor injuries is overwhelming. Needless to say, the game cannot be slowed down by a girl weighted down by pads, so for the sake of not ruining some co-ed for life, lets have some strict calling, officials! Better still, let's have the hockey club assume some responsibility for a clearer interpretation of the referees' handbook.

It is fine and it is correct for the Health Centre to say that they wont pay for injuries incurred by girls wearing non-shatter proof glasses. From personal observations, that threat in last Friday's Varsity has not done a thing, for the girls persist in wearing glasses. When asked if they knew about the warning, all the girls questioned said that they knew nothing about it and continued to skate merrily along. It is all very nice to say that if they are that stupid let them wear glasses and get cut to ribbons and possibly lose their sight, but that is not the answer, it is up to the hockey club to take the responsibility and make it illegal for girls to play with glasses unless they wear eye guards.

Of course, all this is bound to bring up the question of raising the puck. Some may argue that if you forbid it you are taking the only male skill, that girls can develop, away from the game. Since when can you call it a skill, if the puck cannot be controlled? Let's have something more definite than a three foot ruling!

It is up to the Directorate and the Hockey Club to take a definite stand on this subject which is so vital to the continuing success of the game on the campus. Let's not have girls hurt when some prohibitive measures can be taken by the executive. The responsibility is theirs now.

SPS, UC Draw Skule Eliminated

In a rough and woolly intramural hockey game yesterday at the Arena, Sr. SPS and Sr. UC tangled for honors in the Group One standings. The game ended in a tie, 3-3, which shattered UC's hopes of tying St. Mike's for the top slot. For Skule, it meant elimination from the playoffs as they ended up in fourth place, one point behind the third and last playoff spot occupied by Sr. Meds.

It was a rough game right from the beginning. The Skule players went after the win right from the first minute. They were not denied as Thomson sent them ahead with a neat goal. Larry Scott tied the score up later in the frame but Kostinine sent Skule out in front again. Nadin let go with a hard slap shot which found the Skule net to tie up the score again.

By comparison with the first period, the second period was wild, hectic and exciting. Dysart shot UC out in front with a goal on a solo effort. With UC short-handed, Bryant tied up the score for the Skule team. Then the roof fell in. There were penalties galore. Lister, Skule's goalie, and Nadin had a set to, and so Nadin went off in the company of an unidentified Skule player who sat out Lister's penalty. Bidowski and Rohacek of Skule soon followed suit. Scott joined the parade for UC. The game ended with Skule pulling their goalie but to no avail.

D. and G. Hewson, Ed Rohacek were Skule's best on going both ways. For UC it was Scott, Nadin and Dysart.

SPS 4 knocked off SPS 3 to the tune of 5-2. Maik scored two for the winners while Sandy, Larsen and Taylor added singletons. Ross and DeMarsico scored for the losers.

TWO ARRESTS ON WALK

Nose For News?

With gorgeous lovelies such as this to interview, you'd think the office would be swarming with reporters. But we still have a few vacancies on our staff for those who really wish to apply themselves — to newswriting, that is. Also in the make-up, CUP, and Features departments, there are still opportunities for enterprising young staffers. And there are some gorgeous hunks of beefcake for you girls to interview also. Don't let this picture fool you, we have scenes like this all the time down in The Varsity office. Apply in Varsity office, basement of the SAC building.

Crackdown On Philosopher's Walk Causes Arrest Of Two Uni Types

Amongst those arrested and charged with gross indecency in Toronto last month were a University of Toronto student and a man who listed his occupation as a "teacher at the U of T."

This information came from a police officer who was interviewed by a Varsity staffer last night.

Said one policeman, "Offenders come from all walks of life. Why there are even homosexuals among British MP's and Cabinet Ministers."

Among the arrests last month were a student lawyer from Osgoode, a labourer, two clerks and the student and "teacher" from the U of T.

Sentences ranged from $100 or 60 days to $50 or 10 days.

"There is no corrective treatment for these people in the reform institutions or in the jails," continued the policeman, "Sometimes a psychiatrist will work with them till he thinks they are cured. Then all of a sudden the offenders are back at it again. The only thing I'm afraid of, is that they will lead others astray. Something constructive should be done with them."

Conditions on Philosophers' Walk, now well-known as a "meeting-place of males" were publicized by The Varsity about three months ago. This resulted in a series of crack-downs on the Walk by the police and subsequent arrests.

"There have been no more arrests since those a month ago," said the police officer.

This may indicate that the Walk is gradually becoming clear of offenders.

Plateau Committee Convenes Will Study Future Enrolment

Between 21,400 and 25,000 students will enrol in 1968 at the University of Toronto. This prediction was contained in a statistical report presented to the Plateau Committee by Professor B. A. Griffith.

CCF MPP Raps Reform Schools, Brute Approach

"Ontario's training schools, at Cobourg and Galt, are but preparations for the reformatories, and the reformatories are preparations only for the penitentiaries." This was the opinion of Donald C. MacDonald, MPP, Ontario CCF leader, speaking on the topic of "Our Reform Institutions."

Mr. MacDonald, speaking to the Campus CCF Club yesterday afternoon continued, "The modern, liberal approach of rehabilitation of criminals has been stifled by Ontario's brutal nineteenth century approach."

He alleged that penal policy is set, not by trained staff that understand the need for rehabilitation, but by old-fashioned up-through-the-ranks administrators who believe that imprisonment is not to rehabilitate but to punish.

According to MacDonald, the Dept. was using political patronage to hire incapable personnel and cited as an example the case of a homosexual working at Cobourg, a boys' institution.

"This government," concluded MacDonald, "even has the nerve to promote political appointees over the heads of better trained social workers."

Under the chairmanship of Professor G. de B. Robinson, professor of mathematics, this committee, appointed by the senate, is presently studying problems of the greatly increased enrolment expected in the future.

Other statistics presently available to the Plateau Committee show that for the last 15 years almost exactly 90 per cent of the students of the university have come from Ontario.

There has been a decline in the enrolment of honor arts from 18 to 20 per cent in the period 1941-43 to between 12 and 13 per cent in the period 1952-55.

This may reflect, the committee reports, a growing unpopularity for highly specialized and difficult courses, or possibly a gradually deteriorating preparation for those courses in high schools.

The committee hopes to bring a report to the senate by June, 1956.

'Morality Bred By Education' Says N.V. Scarfe At Lecture

"Morality is the end product of an education that stimulates the intellect in an atmosphere of individual freedom," said Neville V. Scarfe, M.A., Dean of Education, at the University of Manitoba.

Mr. Scarfe gave the Victoria University Armstrong Lecture in the Vic Chapel yesterday. Speaking on the topic Education and Morals, Mr. Scarfe said that this was a topic which must be brought to public attention often.

"There is tragic truth in the statement that the 20th century is declining morally in spite of the fact that the educational standards are higher."

The speaker stated that the purpose of education is to modify behavior, to enrich life and to promote moral excellence. Morality is the courage to be just, honest and considerate of others.

Mr. Scarfe accused parents and teachers for the present moral decline, saying that not enough time is spent in the home with the children. "Both parents are out working or just out.

"The home has become merely a centre for physical and moral relaxation. There is no longer a kindly but firm insistence on good behavior.

"The greatest function of the teacher is to point out the evils of civilization to future citizens," he said.

As a solution to the moral and educational problem Mr. Scarfe advocated the highest quality of teaching in the lowest grades to counteract the inefficiency and ineffectual meaning of school. "Wisdom and virtue are more important than methods and means of teaching. Most knowledge can be made to function to give a living and an abundant life as well," he said.

"It must transform an intellectual detachment into an emotional attachment to the highest of ideals. We need a change of thought and not a change of curriculum."

Public Control Liquor Sale To Lower Booze Prices

"The sale of liquor should be put in the hands of private enterprise to bring down its price," said Nordy Morgenstern, (IV SPS), opposing a motion which would have approved Ontario's present liquor laws.

The motion was debated yesterday between SPS and Trinity, and ended in a draw, 11-11.

The Liquor Control Board of Ontario buys liquor from distillers, he said, and sells it through wholesalers. This controls the public's taste in beverages since they cannot buy certain brands. "The profit obtained from the lower prices could be invested in the Alcohol Research Foundation to combat the alcohol sickness," he said.

Mr. Morgenstern also criticized the system of purchase. "The outdated forms that have to be filled in when a person is buying beer are a waste of time, energy and money," he complained.

Pat Fleck, (I Trinity), stated that the present liquor regulations are common-sense rules that must please as many people as possible. "A person can buy as much liquor as he wants," he pointed out, "but he must keep within the limits of a few simple rules."

Michael Davis, (I Trinity), second speaker for the affirmative argued that it was our own fault if liquor policy was no longer in the hands of the people.

He said, "Advertising by breweries is among the cleverest in Canada, simply because they have to be original."

Leo Gray, (IV SPS), final speaker for the opposition, questioned the policy of issuing liquor licenses to "dives" and refusing them to the high-class restaurants.

"The government has given arbitrary power to the LCBO and the Liquor License Board.

'VARSITY' A DISGRACE?

Vote For A Sign...

On display at Hart House is a permanent collection of the most outstanding posters used by past candidates in the annual Hart House elections. Whether or not Parke made the squash committee or Gartrell took his horn on the music committee or not is not known, but at any rate the artistic talent of their publicity will preserve their names for posterity in the Hart House Poster collection.

Vote McGill NFCUS Reaffiliation Motion Insists On Basic Changes

Montreal (CUP): McGill University may reaffiliate with the National Federation of Canadian University Students next year, if a motion submitted to the Students' Executive Council here last week is passed.

Last year, the rise in NFCUS fees to 50c prompted a student referendum here on continuation of membership in the National Federation. Students voted 293-238 to withdraw, and McGill did.

The motion before the council states, in part:

Recognizing that the idea ... is a basically good one;

Reaffirming that on principle alone ... should be members ...

Noting, however, that the National Federation has done very little in the past to justify its existence;

Therefore, be it resolved ... join next fall, provided the executive accepts at least half the changes ...

1. A decrease of 20 percent in NFCUS membership fees, to be counter balanced by inviting all Canadian colleges to join;

2. A strengthening of local committees;

3. Local mass meetings ... so all students could decide policy;

4. A larger budget to carry out a well organized program of activities;

5. Reinforcing contact with local bodies;

6. Make the federation more representatives by allowing one vote for every 2,000 students.

The McGill Daily reported last Wednesday that the SEC would decide, last Friday, on the motion.

"What was the outcome of the meeting," wired The Varsity.

"Who knows," replied the Daily.

Report Two Tours At EAC Contrast Japan and Nigeria

"Japan will accept communism if and when communism becomes the dominant force in the world", said Gay Sellers, (IV UC) at a meeting of the External Affairs Committee last night.

"Japan has a high opinion of successful nations and tries to emulate them. It is a democratic nation now, following the lead of the United States. But if Russia becomes economically dominant they will follow them," said Miss Sellers.

In contrast to the Japanese, West Africans are extremely interested in Canada and its place in world politics, said Marty Friedland, who also reported on WUS seminars last summer.

The speaker's enthusiasm for their experience sponsored by the EAC had stimulated the members of the council to continue their student exchanges with other countries, said Donna Lough.

A report on the NFCUS Travel Service was presented by Dick Verity, head of the local committee on travel. He outlined the three types of tours sponsored this year by NFCUS. This year, he said, they have obtained the service of the Quebec Airlines which will provide reduced rates on air travel.

Need 452 Pints Today

Bleed today or forever hold your blood! The current campus Blood Campaign is now in its last day registering 452 pints short of the 1500 pint objective.

General disappointment at student response to the drive was expressed by Josephine Flaherty, chairman of the campaign. "We had hoped to receive about 300 students each of the five days," she said, "but only 1048 have turned out so far."

(Winnipeg (Special): 1,635 pints of blood were given here last week in the University of Manitoba's Blood Drive. Top prize was shared between Nursing, with 100% of its enrolment contributing, and Science, with 335 donors in all. The U of M's enrolment is approximately 5,000.)

St. Mike's Decides By Majority of One Staff Is Frustrated

"The Varsity is a disgrace," said the St. Mike's Oratorical Society last night. But it took them two votes to decide, and the final result was 15-14.

"What value is a publication like the marriage issue?" asked Lydia Nemeth, first government speaker in the debate.

"What does it matter if the wrinkles on your hand show you are 21 or not? There is a limit of decency and The Varsity has lost complete sense of its limit."

She went on to say The Varsity was the publication of a bunch of love-frustrated individuals, because every issue deals with sex.

Kathy Wagner, first speaker for the opposition, asked if the pile of Varsityes dumped outside of the St. Mike's Co-op each day did not disappear quickly enough.

"Just because The Varsity puts out a marriage issue and in its editorial column criticizes the Catholic Women's League contradictory to Roman Catholic philosophy do we immediately grapple with beliefs contradictory to our own? Here enters the question of maturity! This is what we will face when we come out of our cocoon at St. Mike's."

She went on to say that The Varsity was the easiest and the only way of finding out about the large university of which she is a student. "The Varsity is at least acceptable and certainly not disgraceful," she said, citing the paper's support of such projects as SHARE, Red Feather and the blood drive.

Speaking for the government, Dick Regan asked "What do we read in The Varsity other than that there is one nude in Hart House?" He compared it to a modern day pocket book saying that it appealed only to the basic passions of the students. "If The Varsity were sold at five cents a copy, no one would buy it."

Second speaker of the Opposition, Frank Kilty, said the paper acted as the voice of campus activities, supporter of college spirit, source of entertainment, diversion from academic burdens.

"Our federated system of colleges tends to split us up and we need The Varsity to bind us together. The Varsity must compromise to meet the needs of all the campus."

Early Degrees To 12 Students Ford Helps 'em

Towson, Md. (Exchange): — Twelve girls have graduated a year or two ahead of time.

They were guinea pigs in an academic experiment conducted by Goucher College. Under a special program the girls entered college straight from their sophomore or junior years in high school.

During their four years at Goucher they have been called "Fords." The Ford Foundation sponsored the program, and similar ones at 11 other colleges.

The results of the experiment bear out the contention that exceptional students who are also socially mature may be wasting their time in the final years of high school. The students did very well at college.

issue anyway," he asked. "Many girls admit that they come to college to get a man. People who are very sensitive about sex must be educated some time so why not through The Varsity?"

To accusations of smut, sensationalism and lack of journalistic standards from the floor a Varsity reporter asserted that "people who wear their morals as their best gown are better naked" and claimed that if the opposition could read issue after issue of The Varsity and quote only articles on sex, and if their moral beliefs could not stand the shock of the printed word, they and not The Varsity were a disgrace.

Kingston: The Queen's Journal reports that occupants of the TV room of McNeil House were suddenly forced to leave when a noxious gas of undetermined nature seeped through the open windows.

Students were in tears from the effect of the gas which was probably released by pranksters. The gas finally seeped up to the third floor where some students were forced to leave their rooms.

Playing At Top Form Cagers Meet McGill

John McManus' University of Toronto Basketball Blues hope to extend their winning streak to three games Saturday evening when they take on the visiting McGill Redmen at Hart House Gym at eight thirty.

If the Blues play anywhere near as well as they played against Rochester on Wednesday they'll have little if any trouble subduing the McGill crew. The Redmen are currently occupying fifth place in the six team Intercollegiate Loop. Leon Duplessis, Don Wright, and Ozzie Zimmers have been the Quebecers' top players in a losing season for McGill. Duplessis was the third highest man in Intercollegiate scoring last season averaging nineteen points a game.

John Dacyshyn helped boost his scoring average Wednesday when he hooped 22 points. So far this year Dacyshyn has sunk 211 points in 16 games to give him a 13.4 average this year. Leo Madden is in second place in the Blues' scoring race. Leo has garnered 182 points in 18 games.

Coach McManus will probably start Dacyshyn, Madden, Peter Potter, John Sheppard and Ruby Richman on Saturday. Richman hit his season's peak against Rochester when he hooped 20 points, most of his baskets on set shots from far out that swished through the basket cleanly. Leo Madden was also at his season's best in that game pulling off some tremendous passes.

Skule Tops UC In Cage Action

Led by Ed Skrzypek's 20 points, SPS Seniors rolled to an easy 57-25 win over University College Seniors in a Group 1 game played yesterday afternoon.

Skrzypek, who is a star on the football field, demonstrated that he's no slouch on the basketball floor as he scored his total on a variety of shots. Ed scored eight in the first period to pace Skule to a 20-9 lead.

SPS had no difficulty in breaking the UC zone in the first stanza. They employed a sharp passing attack to get the ball inside for easy shots by the Skule forwards. On the other hand, the Artsmen were forced to shoot from the outside and weren't particularly successful.

The Engineers increased their lead to 23-18 after two periods and outscored UC 25-7 in the last period to wind up with their 32 point margin of victory. Roy Webb and John Bodrug followed Skrzypek on the Skule scoring parade with ten and nine points. "Sudsy" Sutherland was high for the losers with six points; all on set shots from 30 feet out.

Bodrug was in control of the boards for the winners while Harry Wilson and Marty Teshner were UC's top rebounders.

Wilson provided some hilarious moments for the crowd with his comical routine. The fans responded with their customary calls of "Come on Harry."

Four Intervarsity Titles On Line Blues Defend Gymnastic Crown

Come late on Saturday night, and four more Intercollegiate Tournaments will have gone into the record books. Of the four to be held, two will take place during the PHE Graduation Athletic night on Saturday at Hart House.

The University of Toronto Ski Team will travel to old McGill for the Intercol. tourney. The meet there, held at St. Sauveur, will be in conjunction with McGill's annual Winter Carnival. Varsity's hopes run high, with coach Bill Beck taking along with him one of the best ski teams to come out of this University in several years.

As a warm-up for the coming tourney, the ski team travelled to the Dominion Ski Championships held at Collingwood last Saturday and fared very well. In the slalom, Don Essen (III SPS) captured third place and a pair of racing skis with the best Ontario time. Hot on his heels was Bill McIntyre (III SMC) in fourth spot.

On Sunday, Dave Palmateer jumped to 15th spot on the new

First Place At Stake Blues Entertain Laval

Still smarting from a 2-1 setback handed them by the McGill Redmen in Varsity Arena last Friday, the hockey Blues will test Laval on Toronto ice tonight, as the Frenchmen make their last appearance of this season.

Blues will need this one to cement their bid for another Intercollegiate title. At present Laval is hot on their trail, just two points behind, and with a game in hand. Chances of the Redmen creating a battle for the spoils are now so slim as to be virtually ignored, after they dropped an important 7-6 decision to the University of Montreal Carabins last Saturday in Verdun.

With the last third of the schedule now under way, it appears that the contest is between Laval and the Blues, and the outcome of tonight's game is of prime importance.

Blues will ice the same club that missed against McGill last week, while Laval will likely have the same crew that appeared here four weeks ago. On that occasion the Rouge et Or triumphed 2-1, sparked by the brilliant netminding of goaltender Raynald Lavoie. In Quebec City a week later Blues turned the tables with a 4-0 victory, and since then Lavoie has gone steadily downhill, allowing 12 goals against McGill two weeks ago in the Frenchmen's last game.

Undoubtedly refreshed with a two week rest, Laval should provide plenty of opposition for the Blues tonight, additionally inspired by the vision of practically forfeiting the title if they lose. On the other hand it is highly unlikely that the Blues can play as slow a game as last week and it was best to have it with McGill.

Girls' Sports

One of the best girls' hockey games of the year was played on Wednesday noon, with U.C. 's defeating the Medical women 6 to 1. But the prospective doctors gave the undefeated artswomen a tough battle.

A scoreless first period indicates how closely each team was checking. Judy Marshall, of Meds, scored the first goal of the game, the only goal the Meds girls were able to push past the UC goalie. Several minutes later Peg Mahaffie, one of UC's outstanding defencemen this year, talked to U.C., thus tying the score at one all. U.C. was soon put ahead in the game by a goal by Ellen Currie. The third period scoring was opened up by a goal by Cathie Dauphne, assisted by Doris Hopkins and Shirley Frid. Val Godsoe, assisted by Ellen Currie, made it 4 to 1 for U.C. With an assist by star defenceman Jean Simpson, Barb Wilkinson chalked up another goal for the girls in red and white. The final goal of the game was scored by Val Godsoe, making the score board read 6-1 for U.C.

The lone Med's goal of the game broke the perfect record of shut-outs which the U.C. goalie, Elaine Sossin, had previously maintained.

180 foot jump at Midland. John Hetherington (I SPS) copped a 26th in the international field of 35.

Meanwhile, the Varsity Senior boxing team is off to Kingston for the Intercollegiate tournament with Queen's, McGill, and OAC. Coach Tony Canzano seems to have a top squad lined up and they expect to give defending champions McGill quite a battle. The Redmen, however, have a top squad entered in the tourney. Amongst the entries, they have footballer Buster Brown in the

Tracksters Best In Years Are Fourth In Mich Meet

By BRUCE HUGHES

The University of Toronto's strong indoor track team came up with its most impressive showing in recent years at last Saturday's Michigan State Relay Championships in East Lansing, Michigan. Competing against the best array of track talent that United States universities can offer, the small Varsity crew surprised the experts by taking fourth place in both the sprint medley and the two mile relays while copping sixth position in the distance medley.

The powerful Toronto quartet of Dick Harding, Norm Williams, Bruce Faulkner and Gord Hueston finished scant feet behind Western Michigan and Notre Dame, who placed second and third respectively in the tightly contested sprint medley. Michigan won the mile long event in the record breaking time of 3:26.5. The two-mile relay, a 4 x 880 affair, was won by the meet champions, Notre Dame. The Toronto foursome of Ron Toop, Bill Gelling, Bruce Hughes and Bill Varey ran a strong race to take fourth position behind Michigan State and Kansas.

Toronto entries also did well in individual events. Blue hurdler Normie Williams reached the semi finals in both the 75 yard high and intermediate hurdles. Bruce Faulkner and Dick Harding also reached the semies in the 75 yard dash.

In Tuesday's indoor track meet, Skule sprinter, Dick Harding, smashed the Hart House record for the 440 sprint by 9.10 of a second in recording the blistering time of 52.4. Fellow engineer Bill Gelling placed second, while U.C.'s Ron Toop took third posi-

Interfaculty Summary

In Major League basketball action yesterday afternoon, Sr. Skule leaped into a Group 1 first place tie with St. Mike's A by wallopping hapless Sr. UC by a 57-25 count. Ed Skrzypek paced the winning Engineers with 18 points, while Sutherland topped the losers with six.

In another Major League game, UC III downed Meds III 35-24. Bitzkel was high man for the Redmen, scoring 14 points. Pottelmann led the Doctors with seven.

Amnel led his UC Tigers to a 21-12 victory over Meds I A in Minor League activity. Proctor counted six for the losers to take care of half his team's scoring.

The lone hockey game had the Double Blue of St. Mike's on top of Dents C by a 3-1 count. Wheeler netted a pair for the winners, with McKeown adding the other. Loucks scored the lone counter for the Dentists.

Association, in cooperation with the Athletic Association.

Highlighting the card will be the Senior basketball game between the Varsity Blues and the visiting McGill Redmen. That game goes at 8:30, and will be preceded by a contest involving the Ryerson Rams and the Baby Blues, and if the first meeting of the clubs this season is any indication, tomorrow's game should be a thriller. The Seconds edged out the Rams 69-63 in that game, which was highlighted by a fight between Varsity's Rolih Goldring and Ed McClay of the visitors. McClay, incidentally, hooped 24 points to rate as top man of the night.

Two Intercollegiate Championships are at stake. The Fencing goes at 7:00 and the Gymnastics at 8:00.

The PHE girls will put on a synchronized swimming show in the pool as a contribution to their Grads night. Along with this goes a diving exhibition by Joe Stulac and his friends. At half time of the senior cage game, there will be a special feature.

This special Athletic Night is being put on by the PHE Alumni Association to raise funds for scholarships. Of course, there's the usual dancing following (and preceding) the athletic activities. Only 50c.

on ads for "ice" etc.

In Britain, the United States, and other backward countries, ads for beer, ale, or other alcoholic beverages usually contain the word "beer" or the word "ale" or the word for whatever it is they are advertising. The value of this is questionable. If the victim of advertising retains a single impression from an ad, it should be the advertiser's name. If an ad reads: "drink Slotz's BEER" or even, "drink SLOTZ'S beer," he is liable to retain only the impression; "Beer," and step into the local pub and order somebody's else's.

This doesn't happen in Ontario. Here, an enlightened government protects advertisers, by forcing them to impress their names, rather than their product, on the cursory public. Our brewers and distillers use ads which emphasize the important thing; the name. Nobody has to be told what they sell.

Lately, however, this has taken a sinister turn. The more unscrupulous brewers, trying to whip up attention in a jaded public, are appealing to one of man's basest instincts; nationalism. Almost every ad contains the word "Canada" or "Canadian," in letters almost as big as the trade name. These ads insinuate, subtly, that Canadians think better, live better, work better, play better, and actually are better than anyone else. It doesn't take much of this sort of thing before a nation develops a mass narcissism, sneers at other nations, elects demagogues, institutes universal compulsory military training, stomps around in large boots challenging everybody to righteous wars, and generally makes a damn fool of itself.

Before this goes any further, we must crack down. The brewers have had their chance. We must pass a law that every ad for ale, beer, or any kind of alcoholic beverage whatsoever will have to include, in large, legible letters, the name of the product advertised. It may hurt the advertisers, but it is the only way to prevent the spread of nationalism, the most insidious and degrading of all addictions.

OUR READERS WRITE:

History And Poetical Propriety

Editor, The Varsity:

In the interests of historical accuracy and proper poetic form, I beg to suggest that your "Champus Cat" has misquoted the famous rhyme of Benjamin Jowett. I would refer you to The Balliol Rhymes (Edited by W. G. Hiscock, Oxford, 1955):

First come I, My name is Jowett

There's no knowledge but I know it,
I am Master of this College,
What I don't know isn't know-ledge.

Thus, the form is that of rhyming pairs rather than the abab form which you suggest. This form "appears" throughout the Balliol Rhymes in fact; for example, Arthur Lionel Smith,

Master 1916-24 is characterized as follows:

I am little Smith, who glances
On disorganized finances;
Who'd have looked for so much vigour
In so very small a figure?

Yours etc.,

H. I. Macdonald,
Faculty.

Ed. Note: The poem appearing in The Varsity was copied directly from President Smith's opening address.

Let's Quiet Down

Editor, The Varsity:

Your issues of the past several days have confirmed my opinion that The Varsity is trying very hard to become the "Flash" of campus newspapers. The editors, I conclude, revel to indulge petty minds on the vicarious pleasures of reporting and dwelling upon the filthiest news available. First as to your wonderful job of helping to clear up the homosexual stronghold of philosopher's walk. Surely the report of one issue with the wide-spread given the subject was enough! No.

The Varsity has set itself up

Poignant

Editor, The Varsity:

I am moved to write this letter because of the insensitive and unwarranted criticism concerning the editorial on menstruation.

I felt it was a poignant, sensitive account which made woman even more appealing.

Critics of the editorial seem to be overcivilized products of the meaningless conventionality so adhorrent to people with awareness. They cannot tolerate that which is not "nice." They do not have what Lawrence calls blood consciousness and so their tiny atrophied intellects beat-protest when confronted with something real.

R. Garvie, Grad. Studies.

Sex, Sex, Sex

Editor, The Varsity:

It seems that of the many letters to the editor, The Varsity never gets as much criticism and attention as when letters concern the very popular subject of SEX.

In view of this fact and of the deep interest displayed by fellow students, I therefore make the suggestion that a Sex Column be instituted at once.

Not only will this idea bring forth the inherent surging interest of the student . . . in the paper, but also it will exemplify the broadmindedness of our campus spirit.

N. L. Weisberg, 1 M.P.C.

Congratulations In Order

Editor, The Varsity:

Congratulations to The Varsity are in order. First for its recent "Education Issue", and secondly for its forum on some aspects of the same problem in Monday's issue. These were intelligent attempts suitable to a University newspaper.

One of the problems discussed was the purpose of our university education. And very rightly; what a waste of time our courses would be if we had no goal in mind as we followed them!

But it seems that we are running around looking frantically for some obscure education. Surely, it has the same purpose that life itself has? We are alive to perfect our human nature . . . to become more fully human. Specifically, we students are at university to perfect our human nature, especially with regard to that faculty of the human soul which we call intellect.

as the defender of nature and persecutors of homosexuals, 90% non-existent! I should say.

Then the stroke of genius which resulted in Miss Michener's lowdown on Menstruation, as a friend remarked, "what a bloody issue!"

Well, I won't dwell on the folly of an obviously perverted item stemming from the momentarily weakened mind of Miss Michener. Finally the revelation of the fraternity story courtesy of Flash (which was magnificently appropriate).

I'm sure the majority of readers would appreciate an abandonment of gutter policy. Certainly this died in the wool 17th Century puritanism.

I expect the next issues to be as tame as church publications which is not limiting.

Ed. Note: A minor factual correction: The fraternity story appeared in Hush, not Flash.

Understand?

Editor, The Varsity:

I noticed that when the government finally came across with the cheques for the Dominion and Provincial Bursaries for the Upper Year students, that The Varsity stopped raising a stink. What the hell is the matter?

Don't First Year men count around here? We were paid half of the blasted thing last December, and it seems that next December will come before we see the other half.

Why doesn't the stinking NFCUS see that the government pay the bloody bursaries it has already awarded, before it starts messing around trying to get more student aid?

Of all the nerve, we're starving just because some confounded bureaucrat is too lazy to write his autograph on a few little pieces of paper.

You'd better open up your yap and start making a noise. Understand? Or else, understand?

Curt Reis

Campus Profile

This will sound like the old success story, "local boy makes good." And who knows but it may be?

Curt Reis, a student at University College, after much experience in college theatre has been engaged to direct a professional production. He was engaged to direct Jean Anouilh's Antigone in English, immediately following his praise-winning production of Purification for the UC Players' Guild.

Purification, by Tennessee Williams was presented in the recent U.T.D.C. Drama festival and Curt was described by adjudicator David Greene as a "director of real genius." A representative of "Les Treteaux de Paris" got wind of the reviews and thereupon inited both Curt and Milton Barnes, whose music was a most outstanding contribution to the production, to look after their Antigone.

While at Varsity Curt has acted in The Fall of the City, Hippolytus, Waiting For Lefty and Poison, Passion, Petrification. He has directed Gilbert and Sullivan's Trial By Jury, and Wm. Kozlenko's This Earth Is Ours, Toronto's entry in the Inter-Varsity Drama League Festival last year.

What does Reis himself have to say? "I realize that college drama is a blessing in itself; for here is the opportunity for the artist, who is willing and courageous, to experiment."

But why director? "Again, it gives one the chance to use what scope, imagination, and ingenuity, coupled with knowledge and experience that might lie within."

"I don't intend to remain imbedded in or dragged down by theatrical convention, so to speak; rather I strive where I can to combine superior artistic standards, technically and interpretively, with an ethically sincere relationship with theatre-minded persons. There is a difference in desiring to work in the theatre and for the theatre; the latter is the more rewarding, for the artist is then the servant of his art, and knows humility; and often the master smiles on him..."

He is very enthusiastic about his first step into the professional stage: The Parisian company plan on the first bi-lingual "Antigone" produced anywhere. It should run alternately in French and in English beginning the 19th of March, though the theatre has not yet been chosen.

To top it all off Curt adjudicated at the Secondary School Drama Festival last week-end, and this time his ethical stand was put to the test. He censured a bad play rather severely, and warned off the angry mothers with "... artistic ... artistic standards ... please ladies ... are all that count ..."

Luther's Spirit Is Reformed By Hart House Investigation

"This house deplores Martin Luther." This is the topic to be debated next Wednesday, February 22 in Hart House.

The Rev. John G. Rowe, former Chaplain of Hart House returns for this debate as the Honorary Visitor.

Rev. Rowe, now at Huron College, University of Western Ontario, was chaplain to Hart House from 1953-55. After graduating from Harvard in History, Rev. Rowe joined the U.S. Navy in the second war. Following the war he attended the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and then came to Toronto where he received his Ph.D.

Rev. Rowe was president of the Dog Won't Do at B. C. U.

Vancouver (CUP) — "Tiki" Graham is a shaggy-haired dog, pet of a rich Vancouver resident. "Tiki" polled third place in an election for next year's Undergraduate Societies Chairman at the University of British Columbia last week. He had 405 votes, 13% of the total.

"Tiki" managed this with subdued publicity, a run-of-the-mill campaign, no campaign speech, and ten names on his second-year statement," says the Ubysey, UBC's student daily.

His name was placed first on the ballot. "The purpose," reports the Ubysey, "was to test the interest of the student body in other candidates than the President," who was being voted on at the same time.

News of the stunt leaked out before the election, but voters at ten of the eleven polling booths were fooled.

In an editorial, the Ubysey comments: One small thing disturbs us, however (about the election); and that is the poor showing "Tiki" Graham made in the USC Chairman election. It indicates the low estate to which the noble campus art of tomfoolery has fallen at UBC."

"We've heard of horses getting elected President of the Students' Council, UBC, apparently, is incapable of getting a poodle elected to USC Chairmanship — a task the Joker's Club could have performed with ease, before breakfast."

Commented the dog, "Arf."

New Russ Plan Will Help Films

A new five-year plan of Soviet culture has just been announced, reports the Soviet News Bulletin. The plans involve an increase of 30% in movie houses. The number of full length films to be produced at the end of the period will rise to 120 a year, reports the Bulletin.

Western Story

"Let him use his influence to persuade the Council of Huron College to become once more independent. The fall of the University will inevitably follow, and he will have earned the sincere thanks of all the friends of higher education."

Despite The Varsity editor's prediction, Western University did not immediately fold, although it did seem in danger of losing its main source of revenue — the money from Huron College.

In its editorial columns of 1885, The Varsity reviewed the case for and against Western University.

The Arts Faculty has been suspended; the Divinity Faculty has only one student, reported The Varsity. "The Medical Faculty seems to be the most prosperous with thirty or forty students, and a proposal has been made to establish a Law Faculty. So far nothing but talk — a cheap commodity — has been expended on this proposal."

"A university, however, must have some more enduring foundation than such a feeling."

"London cannot hope to rival Toronto in its facilities for teaching Arts and Law. Let these Faculties then be abandoned." The Varsity advised.

But "there is no reason why a Medical School in London should not be as successful as in Toronto... Good doctors are found in all centres of population, and London can probably, from local medical men, provide as good lecturers as Toronto."

"London has a right to have any educational institution in its midst it can efficiently maintain." The Varsity continued. "The error consists in striving to bring into existence the whole machinery of a University."

"Practical common sense," The Varsity concluded, "teaches that a little well done is better than much nobly attempted."

Despite these grim forebodings, Western University evidently succeeded in its struggle to keep alive, and even went on to beat Toronto at football!

Summer Seminar Students Named - Marg Penman, Scott, Shoemaker Talk, See Europe For Ten Weeks

Names of the three students chosen to represent Toronto at a ten-week seminar-study tour in Europe have been announced.

Anne Kilgore announced last night that the WUS selection committee, after interviewing nineteen applicants, had chosen Margaret Penman (IV Eng. Lang. and Lit.), Ian Scott (Grad. Hist.) and Mike Shoemaker, (IV Hist.).

The summer program, sponsored by the World University Service, has been divided into three sections. The initial five weeks will be devoted to one of five study tours to different sectors of Europe - Germany, Greece, Yugoslavia, USSR, and Spain and Portugal. The tour to be taken is left to the discretion of individual students.

Following the tours, students from universities across the world will convene in Tutzing, Germany, for a three-week seminar. Formal discussion will centre around the theme "Freedom and the University."

The concluding two weeks of the summer trip will allow students to devote time to projects of personal interest. They are expected to return around Sept. 12.

Applicants were asked by the selection committee to offer their approach to the subject to be discussed during the summer seminar.

Speaking to a Varsity reporter last night, Margaret Penman said she approaches the question of "Freedom and the University" from three perspectives - the individual, the social and the political. On the level of the individual, she said, one must rely on liberty of conscience informed by reason. The university, she continued, can do little from a political standpoint, but it must not forget that it is the training ground for future leaders. The university must not teach what to think: its role is to show how to think.

Such organizations as WUS, can only serve to begin world-wide understanding between future leaders, but the beginning is the most important, she said.

Mike Shoemaker, SAC president and one of the three students to represent Toronto, was asked by the selection committee to outline his views on student government within the university. Shoemaker told a Varsity reporter he favoured strong government by the student body.

Student government is essential, he said, if we are to develop a mature and self-respecting student body. At the same time, he emphasized the fact that freedom and responsibility within the university is a two-edged sword. "Nobody can have respect for the person who refuses to realize the responsibility inherent in his freedom."

Shoemaker has elected to join the study tour going to Russia. Ian Scott was not available for comment.

Manitoba Meds' Phony Lovelies Television Hoax

Winnipeg (Special) - Television viewers here thought they saw six campus queens from the University of Manitoba last Friday night, on "Spotlight," a news program. But early this week G. Brown-Wilkinson, producer of the show, admitted he'd been hoaxed. Six nursing students had subbed for the queens.

The six queens were to be feature attractions at an engineering dance after his show, Brown-Wilkinson said. "Someone purporting to be an engineering student" phoned him and made the arrangements, he said.

The engineers heard of the anonymous phone call, and warned their queens to shy away from anyone calling for them. Manitoba medsmen, who started the stunt in order to kidnap the real queens, were disappointed but undaunted, and went ahead with the program. They never got their girls.

Nominations for election to one of the fifteen Hart House Committees will be accepted in the Undergraduate Office of Hart House from Monday, February 20th to Friday, February 24th, said John Becker, Undergraduate Secretary. The elections will be held on Wednesday, March 7th.

Campaign posters from Hart House Committee election in years past are now hanging in the House. The posters will hang until the end of nominations, when they will be replaced by the posters of this year's candidates.

The various activities and clubs of Hart House are supervised and run by five major committees (House, Library, Music, Art and Debates), and ten club committees (Camera, Glee, Squash Racquets, Chess, Archery, Amateur Radio, Revolver, Table Tennis, Bridge and the Exploration Society and Caledon Hills Outing Club).

All undergraduate members of the House may vote for the members of the five major committees, but only the members of the club may vote for their committees.

To protect members of the House from being nominated without their consent, the candidate must sign his own nomination form and return it to the Undergraduate Office in person.

"The candidate must be an undergraduate member of Hart House," said Becker. "Undergraduates in their graduating year may also run, however, if they are proceeding into the School of Law, the School of Social Work, the Ontario College of Education or the School of Graduate Studies."

hope that the day of its death would come soon.

"We venture to urge upon the new Bishop the inexpediency of supporting an institution that has such a questionable record as the Western University, he continued.

"The simple fact of the matter seems to be that the late Bishop of Huron, who was the founder of the University, and apparently its only enthusiastic supporter, had not so much the educational interest of Western at heart as his own financial interest."

The editorial pointed out that the Bishop was the principal stockholder in the Hellmuth Boy's College and that the College had not been doing well financially. The Bishop, The Varsity claimed, persuaded other shareholders to sell out to him at a loss and then sold his Hellmuth property to the new university—at a certain price.

"He himself presented the University with a large portion of the purchase money - we believe, $10,000. This was, of course, very generous, but when we remember that the value placed on the Hellmuth college property by the Bishop was $87,000 while its actual value is said to be very little more than one half of this, it will be readily seen that his conduct was not altogether disingenuous."

The editorial concluded urging the new Bishop to act promptly to separate Huron College from the Western University.

UC's Politicians Begin Campaign Voting Tuesday

UC men and women go to the polls next Tuesday to elect SAC and EAC representatives.

Nominations from the Women's Undergraduate Association were accepted yesterday at an open meeting. Accepting nominations for External Affairs Committee were the following: Jane Doyle, Liz Van Every, Marnie Littlejohn and Judy Perry.

Elaine Sossin and Mary Vickers have been nominated for the post of Students' Administrative Council Rep.

In male politics, Dave Green-span was acclaimed EAC Representative. Mort Greenglass and Steve Freedhoff opposed each other for the SAC seat.

President Cody cancels an indiscreet CCF meeting. The topic originally scheduled for the meeting was "Hepburn must go." The address was to be given by Charles Millard, Ontario CCF president.

The perennial rivalry between Toronto and Western universities had its origin over 70 years ago, when the University of Western Ontario was founded.

The Varsity, indignant at the intrusion of this new university into the academic world, charged the institution's founders with everything from graft to just plain pignheadedness.

But Western survived. It was in 1883 that a Varsity editorial first spoke out:

"We have found ourselves wondering recently if the silence that seems to have prevailed upon the press about the Western University is but the forerunner of its speedy extinction."

Referring to "the semi-defunct institution" the Editor said, "we have only heard one opinion and one hope . . . the opinion that the Institution could not long survive a separation from its foster father, the late Bishop of Huron, and the Report Claims Society Must Act Now, Avoid "New Plateau" Crises

Above are pictured some of the many prizes which will be distributed to the winners of The Varsity's literary contest. Cash and book prizes will go to the first and second winners in each category. First prize winners will receive a copy of Torontonensis, the U of T's year book. The Literary Issue will be published tomorrow.

—VSP by Ed. Staworzynski

Acute needs in staff and finances looming in the expected registration wave of the 1960's are defined and faced by President Sidney Smith in his report to the University Governors and Senate for the academic year 1954-5.

"Able men and women are not going to compete for the privilege of slaving over huge, crowded classes, reading mounds of essays, and marking bushels of examinations."

President Smith appealed to society to face the problems inherent in the rapid growth of student numbers now, before it is too late.

"Grants of money in 1960 — however generous — will not solve the problem of the new plateau."

The "new plateau" is that foreseen by statisticians when there will be an estimated 135,000 Canadian students, compared with the present 65,000.

In his appeal for present action, the president quotes the American Council of Education: "Classrooms, laboratories, and dormitories are not built overnight, particularly when construction must be preceded by fund-raising."

"We must have both capital funds and greater income," the report says. "I pray that society will recognize and fulfill these needs."

The president sees three main sources of income for universities — governments, individuals and industry — and comments on each one.

Governments: "Provincial governments will be requested to increase their grants. But universities are also national institutions . . . many Canadian universities have divisions of singular importance to the nation."

. . . the federal grants have not been an excuse for reducing provincial grants. It is estimated that all Canadian universities are receiving in the form of provincial grants (excluding specific research grants) approximately $28,000,000 during the current year. The Federal Aid that is distributed during the same period is about $7,000,000. Is the national interest in higher education adequately represented by $7,000,000 — a ratio of 1 to 4?"

Individuals: "Their lives have been made finer and their incomes have been increased by reason of the opportunities afforded them by their Almae Matres. The tuition fees that they paid were less than half the cost of their education."

Science Courses Overloaded Only Outstanding Can Survive

Are science departments permitting only a few outstanding students to survive, by overloading the science course? This question was raised by Dr. Smith, in his annual report, commenting on the Faculty of Arts.

"It is to be regretted that the science departments are not anxious to correct this unhappy condition themselves," said Dr. Smith. He quoted Dean Woodside's figures to show that in the 16 years preceeding 1952, the percentage of science students in honour arts courses had shrunk by one third.

"I commented on this situation in my Report for 1953-54, and I cited as an example that 99 students entered Mathematics, Physics and Chemistry in 1950, but only 25 graduated in 1954," said Dr. Smith.

Commenting critically on the straining for perfection at the undergraduate level, Dr. Smith remarked that there is a perilous need throughout the country for competent, as well as illustrious, scientists.

"Certainly, if the present trend continues, there will be a desperate shortage of Science teachers in the schools . . . and the ultimate results . . . for all the many areas in society in which science is important might be disastrous," said Dr. Smith. He was quoting Dean Woodside's report on the Faculty of Arts.

There is no doubt that the new General course is an improvement over the old Pass Course, said Dr. Smith, commenting on another aspect of the Faculty of Arts. However, it has provoked certain problems.

"It does appear that the General Course is attracting to its second year many students who in their first year were enrolled in honour courses," he said. He pointed out that in 1953-54 the first-year class in Arts was roughly half in honour courses and half in the General course; the same class, in second year in 1954-55, was divided three fifths in the General Course and two-fifths in honour courses.

"Why do so many students transfer to the General Course at the end of the first year of an honour course?" queried Dr. Smith. "This question deserves further consideration," he commented.

Referring to the pressure on universities to produce more engineers and scientists, Dr. Smith emphasized the importance of the humanities.

"The traditional primacy of the humanities in the Faculty of Arts, and of the Faculty of Arts in the University, must never be sacrificed in this institution," Dr. Smith concluded.

Blood Still To Flow, Campaign Extended

The Red Cross Blood Drive will continue another week. Many students made appointments and could not be handled, so the committee decided to extend the campaign.

Chairman Josephine Flaherty, (IV Nursing) said last night that the drive was only 207 donations short of its objective of 1,500 donors with 1,297 students — 11% of the enrollment — giving blood.

Students who wish to give blood this week can do so at the Red Cross Clinic, located in the old Sick Children's Hospital, 67 College Street.

In the race for the trophy, the Skule Cannon, Nursing leads with 67 percent of its enrollment contributing Knox College is second with 28 donors for a percentage of 43. Only 36 donors have come from the Faculty of Medicine, which boasts an enrolment of 829.

Luther Deplored In Wed. Debate Rowe Visits HH

"This House deplores Martin Luther" is the question for this Wednesday's Hart House debate.

The Rev. John G. Rowe, chaplain to Hart House, 1953-55, and now at Huron College, London, will be the Honorary Visitor.

John Brownlie, (III Trinity), commented for the ayes, "Martin Luther was a satisfactory writer of hymns, a satisfactory breeder of German nationalism, and the product of the printing press."

A speaker for the noes, John Brewin, (II Trinity), said, "The dilemma of denominationalism, the problem of the broken body of Christ, must be reviewed. While we feel that Christians must work constantly for unity, union is not the answer. In this we stand with Luther, we cannot and will not recant."

Bruce Lister, (II Trinity) for the ayes, and Michael Callaghan, (I Law) for the noes, will be the other two speakers on the paper. George Kell, S.G.S., will be the speaker.

U.S. Tour

Batten, Reiter Go Tonite Debate Through Midwest

Moishe Reiter (III UC), and Clyde Batten (III UC), leave tonight on the most ambitious tour undertaken by U of T debaters since 1954.

They will represent Varsity on three U.S. campuses - Wayne University, Detroit, University of Chicago, and Wisconsin University in Madison, - and at Assumption College, Windsor.

The tour, sponsored by the University of Toronto Debating Union, is part of a program of competition with Osogode Hall, McGill and the American colleges.

Batten and Reiter both expressed confidence they could uphold Toronto's successful record in international argument. Last debaters to cross the border were Dave Gauthier and Bill Morris who visited three Atlantic seaboard colleges in 1954.

Topics for debate on the six-day tour are: that Canada is unnecessary (U of T negative); that co-education should be abolished (affirmative); and that the free world is failing to meet the challenge of communism.

Both speakers paid tribute to Bill West, UTDU president. "We are able to make the tour, one of the best ever offered U of T students, largely because of Bill West's efficiency and initiative," Reiter said.

Batten praised West's "splendid job" in reviving the nearly defunct UTDU.

Each Varsity representative had a wealth of argument on every topic. "If it weren't for Canada," said Reiter, "the sun would set on the Union Jack and Canada would have to get a national flag."

Batten pointed out that Uncle Tom's Cabin would never have existed without Canada and Reiter added that Sitting Bull would have had nowhere to go after defeating General Custer.

Polly Adler (notorious madame of Saskatchewan, Sarah Binks," is the only woman ever to have contributed significantly to popular education without taking from it, according to Reiter.

Batten cited "the sweet singer of Saskatchewan, Sarah Binks," as the one person to demonstrate that women can benefit from higher education.

Both speakers felt the free world has not only failed to meet the challenge of communism but "does not even know what it is."

The first topic will be repeated at Windsor and Chicago.

Clyde Batten, 23, is a veteran of three years debating at U of T, including a trip to the Pittsburgh Cross-Examination in 1953, and is secretary of the Hart House debates committee for the current year. A past editor of The Varsity, he majors in philosophy, is married and a father.

Literary Issue

The Varsity Literary Issue will be published tomorrow. The issue will have eight pages and will be distributed at the same time as usual.

There will be cash and book prizes for the first and second winners in each category. The SAC has donated $7.00 for each first prize and $3.00 for each second.

A total of 26 books, to be divided among the classes, has been donated by Toronto publishing firms. The University of Toronto Press, Dent's, the University of Toronto Bookstore, Ryerson Press and the Oxford University Press each gave five books and Macmillan's one.

In addition, each first prize winner will receive a copy of Torontonensis, the U of T's year-book.

Need Money

Industry: "The universities of Canada received from industry in 1951, nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent of their taxable income."

"At the present time business has not awakened to its responsibilities for higher education, but there are many indications that it will."

The president also pointed out some difficulties inherent in the teaching profession - difficulties, as the report says, that will be increased by the impending "crisis of numbers."

"The professor does not share the popular attitude towards the eight-hour day or the five-day week; he does not bargain for holidays; he will rather scheme to escape from extraneous matters and spend time among his books or in his laboratory or with his students."

"It is a paradox of the teaching profession that there can be more real communication between professor and student if there are not too many classes... Teaching loads must be seriously lessened if we hope to attract and retain a good staff."

Although he says he would like to end his report on a note of optimism, President Smith concludes that "the universities have not really shared in Canada's prosperity."

Foresters Hold Land Use Meet

The question of land use will be discussed Tuesday night at a joint meeting of the Forestry Club and the Canadian Institute of Forestry, to be held at 7:45 p.m. in the library of the Forestry building.

"Should hunters and anglers rule our forest lands?" "Is recreation the most important use of our forests, or are forestry and wildlife to be given a chance?" were questions posed by Jorden Johnson, President of the Foresters Club in announcing the event.

Johnson said that this problem - whether forestry and recreation can go hand in hand - will be one of the subjects dealt with in the panel discussion on "The Multiple Use of Lands."

The meeting is open to all.

ICE BLUES INCREASE LEAGUE LEAD

Blues On Top, Dump Laval 6-3 Cossar, Anderson, Akitt Sparkle

By JOHN WILSON

Varsity's versatile first-line centre Don Cossar made himself a thorn in the opposition's side Friday night in the Arena, fired two goals and set up two more, while pacing the Blues to a 6-3 victory over visiting Laval.

Friday's outcome was never in doubt from the opening whistle. The Blues took command of the situation with two quick goals in the first five minutes, then added two more, minutes after Laval had tied it up midway through the frame.

Cossar picked up a loose puck right under Laval netminder Raymond Lavoie's nose to make it 3-2 with minutes left in the opening stanza, then Sandy Morrison bounced one off Lavoie's skate from the corner, the only cheap goal of the night. Brian Anderson and Ken Linseman had made it 2-0 in the early minutes of the period. Cossar got another in the first minutes of the second frame after Red Stephen had just missed on a solo effort from right wing, and then passed to John Akitt for the final Blue counter at the seven-minute mark.

Pierre Raymond slapped in two goals for Laval, one when left uncovered at point-blank range in front of the Blue net, and Roger Lagace got the other from a goalmouth scramble.

Cossar's play highlighted the fastest game seen this season on Varsity ice. His best effort of the evening came midway in the second period, resulting in Akitt's goal. With only one man back Cossar and Akitt began a four-man rush for the Blues with the shift centre doing the work. Coasting in from left wing, he waited for Jo Bouchard to make his move, then flipped a neat pass to Akitt who had Lavoie at his mercy.

As a unit the second line turned in the best two-way performance of the night. Centre Anderson picked up one goal with winger Morrison getting another. John MacDonald set up both counters and was robbed at least half a dozen times himself while sitting on Lavoie's front doorstep.

The third line gave evidence that it is infinitely better than last year's trio, contributing greatly to the over-all balance of the Blues.

Little Al Fleming turned in another steady night in the Blue net, far outshining his disconcerted opponent at the other end of the rink. There was a time when Lavoie was the best goaltender in the league but those days disappeared after McGill shellacked the Frenchmen 12-4.

This weekend will be the toughest the Blues have had to face this season. In addition to being one of those doubleheader affairs, they'll meet the revamped McGill squad on Friday night, then train for Quebec City where a desperate Laval will be waiting. The Rouge et Or face virtual elimination if they don't win this one, while McGill are in the same boat. The Blues can wrap it up with two victories, and almost do the same by beating only Laval. Two losses will postpone the issue yet another week.

Varsity Shellacs Redmen 91-60 Madden, Vaichulis High Scorers

By HOWIE MANDELL

Which team is worse, Queen's or McGill? After witnessing Saturday evening's 91-60 shellacking of the Redmen by the University of Toronto basketball Blues, a great deal of doubt has arisen in my mind.

The Blues sparked by Leo Madden's 20 point performance played one of their better games of the year, but they didn't have to be good, McGill were that bad. Madden was hot all evening, sinking most of his shots from far out. Al Vaichulis, hooped 13 points. All of the redheads' scores came in the second half. John Sheppard got 12, 11 in the first period and Pete Potter and Ruby Richman chimed in with ten apiece.

The Blues started slowly, but gained momentum as they went along to build up a quarter time score of 19-2. The half ended with Toronto holding a commanding 43-25 lead. The Varsity crew kept adding to their total early in the second half and built up an insurmountable 65-29 margin. Then they suddenly fell asleep as the Redmen, momentarily finding the range, pumped in 18 straight points without a Blue reply to make the score 65-47. The red and white drive then petered out.

The win was the Blues' third in a row, their longest winning streak of the season. If they get by St. Peter's at Hart House on Wednesday, they could well end the season on a seven game winning streak because after meeting the Yankee club, they play McMaster, Queens and McGill whom they've previously defeated.

McGill, Queen's Capture Titles In Ski, Boxing

Mont Gabriel, Que., Feb. 18.—Queen's University walked off with six first in the Intercollegiate Skiing Championships held here on Saturday, but still finished seven points behind McGill who retained the crown.

Varsity was third, 30 points behind the Redmen, and Laval, University of Montreal and Ryerson finished fourth, fifth and last respectively.

In the cross-country, Dave McIntyre of Varsity nailed down fourth spot, while John Hetherington was seventh. McIntyre was also fourth in the alpine, combined with Toronto's Don Esson finishing ninth.

Kingston, Ont., Feb. 18.—Queen's University capped the Intercollegiate Boxing crown here Saturday, chalking up 22 points. University of Toronto was second, followed by OAC and McGill.

There were two knockouts and one TKO. Jack Abraham of Queen's knocked out B. Cairns of Varsity to capture the heavyweight title, while Mike Woolgar of McGill knocked out Jim McCulloch of Queen's in the 165 lb. class.

R. Reilly, in the 135 lb. class, and Bill Sidnev, in the 165 lb. class, were the only Varsity entries able to gain victory. Sidney TKO'd Dave Harshaw of Queen's in the third round of their bout.

Irish, Sr. U.C. Playoff Chances

The Intramural Hockey playoffs begin next Monday with the prospects of another Sr. UC-St. Mike's A final in the offing. There is little to choose between the two teams as each has claimed a victory over the other by identical scores of 1-0. As in previous years, the first place finishing St. Mike's team has concentrated on defence, but their offence is likely to bog down at the oddest moments. St. UC, on the other hand, is a team that can go both ways without too much trouble, their only weak point at the moment seems to be in the nets. Current opinion is that if UC meets St. Mike's in the final, they will defeat the Irish for the second year in a row, the series going the full three games. A dark horse at the moment is Sr. Meds. Generally conceded little chance to make the finals themselves, this team has the spirit and drive which might cause a few upsets.

Other teams rated high are Jr. SPS, although somewhat erratic, and Trinity A's with their splendid defensive and deadly, fast breaking offence. Jr. Vic is another good team, but their 3-2-3 record doesn't seem to be too impressive. Undefeated SPS-4 should meet their first real test when they meet the revitalized St. Mike's C team. Dent's A's and SPS-5 remain as the unknown quantity in this year's playoff grind.

Anderson Attacking

Varsity's Brian Anderson is seen during one of his many raids on the Laval goal. Although well covered on this play, the starry centre slipped the puck around the out-stretched leg of goalie Lavoie for the Blues' first goal.

good cause for concern

The report of the President, released this morning, has underlined again the crisis that is now facing the universities.

The Canadian Universities are facing the biggest influx of students in their history. They are having to cope with an acute shortage of qualified staff. They are facing the problem of maintaining the integrity of the university, and of the core of humanities about which university training has always been centered, in the face of mass changes of popular opinion and commercial developments that are inimical to this spirit.

The provincial government has been deaf to the pleas of the President for increased aid to the University. If this university is to continue to fulfil a vital role in our society, it must have the funds both to bring existing facilities up to a reasonable level, and to provide for the expansion that is inevitable over the next few years.

And universities, as President Smith remarked, are also national institutions, and as such they have a legitimate claim to the support of the national government. They are not now receiving this support.

There must be an immediate realization on the part of government leaders on all levels of the pressing needs of higher education in this country — needs, that, if not met, will spell out the failure of our nation and our society.

For unless adequate provision, in terms of both finances and understanding attention, is made to meet these needs, Canada will find herself with inadequate and second rate universities.

President Smith — and the others who share his concern with higher education — have good cause to be alarmed.

well done, mr. west

Last year, inter-university debating on this campus was practically defunct. Eight students tried out to represent Toronto in Intercollegiate Debates. The annual week-long debating tour of American colleges was cancelled.

Tonight, two fourth-year University College students are leaving for a six-day debating tour of Mid-Western American universities. This past weekend, two other Toronto debaters went to Montreal for a seven-university competition, sponsored by the McGill Winter Carnival. Thirty men came to the University of Toronto Debating Union's trials for Intercollegiate Debates, last November, the largest number in five or six years.

Debating disciplines the mind, and is an important means of communication of ideas. Debating is one of our few links with the outside public, and with other universities. At some campuses, such as Oxford, debating is the most important extracurricular activity; more important, even, than football at Toronto. A successful debater at the Oxford Debating Union has a good chance of a seat in the House of Commons.

We must congratulate Bill West, and the UTDU of which he is chairman, for the progress made this year. Most of it is due to West's work and his suggestions to the SAC.

Debating here has yet to assume the importance we feel it ought to have. This year, after several years of decline, it has moved in the right direction.

OUR READERS WRITE:

We Just Can't Win

Editor, TheVarsity:

Here's to you! For some time, debates, meetings, and letters to the editor have criticized you for many of your articles. You are even criticized for a single issue devoted to marriage. Obviously this issue resembled much work by your staff and was an informative account of obvious interest to university students. Evidence the present "mass engagement mania" on the campus.

I wonder why these self-appointed critics, who so delight in singling out negative instances, don't do something constructive for a change? They could devote their own time and effort to the paper. It is hard to reach perfection in a newspaper when your main concern here is after all, the pursuit of your education.

Let that "died in the wool 17th century puritan" and his cohorts either wear blinders or publish their own Utopian version for the "pure in mind". Last year's complaints concerned undue emphasis on NFCUS, EAC, AMD, SHARE, etc.

Face it — you can't win!

Editor, The Varsity:

Reading Wednesday's (Feb. 1) Varsity was a unique experience for me. I saw the workings of a juvenile mind revealed in a letter which slandered me and at the same time made protestations of friendship. Who is this doddering young fool who attacks maliciously and then has the presumption to sign his letter "Upholder of the Right"?

I think that this letter, to which I have not been able to reply to because I have been out of town, is something that we should all take note of. If, as I suspect, it was written by a mentally deranged person, then it is obvious that our campus is being roamed by a sanitarium fugitive. I wish the authorities good luck in apprehending this person rapidly, for one who will write such letters is dangerous.

But if, on the other hand, the letter was written by a ruthless right-wing pseudo-fascist, then we had all take cognizance of the fact.

While a free press exists, and freedom-loving individuals can negate invective hurled at them by person hiding behind slogans and pseudonyms, then democracy in Canada need never fear.

Leacock Mourns Mates Caught By The Varsity

This article was written by STEPHEN LEACOCK, Canada's greatest humourist, and a former staffer on The Varsity. Leacock wrote of his personal reminiscences of "College Journalism" for The Fiftieth Anniversary Issue of The Varsity, which was published in 1931.

The occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of The Varsity calls back to me vividly my own connection with this great organ of thought and with College Journalism at large. I have always been one of those who have seen in College Journalism one of the best and most inspiring things in college life.

In every good circus the side-shows excel in interest the attractions of the main tent. So it is with college. College journalism, amateur acting, college dances and college sports are more interesting — I say it fearlessly of contradiction — than many of the college lectures.

But of these activities, one at least, college journalism, is more useful, if rightly undertaken, than half a dozen lecture courses.

But having said that much of the advantages of being occupied with a college magazine, let me also sound a warning as to its potential dangers. So absorbing a pursuit must not be allowed to dominate the mind in an exclusive fashion. If it does so, serious consequences may ensue.

It is always well to point a moral by introducing actual individual cases as terrible examples. It supplies what is called in the newer language of newspapers and syndicates, the "personal touch."

Without this all writing sinks into the class of high-brow moralizing. It was my good fortune to be associated with college newspapers from my school-days up. In my last year at the University of Toronto, I was appointed to be one of the Editors of the literary weekly then called The Varsity. I realized in time the danger involved in such flattering and fascinating work. I had the good sense to resign before the year was half through.

But others, my associates, were not so shrewd. It is no exaggeration to say that college journalism turned aside and warped their careers from what they might have been.

Among my colleagues was a boy called G. Howard Ferguson, a bright, innocent young fellow from Kempville, Ontario. Up to that time he had kept his mind keen to a razor edge with the study of economics and philosophy. He read easily. I have often seen him over Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, to others a difficult book, roaring with laughter.

Unconscious of what we were doing, we gave to Howard Ferguson the position of "manager." It was a fatal mistake. From that time on the boy seemed to change; a restless activity took hold of him; he attended meetings, made speeches, and was heard to speak of German philosophy as "bunk."

It was an open secret that Howard Ferguson's name had been mentioned for a lectureship in Comparative Etymology a position that he might have held till today. But he had grown too restless. After a feverish year or so at law, he sank into the Ontario legislature. The rest everybody knows. (He became a prominent Ontario politician in the Province.)

But I have always maintained that Howard Ferguson had real ability.

I have that picture on the wall of my study — Howard Ferguson, Charles Mitchell and the rest. Among them stood "Doc" McLay, the present head of the Arts Faculty of McMaster University; he really could have succeeded. The fellow had a genuine gift.

There was, I recollect, a young freshman named William Lyon Mackenzie King who sent us in a poem. The boy's name somehow has stuck in my mind all these years. Like sent us in a poem called Why I Hate Winter or The Futility of Human Greatness.

I remember that Doc McLay said it was one of the worst we had received that week. We sent it back to King with a smart rebuke. Perhaps we were wrong. Without our rebuke King might be an established poet today.

There! I have not overlaboured the point of an allegorical talk. What I mean in plain prose is that The Varsity has always gathered around its editorial board all the brightest minds in the college — in fact, men like my father and myself. Floreat.

Angelic Message

By MARGARET NODDER

What happens to the idealist living in a world of ideologists is the theme of Charles Israel's How Many Angels (Macmillan; pp. 330; $2.75). It makes good light reading, apart from the author's preoccupation with its "message." I do not mean to suggest that message is a bad thing in a novel, but I would quarrel with this particular author's method of communication. The hero is pursued the length and breadth of the story by a dirty little man in a ripped tweed overcoat who professes to be a scientist keeping his eye on an interesting specimen, (the hero). Every time he turns up, he threatens to sell the hero to his enemies when the time is ripe. When this time comes, he decides he has been experimenting with a fool, but that "the fools will inherit the earth."

More message is brought by a quite insane old lady who, for no apparent reason, wanders across the hero's path looking for her shroud (she claims to have been dead for three days). From her we learn that the hero is to be compared with Job, whom the Lord has afflicted sorely. Our hero must not worry, however, "just trust in the Lord and be patient..." As you can see, this is not too subtle.

The book is well structured, starting with Dr. Rindl, his wife and daughter, and then splitting into three parallel stories when the family group breaks up. Rindl is a Sudetan German doctor, anti-Nazi, during the war, but whom the Communists force out of his home in Czechoslovakia into a concentration camp in Germany. His character comes out well: the quiet, peace-loving man who should be allowed to live his own life, but who is thrust, unwillingly, into an era in history that cannot tolerate the gentle idealist.

Although the dialogue is skillfully handled, the style is generally plodding and too even to arouse much emotion in the reader. This defect explains why the plot never quite reaches the climax it promises. The author does, however, manage to create an atmosphere of futility, and the frustration that comes from beating your head against a bureaucracy.

This puts a rather bad light on what is actually a competent first novel. It is entertaining, if we don't worry about the "message," and although the theme seems a trite one, it is nevertheless given an original treatment.

The Ring & The Books

By DAVID DUNSMUIR

Someone or other says somewhere that it's impossible for one man to write more than one epic, as the time taken to decide on a fitting topic will only leave enough out of a lifetime to write on that topic. In The Return Of The King, (George Allen & Unwin; $4.75), J. R. R. Tolkien has done enough work for several generations — as well as writing an "heroic romance" of epic sweep and in epic language, he has created his own mythology to carry it.

Prof. Tolkien (of Merton College, Oxford) has drawn upon his extensive knowledge of Middle English and related literature to produce a work with shades of Spenser and Ariosto. His book is the last of a trilogy describing in fantastic detail the war that ends "the Third Age of Middle-earth." Ores, trolls, ents, and sundry other folk are involved, but the outcome of the earth-shaking struggle really depends on a solitary figure with a fearsome quest and of indomitable will.

Generically, this figure and all others of his kind are Prof. Tolkien's own invention — queer little creatures called "Hobbits," thrust into the conflict against their will. It is hard to estimate the success of Frodo (our hero) and his ilk, who still have many of the now out-of-place characteristics of the child's fairy-tale from which they grew. In their native Hobbiton especially, there is something much too bourgeois about them for the author's purpose — their greatest delights are parties, enormous feasts, long naps, and similar placid recreation.

Once Frodo sets out on his Frodossey towards the Dark Tower of Barad-dur, however, clutching the One Ring that corrupts and yet gives absolute power, the work gains a misty purposefulness that fits its sombre theme. Frodo becomes a symbol among symbols, and every reader is welcome to read his own subconscious into the Halfing's amazing adventures and frightful perils.

No summary of these adventures could do Prof. Tolkien justice, for every incident depends upon those around it, producing a remarkably coherent picture of spiritual and physical trials. Frodo's journey is described in about two-thirds of the book, the rest being devoted to the doings of his companions and antagonists — Aragorn (the heir of the ancient Kings of the West), Gandalf the Gray, Treebeard the Ent, the Nazgul, and perhaps too many others. And throughout the telling of the tale can be heard the chiming of surely the strangest set of names ever to be brought between two covers.

Needless to say, one can have too much of this sort of thing. In Middle-earth every gesture must be a grand gesture, and every speech echo the Idyls Of The King. The reader may become exasperated with this Pre-Raphaelite world of "thee's" and "behold's," where women are few and frigid and everything is either gold or dross. Also, the plot is undoubtedly a tour de force — but I was very glad of a synopsis (among the appendices) linking up the various events.

The same appendices have some fascinating sidelights into the mental pursuits of a scholar of comparative leisure; histories, family trees, and even rhymic alphabets are all there. They may be saved for our spare moments — by the end of The Return Of The King we require no immediate proof of Prof. Tolkien's scholarship, or his unique and stimulating imagination.

Going Bump In The Night

By MURRAY MORTON

Eitrand Russell's second book of short stories is decisive evidence of the high place he deserves in literature as well as in philosophy. In Nightmares of Eminent Persons (Bodley Head; 122s) we are treated to a delightful serving of satire ranging from the sardonic to the playful teasing. Foibles of mankind are exposed in a macabre twilight, out of which Russell hopes the stories will lead, proving to be "signposts to sanity."

Half of the book is comprised of nightmares experienced by various distinguished figures, real or imaginary. Mr. Eisenhower, President McCarthy divide the world with Malenkov; or Dean Acheson watches right-wing President Bismarck A. "We will fight for freedom, though it involve the imprisonment of nine-tenths of our population!" McSaft lead the United States to defeat in a war with Russia. In other dreams an existentialist negates existence and a mid-physician who refuses to use nega-tion meets Pure Nothing. Possibly the most comical is the psychoanalyst's nightmare in which Hamlet (who, along with Lear, Othello, and other maladjusted Shakespearean characters, has been reintegrated into society) decides, "To Hell with adjustment," and resigns from the Rotary Club or Lumbo. Altogether, ten delightfully malevolent nightmares torment ten very troubled dreamers.

The force with which Russell exposes some of the foibles of men is slightly weakened because his personal prejudices intrude but these add gusto to the stories and he is never righteously indignant. Many of his remarks are uttered with subtle irony, although not dazzlingly brilliant. Nightmares sparkles with the light of a great mind and the reader may hear the laughter of the gods behind the scenes in the book, scenes upon, fortably close to these in the world today.

Sex For Non-Seculars

By ANNE CARNWATH

workers will begin at part one, skip part two, and go on to part three.

Dr. Cole is careful in his treatment of the interpretation of sex in Christianity to show that the ascetic dualistic view which chastises the flesh and lives only in anticipation of a perfect world to come is not in the spirit of living Christianity.

The true attitude of Christianity to sex, Dr. Cole maintains, is that the body is the temple of God, and human beings are capable of making the word and spirit of God become flesh and dwell in them in their interpersonal relations.

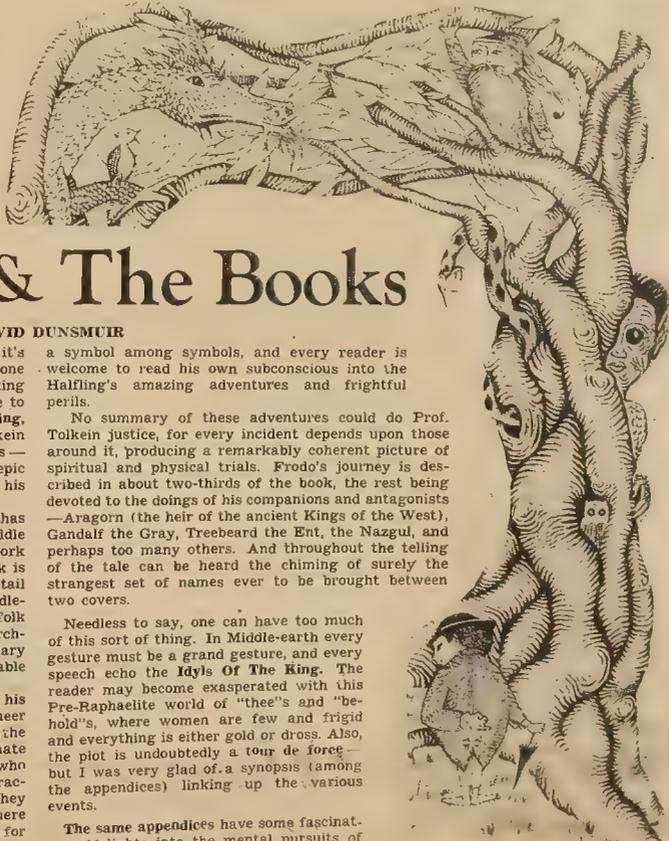

The author also distinguishes between the Catholic position with regard to sex — its pleasures are only to be indulged in for the purposes of procreation — and the Protestant one, which sees sex as a pleasurable part of a total relationship between two individuals in which an expression of mutual love and respect may be the only end in view.

In the section on analysis, Dr. Cole presents Freud's position with the obvious reservation:

Freud's "illusion" is a real experience and one which the Christian context can account for. Also he emphasizes the increasing interest of psychoanalysts in cultural problems, counterbalancing the enlightened clergyman's recent interest in the causes and effects of sexual behavior and misbehavior in relation to their field.

This book attempts to cover such a vast amount of ground, and there are so many controversial issues raised, that it is hard to know where to begin to criticize it. Dr. Cole himself writes boldly, and in some instances naively, often merely expressing opinions and falling short of a legitimate scholarly assessment. I am particularly suspicious of statements such as: "Psychoanalysis itself rests upon underlying ontological assumptions. The metaphysical question cannot be avoided; the facts of life must always be related to the meaning of life."

On the positive side, Sex in Christianity and Psychoanalysis does advocate a reconstruction of the Christian attitude towards sex in the light of the findings of psychoanalysis. And as has been already mentioned, Dr. Cole presents these findings in a very intelligible fashion — I found his handling of theology less satisfying than his handling of psychoanalysis.

HOBBIT'S HABITAT

Panaceas And Plots

PAWNS IN THE GAME: William Guy Carr: 183 pp.; Gadsby-Leek Co.; $1.00
AN IDEA TO WIN THE WORLD: Peter Howard: 127 pp.; Arrowhead Books, Inc.; $1.00.

Reading these books has been like wearing someone else's glasses. You know they make you myopic but it's hard to tell how much.

The first purports to be an incisive and "truth-revealing" examination into the manner in which an "international conspiracy of Jewish money-lenders" has carefully planned and staged every revolution of the modern world. An attempt to synthesize the past 350 years might be welcome, but one wishes the view had a less astigmatic proponent than Mr. Carr. Not only does the book represent an immature use of the English language but also errs in fact.

It is hard to predict the response of our friends from Knox College when they learn Calvin was hired by the conspirators to engender strife among Christians and that his "name" is a corruption of Cohen. One's faith in the reliability of the author tends to be utterly destroyed when the reader finds an appendix listing 138 errata.

The second book, by Peter Howard (a prolific exponent of Moral Re-Armament) errs not on the side of fact but of interpretation. The story is of a play (written in rhyming couplets by two men working 21/2 hours a day for two weeks) taken on a tour of Asia and the Middle East by a group of MRA people.

It becomes apparent that whatever virtue the followers of this movement teach, humility is not one of them, for this man has written a 127-page book about the success of a play he co-authored. He implies that only those who are "unthinking fools, unwitting tools or Communists" will be less than wildly enthusiastic about the play and the book. At the risk of seeming to be one or all of these, it must be said that the book in question does not merit the literary attention of the movement.

Finnish Students Respected, Rich

What's it feel like to visit Europe? And what are students like over there? And how do their student associations stack up alongside our National Federation? In this article, JIM SIM, the leader of a group of ten U of T students who visited Finland last summer, tells some of the highlights of his journey, and gives us some comments on his impression of Finland. Sim, formerly at University College, is now in Vancouver, attending the University of British Columbia on a part-time basis.

The student exchange scheme, intended to create and further goodwill and understanding among foreign students — in this case between Finns and Canadians — was born in 1951. It was in that year that the late Warden Ignatieff of Hart House took a group of ten Varsity students to his native land, Finland.

In 1954, the visit was returned, and ten Finnish students came here for the summer. Many of you will know of or experienced one of their endeavours, the Sauna (Finnish steam bath) at Caledon Hills Farm.

In 1955, an invitation was received from the National Union of Students of Finland (the SYL, the Finnish counterpart of our NFCUS) for Toronto students to visit Finland again, and ten students were chosen. I was elected their group leader.

GOING TO EUROPE — VIA NFCUS?

On May 30, we sailed on the SS Waterman from Montreal for Rotterdam. The bookings for this trip had been made through the NFCUS Travel Service.

The ship fares NFCUS arranges on these "economical ships" are not worth it, as you can get much, much better accommodation on other ships for $9 or $10 more. However, we took the NFCUS ones as they were the only ones we could get at that time.

The Finnish students' association gives much greater savings on travel — as much as 50% on air fares. I saved exactly half the regular fare by booking my ticket from Paris to London through the Finnish Student Travel Department.

ON TO FINLAND

The entrance to Helsinki harbour through the islands, once used as fortresses, is a sight once seen, never to be forgotten. The granite islands stud the Gulf of Finland outside Helsinki, and through them, you can see the magnificent white, gleaming harbour, with the majestic White Church rising in the background.

It was in this setting that we were met by our hosts, the members of the National Union of Students of Finland — Suomen Yhoppilaskuntien Liitto (SYL — the Finnish NFCUS).

A TOUR OF THE COUNTRY

SYL had arranged the program for the group in such a way that we would derive the maximum benefit and insight into their country. There was a week of orientation in Helsinki during which time we had lectures on all phases of Finnish life, and had the opportunity of living in student residences, learning the processes of student government, and visiting industry.

Following this first week we were taken on a guided tour of Finland. The tour covered all parts of the country, from the eastern resort of Punkaharju, near the Russian border, to the beautiful Savonlinna, situated on the Saimaa.

We celebrated a Finnish National holiday, Midsummer's Night Festival, at Pallastunturi, 250 miles above the Arctic Circle. We did the traditional things — a full supper, a hot dry sauna, and a hike up a mountain, where we built a fire, and watched the unbelievable phenomenon of the midnight sun — a brilliant fireball which never sets.

WORKING IN FINLAND

The Finnish students' association had obtained jobs for us all for the next few weeks. They ranged from working in an electronics research laboratory to mining. My job was that of activities coordinator and English teacher at a summer resort. The employment lasted for about six weeks. We met together during this period, and the exchange of ideas with each other and with our Finnish hosts, was very valuable.

"SISU"

The people in Finland differ from the people of many other European countries I visited. I found most countries had a strong nationalist outlook, but that outlook in Finland has a different quality to it.

It is given an even greater meaning by a little word called sisu — national characteristic. One has only to look at what the Finns have overcome in their history to arrive at the full meaning of this word.

As far back as their history goes, one finds a war-dotted growth. It was only in 1917, that Finland won her independence from Russia. In World War II, Finland was an Axis power as a result of unusual circumstances, and was defeated.

The final blow to this small nation of four million people was to pay many millions in war reparations to Russia, a feat which she accomplished in under five years. Also as a result of the war, Finland lost considerable territory to Russia, and over 10% of her population had to be resettled.

How Finland accomplished all this is unbelievable, but it can be partially explained by the people's love for their country and this indefinable word sisu.

UNIVERSITY EDUCATION

University education differs from ours in Finland because the students very frequently take breaks in their studies to take jobs, either full or part-time. Since there are no annual examinations, they are able to do this, and write their exams when they feel ready for them.

The social standing and position of the 16,000 students is very high as they are perhaps the most collectively well-regarded group in the country.

STUDENT RESIDENCES

Most students live in residences owned and operated by the student body. Indeed, the students own a sizeable quantity of property, which they have either built themselves or received through bequests. Some of these residences are like palatial hotels, located in park-like communities.

It was in the idyllic location of the "Tech Town" of the Polytech students, on the gulf of Finland, that the last group of students laid the foundations for the Canadian Sauna, which is now completed and dedicated to the memory of the late Warden Ignatieff of Hart House.

Canadian Canoe

A bottle of champagne is being broken over the bow of a Canadian Canoe, given to the Finnish Students' Association by Hart House. The presentation took place during the summer of 1955, when ten Toronto students visited Finland. The Indian in the foreground is a Canadian student dressed up for the occasion.

Unflattering Comparison

NFCUS And Finnish Students

The following are comments written by Varsity Co-Editor Robert Brown on information supplied by Sim about the Finnish National Union of Students.

Without a doubt, the Finnish Students' Association puts Canada's National Federation to shame. The students in Finland appear better organized, better integrated, and their national union seems to serve real and definite functions, well-appreciated by the student body as a whole.

The same cannot be said of NFCUS.

The reason for the better functioning of the Finnish body can perhaps be found in the more closely knit pattern of student life in Finland. For one thing, Finland is a more united country than Canada. It has had to fight for its very life, and there is an intense pride of the Finns in their country which is lacking in this nation.

And for another, there is in almost all European countries a greater sense of unity among the student body than is presented here. The students regard themselves as students; they group together naturally, and there is a great deal of interest in their common welfare.

The same cannot be said here: students do not look upon themselves as part of a particular social class or occupational grouping, but retain the "coloring" of their homes, religions, etc.

The Finnish body, building on this interest, has been able to build up an efficient useful organization. Some of the features that NFCUS might do well to copy are:

—a constitutional provision that any university withdrawing after the national budget has been drawn up must still pay membership in the organization for that year.

—a requirement that delegates to the annual conference be provided with copies of all proposed business well in advance of the annual conference, and that the minutes of the conference be mailed out within two weeks of the end of the conference. (The NFCUS conference was in October; the complete minutes have yet to be received at this university.)

—some provision for continuity by electing some executive members for a period of two years, thus preventing a complete change over in personnel every year.

It is interesting to note that the voting powers at the annual conference in Finland are on a strict student population basis; this makes the organization more representative of the students as a whole.

In NFCUS, each university, whatever its size, has just one vote. However, it must be realized that many of the defects of NFCUS which become apparent when it is compared to other student bodies are inherent in the nature of our country, and are not the fault of the organization itself.

In other words, NFCUS is just what Canadian students deserve.

No Buildings Built Last Year But We Still Need 'Em--Smith

In his 1953-54 report, the president of the University of Toronto listed seven buildings which, he stated, were "urgently needed" on the campus.

None of them has been built. This year President Smith has repeated in his report, the same list, in the same order of priority. In addition he pointed out, once again, that this list is related only to present needs. "To carry its proper share of educating the youth of the sixties the University will require increased facilities. A survey of the use of lecture rooms and laboratories is now under way. The desirability of erecting a central building designed solely for lectures and seminars should be seriously considered. No longer can the University afford to erect self-contained units with office space, lecture and seminar rooms, auditoria, cafeteria, etc," said the President.

He added that an outline of future needs is under way and that millions of dollars would be required for capital construction. First on the list of new buildings required, Dr. Smith placed a music building. He prophesied it would be impossible to retain a first-rate staff unless there is an immediate prospect of improved accommodation.

The President urged the legal profession to give its financial support to a new law building. He said there was a great need for increased space, with increased enrolment in the School of Law.

Referring to the need for an architecture building, the President repeated his statement that "there are nearly five times as many architecture students as there were in 1925, but the facilities have remained the same except for some additional drafting space."

Zoology, claimed Dr. Smith, was the only natural science department which had not been provided with better working conditions since the Biology Building was erected 71 years ago.

The President again pleaded for a home for "the departments (of the Faculty of Arts) that are now precariously accommodated in old houses and odd corners of other University buildings." As well as the building for these scattered departments, President Smith listed a residence for nurses and a new structure to replace the temporary (sic) buildings which accommodate the division of Physical and Occupational Therapy. The "POT" huts on Devonshire Place.

Canadian Students' Anthology Needs Uoft, 'Varsity' Authors

The first anthology of creative writing by Canadian students is currently being compiled by a Toronto publishing house.

Contributions from Canadian students under 25 proceeding to a degree in a Canadian university are being sought by J. M. Dent and Sons (Canada) Ltd., for inclusion in a volume.

Judges from the publishers are Professor Desmond Pacey, University of New Brunswick, Dr. Ira Dillworth, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Professor Earl Birney, University of British Columbia and J. S. Campsie, an editor of J. M. Dent and Sons.

Work already published is eligible, provided the author includes all details of former publication. There is a limit of three prose and three poetry entries from each person.

There are fiction, non-fiction and poetry sections in the proposed book. All works used will be paid for by the publishers.

Winners in The Varsity's literary issue are especially invited to submit manuscripts, said a spokesman.

Students interested should see one of the following faculty representatives: Professor N. J. Endicott, (UC), Professor A. E. Barker, (Trinity), Dr. D. J. Knight, (Victoria) and Rev. F. Black, (SMC).

WUA Elections

Women's Undergraduate Association elections for the External Affairs Committee and the Students' Administrative Council will be held on Thursday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the UC rotunda, not on Tuesday as previously reported.

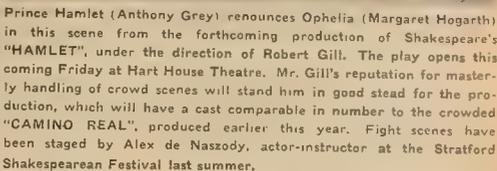

University College Literary and Athletic Society elections are on Tuesday, as announced.

Bob The Porter Honoured As Trinity Establishes Fund

Trinity college has established a fund to honor the memory of "Bob the Porter", R. G. Robinson, a former porter at Trinity College for over 20 years. Mr. Robinson died last year.

Subscriptions to the fund already are over $1,900, said the Convocation Bulletin of Trinity. The money will be used to purchase an alms dish for use in the new Trinity Chapel, and the balance will go to a special discretionary fund of the provost, the interest on which will be used to aid needy students.

Prince Hamlet (Anthony Grey) renounces Ophelia (Margaret Hogarth) in this scene from the forthcoming production of Shakespeare's "HAMLET", under the direction of Robert Gill. The play opens this coming Friday at Hart House Theatre. Mr. Gill's reputation for masterly handling of crowd scenes will stand him in good stead for the production, which will have a cast comparable in number to the crowded "CAMINO REAL", produced earlier this year. Fight scenes have been staged by Alex de Nazdoy, actor-instructor at the Stratford Shakespearean Festival last summer.

McPhail Fund Gives Money For Welfare

A woman who will be long remembered in the field of prison reform and other social work will be honored next autumn with the first award of a bursary bearing her name.

Agnes McPhail, the first woman member of the House of Commons, was the inspiration behind the founding of the Toronto branch of the Elizabeth Fry Society. She also waged a single-handed crusade for prison reform culminating in a royal commission whose findings became the famed Archambault Report.

Members of the Elizabeth Fry Society in Toronto have organized a fund known as the "Agnes McPhail Memorial Fund" to provide bursaries for women students in the School of Social Work.

Each bursary will be for $200. The award will take into account applicants' enthusiasm for a career in penal reform as well as scholarship.

The fund is not yet closed, and further donations will be forwarded to the University of Toronto. So far, $5,000 has been presented to the university.

THE PRESIDENT REPORTS

Dr. Smith Raps Students Who Seek Financial Gain

Sidney Smith, in his report for 1954-55, finds two deplorable attitudes in the current university student.

The two are what he calls a "student-centred" attitude and the "preparation for life" attitude.

"The current student," says Smith, "who is clearly different from the one we knew in the pre-war years, . . . is the product of the democratization of university education."

Students no longer think of the university in terms of a sense of community and of excellence, but in terms of a training that is socially and financially advantageous. This he terms the "student-centred" attitude.

"On the lowest plane, the 'student-centred' attitude may manifest itself in a studied carelessness in dress and a deliberate obstrepousness in speech and manners.

"On the more intellectual plane, it issues in what might be described as an aggressive trade-union attitude, as if students were a special class fighting for special privileges against an entrenched elite—the staff and the administration."

According to the second attitude, "the university is something like a finishing school, where the academic discipline is an irritating necessity, and the real worth is to be found in a set of peripheral activities."

The president criticizes the student for considering the university as a place to increase his price in the "market-place," and his formal university work as a mere ritual obligation.

"Both of these attitudes are no less than fatal to the survival of the idea of the university as a community of scholars."

If universities are not to become as "a trade school with an interesting background" the staff and the administration must work to preserve the "good old times," to see "that in this democratic age, the aristocratic virtues are not wantonly sacrificed."

"We have our doubts about the Grade XIII examinations, and we are seeking evidence about the reliability of other tests," Smith also suggested "confidential reports on students from their principals" as a means of applying the selective process.

The part of the staff in meeting the crisis and in counteracting student attitude was also emphasized. "Faculty and administration must be careful not to shirk inquiry into their own responsibilities, or seek to make a solacing separation between themselves the defects which they find in the student body."

Smith deplored the increasing reliance on large classrooms in North American universities. The professor, he said, "is in danger of becoming to the student an anonymous and elusive shadow."

The withdrawal of staff from contact with the student body would impoverish and nullify their work in the university "community."

The administration also, Smith suggests, can do much to help in the crisis by the increased use of modern office equipment. "We are often slow and unwieldy in our handling of administrative problems that concern the student directly," he says.

"We must guard against letting our treatment of the student, once he has entered the university, reflect simply the pressure of numbers."

Pres. Smith

President Smith is as genial in casual dress as in academic attire. Here he is at a football game, and addressing Convocation Hall. His Annual Report was issued this morning.

Primary Science May Be Taught

It may be necessary to begin giving elementary instruction in science and mathematics at the university level, according to Dr. Sidney Smith's annual report to the University Governors and Senate.

Dr. Smith says "something is obviously wrong with our selection process or with our program or with the students' previous education."

The comments are aimed at explaining and offering a solution to the problems involved in the failure of nearly a third of first year engineering students enrolled in 1954.

R. R. McLaughlin, Dean of Applied Science and Engineering, in his report, called the reasons for the high failure rate a "mystery."

Dr. Smith, noting the current national shortage of engineers, says the efficiency of the engineering school must be examined.

Law Library 'Worst' Says Wright Of U of T

"Our library facilities are the worst of any law school in Canada," said Dean C. A. Wright of the Faculty of Law in his report to the University. Yet, "we have potentially one of the best collections of books for law schools in this country," he said.

"The University Faculty of Law . . . will (because of its library) simply not be qualified properly to conduct satisfactory education in law in another year."

"Foredoomed to failure" is his verdict on a new first-year course next year, designed to acquaint neophyte law students with the facilities of the library, because they won't find room in the library for "constant use" of it.

"Our reading room can only accommodate 40 students for what will probably be a student body of over 100 next year," he said. "A large number (of our students) will be deprived of what they pay for and what they should reasonably expect — a place to read law."

"The problem is rendered more acute by what is almost a total lack of library personnel."

... ON MEDICINE

Should a doctorate be awarded to students at the end of a basic course in medicine, questions Dean MacFarlane of the Faculty of Medicine in his annual report on the medical faculty. The dean points out that the Bachelor degree is the first offered in all other university courses.

"The doctorate indicates further special study — indeed in most instances, a long period of study, and very special knowledge in some particular field," Dean MacFarlane said.

"No longer can it be argued that doctor in medicine has come to mean a licensed practitioner," he said.

"Even that usage will be deferred at least one year beyond graduation," the dean commented.

After 1958 a medical graduate will be able to obtain a licence to practise only if he produces a certificate of his having completed a year of internship in a hospital approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Ontario.

"Perhaps the Canadian universities might well review the question of the degree," he said.

Married women are to be dismissed from the staff of the university, announced The Varsity in 1931.

Report At A Glance

In the President's Annual Report for the academic year ending 1955 besides a description of the acute needs for staff and finances, there was —a statement by Principal Jeanerret that "the subject in which so many of our entrants are still deficient is their own language, and the practice of giving special classes in remedial English is being continued."

—a comment by Smith that Toronto's Royal Conservatory of Music must be "more than a clearing house for a number of private music teachers."

—a report that FERUT, electronic brainchild of the U of T is approaching obsolescence.

—a report that there were 11,682 students enrolled in regular courses at the University of Toronto during the year 1954-55, of which 530 were from abroad.

—a description of a slight increase in the percent of enrollment in the Faculty Arts, which Dr. Smith explained partly by a changing attitude of the business world towards graduates in humanities.

—a report that University athletes spent a total of 277 days in hospital during the year, because of injuries received during play.

—a statement from Smith defending the 10-week summer course at the Ontario College of Education leading to the type B High school assistant's teaching certificate.

—a criticism by Smith of the division of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering curriculum into ten undergraduate courses on the grounds that so much specialization is "inappropriate to undergraduate work."

—a report from Warden McCulley that students are reluctant to participate in formal debates.

—a comment from McCulley on the weakness of political clubs on the campus.

THE VARSITY LITERARY ISSUE

FIRST PRIZE PHOTO — "FOOD FOR THOUGHT" by DON URQUHART

THE DOCTOR'S BUSY JUST NOW

BY NORMA JEAN BECK

PUT a picture of a white-uniformed doctor or nurse (preferably both) on the paper jacket of a book these days, and that book will be snatched avidly from the newsstand. For this is the era of the romance-with-an-antiseptic-flavour.

Until recently, writers have used moonlight, roses, and the music of violins as props in their romances. Now they have come to recognize the stethoscope, the oxygen tent, the hypodermic needle.

But there's one insignificant-looking little figure in the medical world whom they overlook. She's the unsung heroine of the doctor's office, the poor relation of the nursing profession, the step-sister of Florence Nightingale. I'm referring to the harassed young lady who keeps the appointment book.

For two years I was a receptionist in a doctor's office. The job happened to be open when I finished high school.

It would be rather romantic and noble to work in a doctor's office, I thought. I pictured myself being a source of comfort and strength to Dr. Clem Saunders in his office above the drug store in our little town. I imagined him saying, "I don't know what I'd do without you," and myself answering with a self-effacing shrug, "Some have their pens, their pulpits, their swords; I have my appointment book."

Miss Smithwick, Dr. Clem's former receptionist, had only three days in which to train me before she left. She had been with Dr. Clem for eleven years. She could accurately gauge his every mood; she reminded him of the date of his wife's birthday; she decided which form of insurance was best suited to his needs and which beauty parlour his daughter should patronize.

"How on earth is Dr. Clem going to manage?" the patients would ask, aghast, when they heard that Miss Smithwick was leaving. For her there was only one word, and that was EFFICIENCY.

To Miss Smithwick's mind, the dreadful effects of inefficiency put it in the same class with heroin addiction and head-hunting. The sight of someone wasting time whipped her into a meringue of exasperation.

Miss Smithwick taught me how to hold the phone by hunching myself into a strained position which might induce fibrositis of the shoulder complicated by acute torticollis.

but which would enable me to have both hands free for folding bandages while answering the phone. Similarly, if I were asking Dr. Clem a question in the lab, I could be rubbing the polishing cloth over the sterilizer at the same time. "It's just a question of organizing your time," she kept telling me.

Because Dr. Clem was the only doctor in the district, his office was as busy and chaotic as a union railroad station at train-time. Even with the patients packed tight on the horsehair sofas in the waiting room, there wasn't space for everybody, and the overflow would sit morosely on the floor. The appointment book was always so cross-hatched with names as to be almost illegible. I had learned to say, "The doctor's busy just now" in five different languages. No matter how hard or how long Dr. Clem worked, he couldn't keep abreast of the crowd in the waiting room. It was like threading beads on a string with no knot at the end.

All day long the waiting room sounded like a circus tent on fire, with babies screaming, children whining from boredom, men deliberating on issues of grave international concern, and women expounding some Crying Shame. When I opened the door to call in the next patient, I felt like an early Christian martyr entering the arena. All the patients rose with one accord, like a congregation for the hymn, each thinking he was next. Once a patient told me he didn't mind waiting his turn, and I had to practice considerable restraint not to ask for his autograph and a lock of his hair.

The one consolation in the job was that Dr. Clem paid me well. But whenever he raised my salary, I protested tearfully. I was under the impression that if he gave me more money he'd expect me to work harder, and already I was tearing about like the captain of a ship in a gale.

When I started the job, Miss Smithwick was horrified that I couldn't type, so I took typing lessons in the evenings. My typing was distinguished by so many spectacular errors that Dr. Clem thought a scribbler to paste them into.

There was the mimeographed letter which began, "Yellow Alumni" instead of "Fellow Alumni", and a statement to the Department of Public Health bragging about the low rate of "morality" in our local hospital, and a regrettable omission of the letter "t" in a sentence, which resulted in advising an overweight woman that she must certainly "die".

Frequently receptionists in doctors' offices are registered nurses. I wasn't, but I soon discovered that the mere act of donning a white uniform gave me an aura of authority on medical matters. Even friends with whom I had played basketball at school a few weeks previously now presumed that, through a process of osmosis, I had gained sufficient knowledge to write a medical textbook.

"I see silver spots spinning before my eyes when I get up from a kneeling position," they'd confide in me, "What should I do about it?"

In vain did I protest that I knew nothing about medical matters. "You work in a doctor's office, don't you?" they'd remind me accusingly, and I'd be asked to dispense advice on every symptom from bloodshot eyes to a palpitating heart, and on every subject from hypnotism to birth control.

In the doctor's office itself, this situation was even more distressing. Miss Smithwick had told me to find out "in a very general way" what ailed each patient so that I'd know which examining room to usher them into. But I soon discovered the impossibility of finding out "in a very general way" what ailed anyone.

I tried couching the question in various ways. But always it brought forth a full dress-rehearsal of the speech they had been practicing to recite to the doctor. It was impossible to stem the overwhelming avalanche of confidences.

I learned in time that being a good listener was only one of the essentials of being a receptionist. I must also be as discreet as a minister's wife, as imperturbable as the sphinx, as adaptable as a chameleon, as thick-skinned as an armadillo, and as tactful as a kindergarten teacher on Parents' Day.

Miss Smithwick had mentioned still another quality as requisite to the job. "I hope," she said, "that you can maintain your equilibrium in the face of any emergency."

I couldn't. Something was always happening to upset me.

One day, when Dr. Clem was answering the phone in my office, I unlocked the safe to get out some change for a patient who was paying her bill. After I had slammed the door shut, I noticed with dismay that I had caught the cuff of the doctor's trousers in the safe.

"Don't move or you'll rip your pants!" I warned him when he finished his telephone conversation.

Falling to my knees in front of the safe, I frantically began to manoeuvre the complicated combination lock. Even at the best of times it usually took me two or three tries before I got it open.

Now my feverish haste unsteadied my hands, and each time I completed the five-move combination and tugged at the handle, nothing happened. After my sixth unsuccessful attempt, I burst into tears.

"Run home, child," said Dr. Clem with dreadful calm, "And fetch me another pair of trousers."

I grabbed his keys and fled down the fire escape, through the back lane and up the shortcut to his home.

When I got back to the office with the other trousers, Dr. Clem had things all organized, and still caught in the relentless grip of the same door, was interviewing all the patients who didn't require examinations. Miss Smithwick would have been proud of him. I helped him push his immaculate trousers and pull on the pair I had brought for him.

Quite often Dr. Clem was called upon to do lengthy explanation examinations on patients who were taking out insurance policies. Miss Smithwick had told me to utilize my spare moments to get such patients ready for their examinations.

Before Dr. Clem saw them, I was supposed to do the fiddly little thing known as weighing and measuring them.

But not so that the patients needn't offend their modesty. I gave them a shareless white gown to put on, with a button for the head and two slits for the arms.

One afternoon a young farmer came into Dr. Clem's office for such an examination. He had evidently never been in a doctor's office before, and was overawed by his surroundings. I rushed

The scooper of the Literary Edition's FICTION pool is a librarian from Saskatchewan who describes her first and second prizes as "a very welcome thirty-first-birthday present." Miss Beck, now enrolled in the U of T Library School, is from Yorkton, Sask., where the hectic events described in her prize story actually took place. Drawing on her own experiences as a doctor's receptionist, she says of the story, "It's all true," adding, "but I have the doctor's permission to print it!" She graduated in Arts from the University of Saskatchewan in 1949, and until this university year was a librarian at the Saskatchewan Public Library. She has been writing "sort of off and on" since before her years at university. Mainly interested in working on fiction, strictly as a hobby, she has had one short story printed in Dr. Carlyle King's Saskatchewan Harvest, an anthology of poetry and prose published to celebrate the province's fiftieth anniversary. The CBC program Points West has used a story of hers "with a surprise ending about a minister." As a winner of the annually awarded Saskatchewan Government Library Scholarship, she is expected to return to Saskatchewan as (presumably) a full-fledged B.L.S.

what, no writers?

Our judges have almost unanimously decried the general standard of the contributions submitted to The Varsity's Literary Contest.

Unfortunately, there is good reason to believe that the quality we received is fairly representative of the quality of writing on the campus.

No award was made this year of the Epstein prize for creative writing. There is nobody enrolled in the only creative writing course on the curriculum in two of the four arts colleges.

What's wrong with creative writing on campus, we asked ourselves and Professor Endicott, the Chairman of the Epstein committee at UC?

There are certainly the usual number of intelligent people on campus, but they do not seem to be going to prolific writing activity.

It is possible that this year represents only a temporary drop in creative ability on the campus. Nevertheless, the writing is worse this year and there has been a decline of interest for several years.

Professor Endicott suggested that the trend might be due to a lack of intellectual tension in the air. There is too much prosperity, cheerfulness, and unintellectual activity. He also suggested that Canada is becoming a rich nation without a tradition of culture behind it.

This opinion would coincide largely with that suggested by several of the judges. Writers were criticized for an intellectual softness, lack of skill in making the language work for them.

There was occasional praise for originality of approach, but in these cases, the writer was always criticized for carelessness in the details, a failure to polish.

What, if anything can be done to help the present situation?

We can only recommend a few surface improvements, for the real cause, we feel is probably something to do with the intellectual climate engendered by our society, and more particularly by Toronto. And these are: greater attention to the creative writing course on campus, with the encouragement of promising people to enter the course; some sort of credit system applied to working for The Varsity, a training which Robertson Davies acknowledges to be most valuable; and the establishment of an all-campus magazine as a regular publication.

into the examining room with the gown, and parroted my usual little speech of "Take-off-your-clothes-and-put-this-on-over-your-head."

Five minutes later I knocked on the door. "Come in," said a sheepish voice. I dashed in with a thermometer in one hand and a measuring tape in the other.

And there was my patient, standing uneasily in the middle of the room, stark naked, with the white gown wound round and round his head, the ends tucked tidily in, like a turban.

But it was the rooster that finally did for me.

Adolph Binestettner phoned to say he was bringing a rooster into town for the doctor. I told him that was fine.

The country patients often paid their accounts in farm produce. Frequently Dr. Clem went home after a day's work with a couple of chickens dangling upside down from one hand, and a sack of potatoes over his shoulder.

Adolph Binestettner came in at noon, when Dr. Clem was out for lunch. There was just one thing wrong with Adolph Binestettner, and that was that he was drunk. And there was just one thing wrong with the rooster, and that was that it was alive.

"Tell Doc to take this here rooster off my bill," requested Adolph affably, shifting the squawking bird from his arms into mine. I couldn't have been more disconcerted if he had handed me a paranoiac cobra.

My reluctance surprised Adolph. "What's the matter, you scared of him?" he asked, trying to focus his eyes onto mine. I nodded energetically.

"Give him here," offered Adolph, "I'll wring his neck for you."

This was even worse.

"No, it's quite all right," I yelled, and Adolph Binestettner shrugged and left.

At this point the rooster in my arms gave a desperate last stand for freedom. I gave forth with a despairing scream like that of a pioneer about to be scalped, and let go of him.

Round and round and in and out of the examining rooms raced the rooster, squawking and flapping. I chased after him, terrified that I wouldn't catch him, and more terrified still that I would.

Finally there came to be some question in my mind as to who was chasing whom. I climbed up onto Dr. Clem's examining table and erupted into hysterical howls; it seemed the only logical thing to do.

The next morning, I resigned.

Dr. Clem's comfort and understanding completely unnerved me, and his shoulder being too high above me, I wept against his stomach. He absent-mindedly stanchoned my tears with the linen towel in his left hand, while his right hand filled in the morning's operations on a chart. Miss Smithwick had trained him well.

I had impulsively decided to become a librarian. In a library there would be "Quiet, Please!" signs, and no roosters.

"You have to go to university to become a librarian, child," Dr. Clem reminded me, "And that takes money."

I hung up the linen towel to dry, sprinkled antiseptic talcum into a rubber glove, and held it out for Dr. Clem to shove his hand into. "I've saved a thousand dollars," I told him proudly.

Dr. Clem was sufficiently impressed to render his rubber glove unsterile by placing his hand on my shoulder. "How on earth did you manage to save a thousand dollars?" he asked.

"Well, you see," I explained gently, "I've never had time to spend it."

I am returning the entries in The Varsity Short Story Contest to you with the first and second prize stories on the top of the pile. I have reason to suppose from the way in which stories are typed, and certain characteristics which are common to both, that they may be the work of the same contestant, whom I would judge to be a woman. If this should be so, I still recommend that she receive both first and second prizes as in my opinion, the second prize story is decidedly better than any of the others which might come in this category.

You may feel some surprise at my choice as neither of these stories shows any novelty in subject or writing. However, they have the great virtues of being consistent and coherent; in both cases the writer has known what she wanted to say and has said it as clearly as she could. I have made comments on these two stories which I hope may be helpful to the writers; they are by no means distinguished work, but they are the best of the lot.

I would have been much happier if it had been possible to award a prize to one or two of the writers who attempted much more difficult themes and made a stab at an interesting style. I must say frankly, however, that except for the two winners, the stories were of a poor high school level rather than of a university level.

I was saddened by the number of contestants who used words which they did not understand, who had not troubled to prepare their manuscripts properly for any kind of editorial examination, and who could not spell. Many of them appear to have only such acquaintance with English grammar as they would pick up by ear under favourable circumstances.

The choice of themes was very much as I had expected; Love, War and Death are the favourite themes of all writers, young and old. Undergraduate acquaintance with war and death must necessarily be derivative, but a surprising number of the writers about love gave the impression that they were describing it from hearsay. It is not too much to expect originality and even an occasional flash of brilliance among writers of university age; these qualities were sadly lacking in the stories in the present contest.

Robertson Davies.

SPECIAL OCCASION

BY NORMA JEAN BECK

MISS CONNORS pushed open the all-glass door of Milady's Exclusive Dress Shoppe with an air of nervous exultation.

Lilyan Betz, the junior clerk, paused in her morning duty of seeing that all the dress hangers were stationed exactly two inches apart. Taking a gauze duster from the chartreuse stool, she rubbed surreptitiously at Miss Connor's fingerprints as she held open the door for her.

Looking at Lilyan in her low-necked lilac taffeta dress with the silk-fringed stole made Miss Connor feel as shabby as a singed cat, even though yesterday she had felt neat and well-groomed in her summer-before-last tweed coat and her brown felt hat.

"An evening gown," Miss Connors told Lilyan, with the faintest trace of pride in her voice. "Not over forty dollars."

Miss Connors had said the same thing previously that Saturday morning, seven times, to seven different clerks in seven different shops along Fourteenth Street. She had looked at the dresses they showed her, and dutifully tried some of them on. But none of them was just right. So she had said, "I'm sorry," to each of the seven clerks in turn, and left them looking as if they needed sedatives and soothing music.

Forty dollars was a lot of money just now. She needed so many other things. A new suit would have been more sensible. And there was still three hundred dollars to pay back on that money she had borrowed to see her through the final year of her university course. But this was a very special occasion.

She had found it hard to hide her pleasure when Bert Sinclair had asked her to go to the University Alumni Dance with him. Bert Sinclair taught history at Central High where she herself taught French. All during the past winter she had been attending an incredibly dull night class in Greek History for no other reason than that he was taking it. He had always nodded pleasantly to her before hurrying away after class to catch his streetcar.

However, Miss Connor's wistful technique had finally resulted in an invitation. A casual, "The Alumni do's on next Saturday night. Like to come?" A sentence from yesterday's French lesson popped suddenly into her mind. "Pour reussir, il faut perseverer dans sa resolution."

Max Ferguson

First Place: "I'm Passionate About the Things" — The entries ranged from the much too heavily philosophical to the absolutely inane. I chose the above poem as the winner for evenly and cleverly sustaining throughout an element of humour. With one exception the metre was good. The use of internal rhyme well-handled gave the poem additional merit and the humorous surprise saved for the final line showed the entire effort was well thought out.

Even before she tried on her old formal gown last night, she knew it wouldn't do. True, although it was five years old she had worn it only twice. It was a pale, undistinguished green organdy which she had run up on Aunt Edith's sewing machine two days before she left home to go to university. It was two inches too big around the waist now, too. Last night, as she stood on a chair to look at herself in her bureau mirror, she put one hand behind her to draw in the slack, pleased. "Well," she thought wryly, "this business of moulding young minds has done that much for me anyway."

"No, not black," she told Lilyan quickly, as the girl lifted a dress from the rack. "No, nor brown either." Already, then, Lilyan had put her into her usual category of dark colours and plain style.

"Did Madam have any particular colour in mind?" Miss Connors observed that Lilyan had become indoctrinated with Milady's policy that customers improve, like grapefruit, by being chilled.

"The misty green of new foliage," thought Miss Connors to herself. "Crimson perhaps, or the shrill yellow of daffodil."

Aloud she merely said, "I don't want it to be too conservative this time."

Finally she had looked at all the size 14's. A strapless cherry-red one had looked hopeful until she tried it on. But no, not even in her now mood could Miss Connors wear a dress that startling. She felt a quick surge of disappointment. Somehow she had had a feeling when she came in through Milady's door that she would find the dress here.

As Miss Connors turned to leave, Lilyan said reluctantly, "Well, there's a new shipment being unpacked down in the basement, if you care to have a look, but I don't suppose..." She picked up an invoice from the blonde-wood desk and ran her finger down the items.

"There's a size 14 listed here, but I don't know if you'd like the colour. It's Champagne."

"Champagne," breathed Miss Connors. She had no idea what colour "champagne" was, but it had an exotic sound.

"I could have a look at it," she said with dignity.

The heels on Lilyan's purple pumps clicked a sharp staccato down the cement steps, and Miss Connors followed eagerly after her, one hand on the iron railing.

The basement was big and musty-cool.

Max Ferguson, man of a thousand voices (most of them mocking), judged the LIGHT-VERSE entries. Mr. Ferguson is better known as "Rawhide," the wheezy MC of a weeknight radio program, who sardonically exposes the shortcomings of his employers, the CBC. "Rawhide" now broadcasts from the comparative quiet of Halifax. He graduated from the University of Western Ontario, and wrote for the Western Gazette during his undergraduate years. Of 15 poems submitted in the light-verse category, he singled out three for special mention — as follows.

Second Place: "The Gardeners" — In the fine macabre tradition of Charles Adams, this little poem packed a tremendous punch and gave me the heartiest laugh of any.

Honourable Mention: "Mortal Dress" — With one exception the handling of rhyming couplets in this poem was good. The thought was cleverly conceived and humourously expressed. The additional element of whimsy gave it further appeal.

2ND PRIZE — HART HOUSE BY ED HOSHKIWI

I'M PASSIONATE ABOUT THE THINGS

I'm a lover of cats of the avidest kind.
I'm a reincarnated Egyptian.
My affections embrace the entire feline race.
I adore cats of every description.
I adored them in verse; I adore them in prose,
From the kink in the tail to the satiny nose.
No tabby's too shabby; no manx too truncated,
No kitten too friendly, no cat too aloof.
No possible Persian could cause an aversion.
There just aren't any cats I have hated
And here of my passion is proof.
I will stand in the street while they roll on my feet,
They can rip up my hose with their claws.
It doesn't displease when they scratch at their fleas,
Or have kittens in one of my drawers.
They can leave their spare hairs on the seats of the chairs,
They can pilfer their milk from my jug
And it's really quite nice to bring moribund mice
And play catch-as-catch-can on the rug.
Be they stinky or crazy, prolific or lazy,
Homebodies or heading for violent ends.
It can't be prevented. On cats I'm demented.
The one breed I detest is my friends.

CATHERINE OLVER

A UC student, Cathy Olver attends most of the lectures prescribed for Fourth Year English Lang and Lit, though she spends most of her time in them composing heroic couplets. To date, she has stayed in the First-Class-Honors class in the said course. She was educated mainly in England, taking her Fifth Form at Haver-gal College, where she walked off with the poetry prize. Writes for the Varsity when she has to.

EARLE BIRNEY

Earle Birney, judge of the entries in the SERIOUS VERSE category, may perhaps be described as Canada's leading and most influential poet. He formerly taught at the University of Toronto, where he was instrumental in instituting a creative writing course. Now a professor in English at the University of British Columbia, he continues to write poetry as well as guide others. His most important collection of published poetry is "Trial of a City." Selecting eighteen poems from the ninety submitted, he states his reasons for approval and disapproval, and sets up some valuable pointers for aspiring poets.

Of the ninety poems entered, more than half were plain failures. Most of the rest contained passages so defective as to rule them out from mention. Some of the major failings were:

1. Unconscious (as distinct from deliberately used) clichés. These were mainly of the sentimental stripe: "our hearts beat tightly in tune with the infinite"; "The spider's web, 'classic symmetry with God's perfection wed'; 'the busy city throbs'; our 'vast Dominion wide'; 'through storm of life, and tragic blast'; 'fragments of the mind'; 'the universal law of love seeking only fulfillment . . . You and I, and the wind'; 'the snow so white'.
2. Inability to shift images without mixing them: "Years of Philosophy stacked from the ground Bleed in the night, my brain to confound, Like cracking the pearly shell Of a rotten egg." And there is a beautiful maiden on the campus whose hair is "cascading strands of ebony" (stand out of the way, fellows).
3. Simple failure to correct (or to detect?) spelling errors: "his sould filled with misdeads" (in an otherwise non-Joycean poem); "Anguished shrieks did rent the night" (opening blast in an ode on the Battle of Gettysburg).
4. Failure to speak a reasonable facsimile of the language of modern men. Or do these words commonly resound in the hallways of Hart House: o'er, naught, doth, mid, Ah yes, yea, but hark! neath, oft? Habitués of this diction appear to have read the Lyrical Ballads but never its Preface. They are usually lovers of nature, of "the golden Sun Whose radiance ranges o'er the orb'd world", or of the quainter poor ("For beggars have oft proved angels in disguise").
5. Prosy and unoriginal editorializings on our dreadful contemporary world, full of "mass instruments of battle and destruction." These are either as bare of image or sensuous word as a Civil Service application blank (and verse only by the power of a typewriter Tab key), or they are little torture boxes stuffed with the bleeding bodies of thoughts, bone-broken to fit them into the predetermined couplet: "Man, each other trust we must Or flash we all to atom dust."

Eleven poems at least, of the ninety, rise out of this rather low landscape, (in order of submission only):

Arnold, old man, you should have stuck around.
 You watched the sea of Faith withdraw. You stood
 And wept as hard as ever walrus could
 To see such quantities of solid ground.
 But now we hear the loud returning sound
 Of those dark waters. Faith is at the flood,
 And buries, with its all obscuring mud
 The lands your age recovered. We are drowned
 In mysticism; reason was a phase.
 Doubt is outmoded as the beaver hat
 And "Nineteenth Century Liberal" is a phrase
 Wielded by every cool religious cut,
 Sackcloth-and-charcoal gray, and pastel prayer
 Are worn by all but the agnostic square.

Modern Love by Nathan Cervo
 Auk Shaw Among the Birds by Nathan Cervo
 The Garden of the Fall by Jay MacPherson
 The Garden of the Sexes by Jay MacPherson
 Aiaia by Jay MacPherson
 Aged in Resolutions by Michael Nim-Chuk

On further re-reading, and consultation with other critics (the young American poet, Melvin La Follette; Dr. R. E. Watters, Professor of American and Canadian Literature at U.B.C., etc.), I have decided that the best five among these eleven (still in order) are:

Prediction by Peter Grant
 Dover Beach by Peter Grant
 Modern Love by Nathan Cervo
 The Garden of the Sexes by Jay MacPherson
 Aiaia by Jay MacPherson

Further reduction is, however, difficult. "Prediction" and "Dover Beach: 56" are both original, jaunty and pointed comments on contemporary fashions in thinking. But they are of a different order of poetry from the other three in this grouping, light in manner, almost exclusively satiric in intention. They do not evoke the mysteries of our being. They are as close to "Light Verse" as to "Serious Verse".

"The Garden of the Sexes" and "Aiaia", on the other hand, are all mystery and mythos. The legend of Daphne and Adonis is, in the latter, recalled in polished, economical and musical phrases. And in the former poem similar material is most ably reshaped to play upon the imagination of a post-Freudian reader. But there is, to me, something very pale and remote about both pieces; their themes are at the roots of our emotions, but their words are only a little breeze in the tree tops, which is not felt in the roots.

"Modern Love", is something else again. On the surface the lightest of the five — a heel-kicking, slightly jejune satire, a clever pseudo-lyric — it nevertheless has an intensity that sustains it, despite its wordiness and its lack of discipline and its tendency to go chasing any rabbit of rhyme that starts up. I suspect that its author has the ability to write better poems than anyone else in this competition. But he hasn't written it here.

None of these poems is then, to my mind, really first-rate, judged even by undergraduate standards, which, especially at the University of Toronto, are not necessarily low ones. James Reaney wrote and published better verse than any of this, when he was a U of T undergraduate. So did Colleen Thibaut. Think of McGill in the generation of A. J. M. Smith, Leo Kennedy, Frank Scott, Abraham Klein. We had a second-year student at UBC last year who wrote (and subsequently published) better poems than any of these ninety. I labor this point solely because I am trying to arrive at a standard not just for the year, this batch, but for your annual competitions. With this intention, I have decided to offer no First Award.

In short:

FIRST PLACE: NO AWARD
 SECOND PLACE: TIED BETWEEN

"Dover Beach: 56"
 "The Garden of the Sexes"

HONOURABLE MENTION: IN ORDER:

"Modern Love"
 "Aiaia"
 "Prediction"

Yours faithfully,
 Earle Birney.

Peter Grant is a student at the University of Toronto in 2nd year Meds. For most of his career at Varsity he has contributed light verse, articles, editorials and cartoons to The Varsity, sity.

During the Korean War Peter enlisted with the Canadian army and served for two years. He then returned to the University of Toronto and entered meds, following his previous work in arts at Victoria College.

Peter received honourable mention for his poem entitled Prediction in the serious verse category as well as second prize for Dover Beach: 56, which is published in this issue.

Mr. Grant is one of the few writers on campus who has an almost consistent mastery of style. His poems in the Champus Cat column have often attracted attention in the University papers across Canada, in particular his poem about Toronto.

SPECIAL OCCASION

A more valued customer at Milady's, Miss Connors realized, wouldn't have been taken down to the basement to see the dress. It would have been carried up to her, while she sat on the chateaufort lounge, idly thumbing through the latest copy of a fashion magazine.

Lilyan was leading the way to the far end of the basement, where a young girl in a green smock was reaching into a large plywood crate and bringing out evening gowns, giving each a professional shake to straighten it out at the same time as she tossed aside its beige tissue wrapping.

"Not over forty dollars," Miss Connors felt urged to remind Lilyan. Lilyan condescendingly assured her that she had checked the invoice; this shipment of dresses would be under that price.

And that was the very moment that Miss Connors saw the other dress. She stopped short and stared. It was hanging on a rack in the darkest part of the basement, with no dust-cover on it. It and the other dresses on the rack were obviously "Milady's Follies".

The dress which caught Miss Connor's eye shrieked poor taste and sleazy workmanship. It was a crude and glaring blue — the colour that superstitious peasants paint the roofs of their houses in order to scare away evil spirits. The lines were as bad as the colour — an unevenly gathered ruffle around the high neckline, an imperfectly matched ribbon sash, and a skimpy, bias-cut skirt with a wavering hemline. As a final inartistic touch, a dusty artificial rose made from a scrap of maroon organdy was tacked onto the left shoulder.

"What a hideous dress," thought Miss Connors involuntarily. And yet, what was there about this dress that irresistibly drew her to it? Some dim, tantalizing memory stirred within her. Then, sudden and clear as a meadow lark's song, Miss Connors was remembering.

It was as though she had stepped through a momentarily unlatched door. Now she closed her eyes for a moment, so that the memory would not escape her.

Yes, she was seeing the little dormer bedroom which had been hers during the four years she had lived with her Aunt Edith. She saw the wallpaper with its pattern of big cabbage roses, the braided rug, the hand-painted vase on the bureau containing a bouquet of red paper carnations which had been red paper carnations for a decade, the immense carved wardrobe which made one think of a Gothic Cathedral, the old brass bedstead. And in the bed, under the Star of India patchwork quilt, was the fat, mousy-haired, bespectacled eight-year-old who had been herself.

As had happened every evening in those days, the little girl's eyes were on the outside calendar which hung slightly askew on the wall opposite her bed. The calendar advertised, "William Fenwick, Plumber," followed by Mr. Fenwick's slogan, "When you need a plumber bad, you need him good."

But it was the picture on the calendar which caught the little girl's attention, and held it. It was a coloured photograph of a sophisticated lady leaning over a marble-pillared balcony, with a red rose held be-

MODERN LOVE

BY NATHAN CERVO

And there was a man sent from John.
To John: his was a voice crying in the darkness,
"Christ!"

—The Hobo News.—

O, Echo,
Echo,
how much I love you, O!

Fair maiden, will you kiss me?

Shall I kneel myself,
adore you?

Shall I peel
myself,
before you?

Shall I steel myself to war you?

Fair maiden, will you kiss me?

You smile? You file your fingernail and shake your sweet neck?

Why?
The noose of Time will break your sweet neck. Footstep on the stair you hear is his. Come, kiss.

His left hand bears the weight of wormy rot. You die. There is no late love. His sickle cuts down all grass. A spear is not so sharp, nor deadly as Time's (swarm of minute worms will suck you dry). His lance quintains a boil of life. He blows you warm seed of death in finger-kiss. Hate him.

Dance
with me in stiff strophe here, my queen. Sweat with me in Attic moiologue. Our fate is sad: we cannot live all ways. Be mate with me, shah in a spider's fang. I need your love. You are my all, my shrine. I bleed candles to worship you. Reign in the pit of my death's kingdom. Let daisies grow there.

here, my love. I play my card. Come, kiss. To kill each other now: to scorn the chronic horn of life! In spasms, seem to die, when born in chasms, dream to die! Come, kiss.

I hang on your mouth, fish-eyed. In love, will you bang
my head?

Fair maiden, will you make me die?

O, Echo,
Echo,
how much I love you, O!

Fair maiden, will you kiss me?

I am a thing, to be consoled.
I am a thing, somehow unsouled.
My sin, they say, is automatic:
radar beams
contort me.

My mind is, likewise, quite somatic.
Morbid dreams
distort me.

A narco-synthesis stirs me up, drugged by millieu. A clanking thought creaks me, lugged by Nature's sleek machine.
Can I live?

Weak, obscene doll, subject to every pulse and whim, yet free to moan and feel my loss? Where is the tree from which to hang this ant-heap god of ME?

Fair maiden, will you kill me?

MORTAL DRESS

BY JAY MACPHERSON

But sore akin are flesh and cloth,
Devoured by darkness or the moth,
And wearing such frail treasures, we Impart our own mortality.
This shall, despite my care to save,
Precede me to the general grave.

Recongregated from the dust,
If in my flesh appear I must,
Extend thy mercy, Lord, and raise Together with me to thy praise — Surely, Lord, thou canst guess —
My blue silk dress.

SPECIAL OCCASION

tween her teeth. Her marcelled hair was the colour of egg yolk, and her satin evening gown was of a peculiarly violent shade of blue.

Once again the little girl had told her. "Maybe someday I'll be pretty like you. Someday maybe I'll have a beautiful face."

Aunt Edith had called up the stairs to her again. The child had sighed, given the slender another long, wistful look, and then she had stood on the edge of the bed to turn out the light.

"Madam!" Lilyan, the salesclerk, was calling again. Miss Connors started guiltily, and obediently left the blue dress she had been looking at. Lilyan was holding one of the newly unwrapped dresses up to herself.

"So that's the colour of champagne!" thought Miss Connors. She hadn't realized that it would be like spilled autumn sunshine. Suddenly she knew that this was the dress for which she had been searching all her life.

There was an elusive fragrance about the dress as Miss Connors slipped it on over her head. "Perhaps that's the way champagne smells," thought Miss Connors dejectedly.

A moment later she stood in front of the full-length mirror. She looked at herself as she stood there — slim and proud and pink-necked. The champagne dress was low-necked — gossamer lace over deep-toned satin. She held the skirt out, catching her breath as it billowed out around her. The lace felt soft to her touch, like a caress.

Lilyan's face was reflected in the mirror. Miss Connors could see the look of surprised admiration in her eyes. The dress's magic wasn't only a fragment of her imagination, then. Lilyan had sensed it too.

In twirling slowly around so that she could see the back of the dress, Miss Connors' glance fell once more on the rack of dresses in the dark corner of the basement. She cringed again at the sight of the blue dress.

Forcing her glance back to her reflection in the mirror, Miss Connors noticed how gracefully the lace stole draped over her bare arms, and how the colour of the dress emphasized the gold glints in her hair. Then impulsively she turned to Lilyan.

"Do you mind," she asked, "if I try on that blue dress over there?" She went over to the rack and slipped it off its hanger.

"You don't want that one!" exclaimed Lilyan horrified. Then, lest Miss Connors realize she questioned her good taste, she added in explanation, "It's too big for you."

Miss Connors glanced at the label, and saw that it was a size 18. She also realized that it was probably approaching Lilyan's lunch hour, and that the girl was anxious to wrap up the champagne dress and make out the sales slip. Nevertheless, Miss Connors help up the blue dress so that Lilyan could untie the sash.

A few minutes later, Miss Connors was wearing the blue dress. She turned to look at herself in the mirror. Really, the blue dress was even more dreadful than she had at first imagined. It was amazing what a difference clothes could make. A moment ago her own radiance had surprised her, and now she was mousy and awkward-looking.

Lilyan undid the hooks and eyes and helped her slip the dress off over her head.

"Shall I wrap up the champagne dress?" she asked, "Or do you want it delivered?"

Miss Connors spoke with sudden decision. "I'll take the blue one," she said.

Lilyan's mouth fell open as if someone had snipped the drawstring. "The blue one?" she repeated stupidly.

Miss Connors took the blue dress off its hanger again, and handed it to Lilyan. "How much is it?" she remembered to ask.

"Thirty dollars," Lilyan replied promptly. Miss Connors pictured her bragging later to the head saleslady that she had got rid of the blue satin monstrosity for thirty dollars.

"I'll take it," she said.

"Wouldn't you rather . . . Are you sure . . . That champagne dress was . . ." Lilyan started to say.

"I'll take it," repeated Miss Connors brusquely, and started up the stairs.

As Lilyan was putting the blue dress in the gray box with "Milady's" printed in small, discreet lettering in one corner, Miss Connors felt impelled to add something.

"It's for someone else," she said.

"Oh," said Lilyan, slightly relieved, "For someone bigger than you." She finished tying the mauve ribbon, and expertly curled the ends with the edge of the scissors.

Miss Connors hugged the box to her and turned to go. "No," she said softly, "It's for someone much, much smaller."

Robert Weaver

I've read the five entries in the non-fiction category for your Literary Issue, and I'm sorry to say that I don't think you should publish any entry in this category. In any case, here are a few comments about them.

Number one, "Where Are We Going", represents a poorly written and superficial example of the religious feeling which we outsiders hear is fairly widespread in the universities now. I hope the general level of campus religious thought is a good deal higher than this.

Number two, "Prose", probably only just gets into this category. It has a charming youthful feeling and some attempt to write with style; but I'm afraid it would look very callow and pointless in your issue.

Number three, "A Meditation on Love", is the most pretentious of the five. But surely this is an attempt at an academic essay? And I don't think it's well enough written to inflict on your readers.

Number four, "And They Call It Music", has

I have a garden closed away
And shadowed from the light of day
Where Love hangs bound on every tree
And I alone go free.

His sighs that turn the weathers round,
His tears that water all the ground,
His blood that reddens in the vine,
These all are mine.

At night the golden apple-tree
Is my fixed station, whence I see Terrible, sublime and free
My loves go wheeling over me.

At the suggestion of judge Robert Weaver, no NON-FICTION entries are published in this issue. Mr. Weaver's disappointment in the quality of the five entries is expressed below, with his comments on each of them. Mr. Weaver, who has written for the Queen's Quarterly and the Canadian Forum, is now in charge of the Talks and Public Affairs Department of the CBC. He was recently co-editor of "Canadian Short Stories."

some humour, but it's a slight and careless piece which looks as though it might have been tossed off to get into the contest.

Number five, "A Dialogue of Pelf and Dole", would seem to be written by someone who has done more reading and has more imagination than the other contestants. But it doesn't get anywhere in particular, and again I would think it might look merely pointless in the issue.

I'm sorry to give you this bad news, I know that undergraduate writing was often pretty awful in my day at the university (I did some of the awful writing myself), but these five entries seem a depressing lot for a university with a student body the size of Toronto's.

Sincerely,
ROBERT WEAVER.

GZOWSKI ELECTED VARSITY EDITOR AS SAC MEETS IN CLOSED SESSION

Over 50 students present at last night's SAC meeting were asked to leave after the Council decided to go into closed session. The closed session was only the third in the entire length of the Varsity's files. In the foreground, with the blazer and crest, is last year's SAC President William Angus, who opposed the proposal to censure The Varsity. Left is Louis Perinbaum, WUS Secretary in Canada, then Bill Smyth, NFCUS External Affairs Committee Chairman. To the right is Mike Cassidy, unsuccessful candidate for Varsity editor, and the nominee for next year's Varsity Managing Editor. —VSP by Ed Staworzynski

Fifty Wait Outside As Two Eliminated

Peter Gzowski was chosen as next year's Editor of The Varsity, at last night's SAC meeting. He was chosen after discussion in a closed-quarters of an hour, closed meeting of the SAC — the third closed meeting that the SAC has held in several years.

Michael Cassidy, Assistant News Editor of The Varsity, and Cathie Breslin and Richard Pegis (together) of St. Michael's College, were also candidates for the position. Pegis has never had any experience on The Varsity, Miss Breslin worked for the paper over a year ago.

The three candidates were asked to leave the SAC meeting. Then the Chairman suggested that the SAC should hold a closed session, excluding any guests and reporters from the meeting.

In a closed session, only a record of motions passed can be reported. All extra chairs at Falconer Hall and even waste paper baskets had been pressed into service to seat the largest SAC audience since the NFCUS vote six years ago.

Sandy McPherson, Meds rep, spoke against the proposed closed meeting, saying that the three candidates were out of the room, and that no one in the Council would be saying anything that he would be ashamed to in front of people.

Murray Mogan supported the closed meeting, saying that for freedom of expression and full discussion of personalities, a closed meeting was necessary.

The Council voted to close the meeting, and all guests and reporters were turned out of the hall. During the closed meeting, the Council defeated a motion to install Miss Breslin and Pegis as Editors. After approximately 45 minutes, the Council opened its meeting again.

Then, voting with six abstentions, the Council elected Peter Gzowski as Editor of The Varsity, on the recommendation of the Publications Commission.

"I'm very honoured by the confidence placed in me by the SAC, its publications commission, this year's editor, and staff," said Gzowski. "I have never had any experience on The Varsity."

"It was a long and tiring session," he said, "but I'm glad to be moving forward to a new year with you. I'll be back with you in a few days."

"And now, if you'll excuse me, I'm going to bed."

Gzowski, 25-year-old, is a student in the Graduate Department of the University College, and has worked for the Daily Press in Toronto and the Toronto Telegram. At present, he is working full-time for The Teler...

Mike Cassidy, present Assistant News Editor of The Varsity, and another candidate for the position of Managing Editor by Gzowski. He has accepted the nomination.

Withdraw Motion To Curb Varsity Permit Printing Issues As Planned

A proposal to cancel the last six issues of The Varsity was considered and withdrawn, after discussion, at last night's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council.

The recommendation was the unanimous report of a special meeting of the Executive Committee of the SAC. The Executive Committee expressed a unanimous disapproval of The Varsity editorial policy, and recommended that the six extra issues, previously approved at the SAC meeting of January 25, be withdrawn.

The Executive Committee report was withdrawn after forty minutes' discussion and an explanation (reprinted in this paper) by Varsity Co-editor Bob Brown.

The Executive Council meeting included 4 students and three faculty members. They felt there was unsuitable material in The Varsity issues of February 14 and 16.

Tom Robinson said the committee questioned the good faith in which The Varsity co-editors accepted the last SAC meeting's censure of The Varsity.

The issues referred to were the Marriage Issue, and an issue containing a report on the conviction of homosexuals arrested on Philosopher's Walk.

After reading parts of the editor's contract with the SAC, Robinson said he felt the editors "have given us a breach of this contract."

"There were four courses of action open to us," he said:

"We could pass another motion of censure . . ."

"We could institute censorship . . . but we don't think this is desirable . . ."

"We could ask for the resignation of the editor . . ."

" . . . or we could cancel the six extra issues . . ."

The Executive Committee's report ended saying it was being very tolerant and lenient with The Varsity Editors.

Bob Brown, Co-Editor of The Varsity, protested that the motion was unconstitutional, because the issue was not the "minor routine matter" the Executive Committee was empowered in the SAC constitution to deal with. He later complained the Editors knew of the matter only three hours before the SAC meeting.

After discussion, Chairman Tom Symons ruled the motion was "not unconstitutional." "If they had decided a matter of policy without consulting the SAC it would have been unconstitutional, but not in this case," he said.

Bill Angus, last year's SAC president, spoke at the invitation of the Council.

Angus said there was much more justification last year than this for suspension or firing of the editor. "The Varsity" has been rather exceptional this year," he said, and showed the Council some special issues of the paper.

He said cancelling the six issues would discredit the prestige of the SAC and The Varsity, and might result in the resignation of the Co-editors of the paper.

Angus said he thought it rather unfortunate the Publications Commission didn't consider this issue. He suggested the SAC table the Executive Committee report, call a special meeting of the Publications Commission, and then call a special meeting of the SAC to consider the report.

He said cancellation of the extra issues would punish the students, and that the move did not have the students' interests at heart.

Shoemaker said the Committee must be firm in this issue, and had been lenient long enough. The Statement Of Varsity Policy

"In Good Faith"

This statement was presented to the Students' Administrative Council last night, after the executive committee of the SAC had recommended to the Council that the publishing schedule of The Varsity be cut by six issues. This action was to be taken because of the quality of material contained in recent Varsity's. After much discussion, the motion to cut the six issues was withdrawn.

The editor and staff of The Varsity would like to make a formal statement on this issue.

First of all, with the question of material being included in The Varsity which is in bad taste, the Editors would like to say the following:

The Editors express their regret that some material was included in the issues in question. Some material was contained in these papers which in retrospect should not have been included.

For this the Editors apologize.

But the Editors must still say that they believe that matters of controversy should be discussed in The Varsity, and also that the matters in question were

An afternoon debate will be tried today at Victoria, "in an effort to increase attendance," said a VCU spokesman. The topic is: "Resolved that this house rejects abstinence as a cure for alcoholism." The debate is at 4:00 p.m. in Alumni Hall at Victoria.

"These prohibitionists have it all wrong," said Mac Claridge, government speaker. "Most people become alcoholics either at school or at university. Clearly, then, the simple solution . . . is to close down these amoral institutions."

"Work is the downfall of the drinking class," said opposition member Gord Sheppard. "Abstinence is the true basis of Victorianism. We are Victorians. Therefore we should all abstain from everything — including work."

procrastination

An instance of the SAC's unwillingness to act in the capacity of a real governing student body came up at last night's SAC meeting.

The SAC on February 8, received a letter from two students at the University of Toronto asking them to take a stand on the establishment of a Canadian Institute which would help new Canadians and especially foreign students.

The letter, being somewhat long, and involving the necessity of thought, was tabled before even a page had been read, and was referred to the EAC Committee.

The EAC committee met last Thursday, February 16, and gave the letter to a member for summary. Without reading it.

It will now be handled only on March 14, the next EAC meeting, the final meeting, and cannot appear before the SAC before their final hectic meeting for action.

Can a body which handles only those set functions handed on to it, like the running of Blue and White dances, and gives such short shrift to the consideration of positive student proposals venture to call itself a student government?

SAC must have principles, and must have the respect of all the students, he said. He said issues such as the Salk Vaccine and the departure of Professor Underhill were important but had not been discussed in The Varsity. There had been no need to discuss the issues in question, he said.

"We regret that some of the material in question was included in the paper. Some material was contained in these papers which in retrospect should not have been included," Brown replied. He felt,

St. Peter's Trips Blues With Close 95-87 Win

The University of Toronto basketball Blues played their best basketball of the season but it wasn't enough as St. Peter's Peacocks downed the locals 95-87 in an exhibition tilt at Hart House last night. The outcome was in doubt until the final two minutes when St. Peter's pulled away.

By HOWIE MANDELL

Leo Madden played his best game of the year for the Blues. Madden hooped 22 points to lead the Varsity scoring and 18 of the 22 came from far out on beautiful set shots. Lanky John Dacyshyn got 15 and Al Vaichulis hooped 14. John Sheppard and Peter Potter got 12 and ten respectively.

Two 5' 8" guards named Don Finn and Bill Dooley caused all the Blue trouble. Both men displaying terrific speed drove the Toronto team crazy in the latter moments of the game to give their team the win. Dooley got 17 points, all in the second half and Finn got 15. Joe Bannas hooped 23 to lead the winners and Ed Dugan also got 15.

When Leo Madden fouled out of the game with five minutes left the Blue attack bogged down and the Peacocks pulled out in front. Up to this time the lead had changed hands on several occasions. With three minutes to go Toronto was down 83-81 but then two fast baskets by Dooley and Bannas started St. Peter's on their way and they added to their lead a few seconds later when John Dacyshyn fouled out.

As for the officiating, well, Dacyshyn never complains about a foul. He was complaining last night.

In the opening game of the evening the University of Toronto Seconds had an easy time beating the YMHA 82-54. Ed Rigby led the Intermediate attack with 24 points while Ed Brezina and George Holm got 13 and 12 respectively. Hughie Bearg was the Y's top man with 12 points.

Whites Battle To Tie

By JOHN BROOKS

Pickin' Chicken came close to stopping Varsity Whites' unbeaten skein at six games last night, but Varsity had the final punch down the stretch and held off the determined Chicks to gain a 2-2 draw. For the Whites, it gave them a total of eleven out of a possible fourteen points in their last seven games, and the single point picked up tonight moves them to within two points of second place Kingsway Motors. The Motormen were swamped 10-4 by Lyndhursts in the nightcap last night.

The game was one of the slowest of the year, as neither team seemed to be able to get much of an offence organized. Varsity became even slower after Grant Mills limped off the ice in the third period after colliding with the Pickin' Chicken goalpost.

The Whites drew first blood just three minutes after the opening whistle, when Dud Kearney scored from Mike Elik during a goal-mouth scramble.

Ted Lotocki put Varsity two up early in the middle canto, with Elik and Kearney drawing assists, but the Chicks came back with two counters in two minutes towards the end of the period to put the teams back on even terms.

The referee handed out four penalties, two to each team. No goals were scored with men in the penalty box.

The doubleheader last night was in the form of a booster night to provide the THL with funds to enable them to operate again next year, and also to provide money for player insurance. Well over 1,000 fans were in attendance.

St. Mike's Down Sr. SPS 53-52

St. Mike's A clinched first place in group 1 when they scored a thrilling 53-52 win over Sr. SPS on Tuesday. Both teams had gone into the game with identical four wins and one tie records.

Ed Callaghan led the way for the Irish, scoring 19 points and turning in a superlative rebounding effort at both ends of the court. He was closely followed by Dan Regan who potted 17 points. Regan was the spark plug for the victors as he hit at vital times in the contest with a great driving lay-up.

Ed Skrzypek topped Skule with 12 while Bruce Webb scored 11 for the losers.

St. Mike's, thanks to Regan's shooting and Callaghan's rebounding, got off to a fast 11-0 lead. They held a 20-10 lead at the end of the first period, saw their margin narrowed to five after the second stanza, and were hard pressed in the last frame to hold their lead.

It's interesting to note that last year St. Mike's also closed off the regular season by defeating Skule by one point, 33-32.

Junior College Programme May Supplant Universities

A twelve-month-a-year university working hours of nine to five? Other plans for the future of higher education in Ontario include a multi-million dollar program to provide junior colleges at centres across the province. The first of these will be the Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology, Construction of which is expected to start this spring.

The bill to establish the new Lakehead College was given second reading in the legislature earlier this week. During the reading, Premier Frost pointed to the coming crisis in higher education and said that it was "one of the most important problems to which the people of Canada and Ontario must address themselves."

Mr. Dunlop explained that the Lakehead Institute will provide two-year courses similar to those provided at Ryerson Tech., as well as in the arts, engineering, forestry, commerce, and household economics. He told of his discussions with heads of seven universities (Toronto, Queens, Western, Ottawa, Carleton, McMaster and Assumption).

They included proposals to raise admission standards, operation of Ontario's universities on a full twelve-month and morning till night basis.

In Good Faith

written in good faith, and included by the Editors in good faith.

We ask that The Varsity be judged on the whole year's issues, and not on odd articles.

We also feel that the method of expressing the SAC's censure of the articles in question is unfair both to the students of this university and to The Varsity — the paper itself.

If The Varsity has presented articles which are in poor taste, the matter should first be presented for discussion to the editors and then brought through the Publications Commission to the Council.

The proposal to cut off six issues from The Varsity is a method of punishing both the students and the paper. It is not a method of grappling directly with the issues involved. It is a method whereby the issues involved — the quality of the material presented in the paper — are dealt with indirectly.

To cut down the number of issues would mean:

a loss to the students through lack of publicity for elections, debates, AVR publicity etc.

a loss to the paper itself as four more issues will be insufficient to train a new Editor and a new staff.

It will mean that sports events, debates, advances, publicity for clubs and organizations, and information of all sorts, will not be covered in The Varsity.

In view of all these facts, if our statement of policy and apology are not acceptable to this council and the motion to cut the issues is not rejected we must respectfully submit our resignations and that of almost our entire masthead.

Wendy Michener, Bob Brown — Co-editors

The following staffers supported the stand of the Co-editors and agreed also to resign if the Students' Administrative Council Executive Committee's motion was passed.

however, that matters of controversy should continue to be discussed in the paper

"In view of all these facts, if our statement of policy and our apology are not acceptable to the council, we must respectfully submit our resignation, and that of almost our entire masthead." Brown's statement concluded. (His statement is printed verbatim on page 1).

Tom Robinson, publications commissioner, said perhaps the editors of The Varsity were owed an apology. He said he had transgressed in not coming to The Varsity with this issue.

"We would like very much to accept your apology," he said.

Varsity Co-editor Bob Brown stated, in reply to a question from Shoemaker, that he thought certain articles that had appeared in The Varsity had transgressed the rules of policy that had been laid down by the editors themselves, and also — evidently — by the SAC Executive Committee. He said that the editors took full responsibility for the paper. However, he said, he errors had been committed in good faith, both on the part of the writers of the articles and on the part of the editors.

Shoemaker replied that he accepted the apology as an individual and as President, and that he hoped relations would be better in the future.

Robinson agreed to withdraw the motion cutting the issues, and Mogan, as seconder, did likewise.

Hart House Needs 40 Candidates, Has 14

Candidates are urgently needed for the coming Hart House elections. Today is the last day for nominations, and none of the five major committees has enough nominees to fill it.

At five o'clock Thursday afternoon there was only one candidate for the Art Committee, and one for the Library committee. Four men had been proposed for the House Committee, and the same number for the Debates and Music Committees.

At least eight candidates are needed to fill each committee, and more if elections are to be held.

"The House expects there will be a great number of nominations on Friday, for people have a habit of making up their minds late," said John Becker, Undergraduate Secretary for Hart House. "But even at that, we'd like members of the House to consider running."

Last year at this time, a desperate plea was issued for more people to run. There were nine more nominations by Thursday night of the nominations week than this year. Fifty-five nominations were received on the last day.

Nomination forms are available in the Undergraduate Activities Office all day today. Each candidate must sign and return his own nomination, to that office.

"I know it is one of the truly educational and rewarding experiences to serve in some capacity on a committee," said Warden Joseph McCulley. "Serving in such a capacity means some hard work, but it also means picking out some of the best traditions, thoughts and purposes of the University," he said.

CHALLENGE WUS WINNER

Skule Skandal

Questions Choice of Graduate But Support Seminar Winner

The qualifications of one of the World University Service Seminar scholarship winners were questioned at Wednesday night's Students' Administrative Council meeting by Meds representative Sandy MacPherson.

One of the students selected, MacPherson said, is registered in Osgoode Hall, and takes only two hours of official work a week in the School of Graduate Studies here. MacPherson asked if this student could pass the benefit of his German trip on to Toronto students, while only on campus two hours a week. He also asked why no professional students, but only Arts students, have been chosen for the seminar in the past 3 years. In reply, Campus WUS chairman John Burbidge said the student in question had applied in good faith, and was willing to speak, and organize speaking tours, after his return. The SAC confirmed the scholarships given to the three students, unanimously.

The three students were Michael Shoemaker, Marg Penman, and Ian Scott.

Ian Scott, the student whose qualifications were questioned, was interviewed last evening by a Varsity reporter. Scott said that he is a graduate student in a legitimate graduate course proceeding to an M.A. degree. "I feel that this entitles me to apply," Scott said, "and if one is entitled to apply, he is entitled to be accepted."

Replying to the objection that he would not be in a position to disseminate information gathered overseas, Scott said "I feel that I've known the university well and my interests are sufficiently wide that I will certainly be able to contribute on my return."

Scott's qualifications have also been questioned on the grounds that his affiliation with undergraduate life is inadequate. In answer to this, Scott said: "I pay university fees, and anyone in my position is entitled to run for SAC."

Scott spent four years as an undergraduate in Modern History. During that time he was Student Council president at St. Michael's, SAC representative, and Publications Commissioner.

Society Election Engineers Vote Till 2:15 Today

Engineering students go to the polls to-day to elect faculty representatives. Voting will take place from 9:00 a.m. to 2:15 p.m.

Polling booths have been established in five places — Mechanical, Chemical, Mining, Electric and Skule Buildings.

Three engineering students have accepted nominations for the Engineering Society presidency. They are John Rumble, Emil Yanchula, and Van Logelchets.

John Schultz and Chuck Meyer are running for first vice-president.

The second vice-president will be Peter McDermick, Keith Conover or Jack Ellis.

Engineering is allowed two SAC representatives. To fill these positions, a student from fourth year and one from third are elected annually. Ted Bousall, Mike Laughton, Peter Graham and John Hubley have campaigned as fourth year reps. Edwin Ciebien and Diane Hallamore contest the third-year position.

Hart House nominations close to-day at 6.00 p.m. There are still many committees which need nominees.

Wanted! A Good Civil Club Stog. And I will try to get one for you!
Doug Baker for Civil Club Chairmen

The walls of the engineering buildings are plastered this week — with posters. Campaigning for today's Engineering Society elections has gone on for some time now. The posters, some painted, some printed, are for almost every post in the society. Dozens of candidates are entered.

Alcoholism On Top In Weekend Meet Not For Temperance, But Understanding

Alcoholism as a disease, and as Canada's number one social problem, will be discussed at an open seminar in Hart House this weekend. All interested people, (including women), are invited to hear some of the best-informed men in Ontario, and to take part in the informal discussions.

The aim of the seminar is to encourage understanding of alcoholism. Some of the areas to be considered will be: the effects of alcohol on the body, drinking patterns, the early signs of alcoholism, alcoholism and industry, and the problems in being an alcoholic.

"It is not our intention to preach 'temperance' or dictate abstinence," said Bill Hunter, IV Meds, president of the Medical Society and chairman of the seminar committee.

"We simply feel that the subject is of real interest to a large percentage of the students and of concern to some of them. We are going to try and provide some solid, useful information and opportunity for discussion."

Some of the speakers will be: Dr. J. K. W. Ferguson, director of the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories; Dr. D. Stewart, chief psychologist for the Bell Clinic for Alcoholism; Mr. K. J. Robinson, educational director for the Alcoholism Research Foundation; Dr. S. J. Holmes, psychiatric consultant to the Alcoholism Research Foundation and the Mimico Alcoholic Reform Clinic; and Dr. J. N. Emerson, assistant professor in the Department of Anthropology.

The committee which Mr. Hunter heads includes: Paul Walters, president of the Engineering Society; Helen Ferrie, treasurer of the POT Undergraduate Society; Al Zeiderman, president of Knox College Society; and Fred Caloren, president of the Victoria College Union.

The seminar will be held in the Debates Room on Friday evening and Saturday, February 24 and 25.

Masthead Meet

Masthead members are requested to conduct themselves to the Varsity Office at 1:00 p.m. to-day. This is to be a back-room session, and the above mentioned exalted few are to bring appropriate smoke-producing devices.

SAC Bulletin Board Arrives

The SAC bulletin board has finally arrived on the campus. The project, initiated at the third SAC meeting last autumn, was obstructed by a variety of difficulties raised by campus groups and business concerns.

Ted Stevenpiper (IV Arch.) announced last night that the board would probably be erected around March 15. It is now being painted.

The bulletin board was purchased from the Dominion Bridge Company. Company officials estimate that the total cost of construction amounted to $150.00, but have agreed to supply it to the University for $25.00. Glass, cork and cement have been donated by other firms.

Students in charge of the project had originally decided to paint the board red and white in the hope that it would look better during the winter than if done in the University colours. The decision to paint it blue and white was later made on the instigation of other SAC members. It will stand in front of the SAC office.

Bleeders Taken 'till Tuesday Just 12½ Gallons To Hit Goal

The Blood Drive "has come within a hundred pints of its goal," said Al Davidson, publicity director for the Student Service Commission here, last night.

The campaign has been extended to next Tuesday, he added, because Meds men have made appointments for next week. "It is anticipated because of this that we will reach our goal without trouble," he said. The goal is 1500 pints.

Results this year have passed last year's 1412 pint total. Nursing now leads the pack, with 60.2% of its students bled. Engineering has given the greatest gallonage of blood.

Nursing rep Jo Flaherty thanked the Students' Administrative Council members at Wednesday night's SAC meeting, for proving they weren't amemic. She also thanked all the students who had given blood, and the women's fraternities on campus for their support (they gave percentage-wise, twice as often as the whole campus).

Jr. Skule Trips Up UC 42-39

In one of the most exciting games played at Hart House this year, Jr. SPS defeated UC by a 42-39 score on Monday. UC showed the inspiration and drive that has been lacking all season in their play. Throughout the first two periods, UC constantly outplayed the opposition, with Winer, Turack and Nisker grabbing a large percentage of the rebounds and checking fiercely all over the floor. Then, in the third period the tide began to change. Fraser for the Engineers came off the bench and began to use his height to steal the rebounds from UC. With Galka, Wojden and Fraser hitting for successive baskets, Skule led by six points. Then, Winer, Turack and Bochnek combined to regain six of the points for UC with minutes to go, but Karpinski sank two foul shots making the score 42-39.

Maybe she likes to go OUT for dinner now and then. On Sunday, for instance. She's been hitting the books all afternoon — it's 5:30 — she wants a change of scene — she wants some comfortable, relaxing place — good conversation, fine food. So you take her to Scott's, because it's got that terrific buffet dinner, and you can have as many helpings as you like for no extra charge.

And Scott's has ATMOSPHERE. You know — soft lights, white linen, pleasant, efficient waitresses. She's impressed, of course, because the food's excellent — the surroundings just right. YOU'RE impressed too, Scott's is so close — just over at Bloor and Yonge — and that tremendous food is so reasonably priced! It's remarkable! She'll want to go back again and again. So will you.

innocence on campus

Books, as the record of what man has done, and thought, are the backbone of our civilization. For the university student, books contain the answers to his inquiries, the raw materials of thought. They are the basis for his expanding interests.

At a professedly non-sectarian university such as this, a student should learn to think, to decide for himself. Here, adolescent becomes adult. Here, knowledge for knowledge's sake is taught. The university should not try to obscure any portion of any man's view of life. Its professors may interpret knowledge, but the university's body of learning, in its library, must be impartial.

Yet not all the library's collection is open to all. Certain books are termed "immoral", and are kept in locked cupboards in the old library. To read these books, one must first explain one's interest in them to the head of the circulation department, and get her permission.

Major novels, old and new, books from the twenties on free love; an outstanding reference work for married couples — these are "immoral". Everywhere, knowledge is dearer than smut, yet this censorship, these locked cupboards, continue.

If the government is at fault, it should change its laws, and bring these books into the open, out of the back rooms. If the University Library is at fault, may it soon cease this needless censorship, designed to protect the university student's "innocence".

a thought

We noted with interest an article in an old Varsity file which reported that at Sydney, Australia, the administration had decided to admit students into examination halls ten minutes early.

This extra ten minutes could be used to scan the examination papers, but no writing would be permitted. We wonder whether this idea might not be adopted here; it might enable examinations to be a fairer test of the students' ability, since many students become "rattled" at the sight of an examination paper, and if they start to answer the questions immediately, they are apt to give a poor account of themselves.

OUR READERS WRITE:

A Lesson For School Children

Editor, The Varsity:

The schoolboy politicians were out in full force Wednesday night at Falconer Hall's SAC meeting. One might have mistaken the scene for Ottawa though. They had their fiery, irrational Pickersgill; elder, unprincipled Howe; and bumbling, bungling Gardner.

The Executive Committee, by-passing the legitimate channels and disregarding ethics, had passed an order in council too. The setting would have been complete — except that Uncle Louis chose to speak for the Opposition — and so did the Civil Service.

The Cabinet had chosen to meet in secret conclave to pass judgment and lay down sentence on The Varsity without even informing the Editors.

Only three hours before the S.A.C. meeting were they informed of the Star Chamber proceedings.

They bungled. One whiff of the odour of the motion, and the honourable members, unlike their Ottawa counterparts, were watchful. As the Cabal spoke, they one after the other sealed the fate of the motion.

To avoid certain defeat, with the necessity of resignation, they withdrew the motion. The Gods of Wycliffe College had ceased to smile on them.

It is a lesson to be considered. We hope the schoolboys have taken it to heart.

A Student Criticizes The President

Editor, The Varsity:

Dr. Smith's annual report, which dominated Monday's issue of The Varsity, is such a collection of contradictions, platitudes and inanities that one wonders if the president was well when he wrote it.

In the first place, Dr. Smith seems to be torn between progressive and traditional education. He asks: "Are science departments permitting only a few outstanding students to survive, by overloading the science course?" and states that "... science departments are not anxious to correct this unhappy condition themselves."

I presume that by corrective measures, Dr. Smith means a lowering of standards, or greater spoon-feeding. He wonders why so many students switch from honour courses to general courses: one gathers he would make all courses general courses, so no one would have to transfer. And yet, he says, we must work to preserve the "good old times", to see "that in this democratic age, the aristocratic virtues are not wantonly sacrificed."

In connection with the high S.P.S. failure rates, Dr. Smith questions the "efficiency" of the engineering school. What does he mean by this? If he means the efficiency — n equals No. of engineers graduated over the No. entering the course times 100 — how can he criticize the student who fails to consider the university as a society of scholars'?

If he means the efficiency — n equals No. of graduates prepared for work over No. of graduates times 100 — how can he criticize the students who think of university as a trade school?

There are many things that one would question in Dr. Smith's report: his misleading criticism of the Royal Conservatory; his comment about specialization in engineering (which is probably less advanced in this respect than the groups in MP and C); his approval of the General Arts Course as a good thing, followed by his dismay at its popularity; his mysterious comment about "straining for perfection at the undergraduate level", which seems to be something he does not like (do we start to strain when we graduate?) ... all of these things are of a highly debatable nature, and have plagued educators since the beginning of schools.

They are worth discussion. But the essence of good discussion is clarity, and this is what the president's report lacks.

Maturity and Good Sense

Editors, The Varsity,

The lot of an editor must be trying. There are many problems that confront you in endeavouring to put out a university daily that satisfies the whims, and does not tax the sensitivity, of a varied and usually critical student body. No doubt your duties must often be tedious. As such, you may seek diversion by shocking an apathetic student population by a touchy article.

You have come under criticism. Some of it arises from nothing more than the bad taste in some disillusioned student's mouth after a hectic night. But often criticism is sincere and well founded. As such, it should receive due consideration.

Unfortunately we are more prone to criticize than to praise. This may be a trait of an intellectual body, or it may stem from the fact that we are more easily aroused to seek expression when ideas contradict our own than offer praise and recognition when a paper is serving our cause in the manner in which we expect it to.

I personally feel that this year's Varsity excels those I have seen in my four years here. Maturity and good sense characterize most of your editorials. I especially like the tend to focus attention of the student body on issues that cannot be put across in a single article.

Behind this year's Varsity lies thought, organization and hard work by the staff. Best of luck to you, Wendy and Bob. You are a credit to your position and to the University.

Tactless!

Editor, The Varsity:

I invite The Varsity photographer to drop over any time of the day to the room occupied by me and my wife, who also attends U of T.

He will be allowed enough time to take a photograph, before I throw him out.

Since the photograph labeled "Squalor and Poverty" appeared on page 5 on Tuesday's "Varsity", six students have asked me whether our room looks the same.

By inserting this photograph, The Varsity has well done its share in defamation of the married couples at U of T, and once more proven its irresponsibility and tactlessness, characteristic to most of Canadian university students.

College Drama On Rocks As Commercialism Looms

Right now, almost every drama club on the campus is fighting to stay solvent or even to stay in existence. The presidents of the clubs of two of the arts colleges admitted Thursday that funds amounted to "something worse than nothing," with very little hope of financial relief.

Adrian Adamson, president of the Trinity Drama Society, said that next year's executive was going to start off "with a balance of zero—at the most." The club, which is entirely self-supporting and has no official tie-up with the college, has been functioning for 54 years. Its year's budget was lost in a highly praised but unprofitable production of Brecht's Mother Courage.

Adamson added that, as far as his executive could see at the moment, continued participation in the University of Toronto Drama Committee's annual One-Act Play Festival was "out of the question."

The annual Festival, with entries by the four arts colleges and the School of Nursing, was presented in mid-January this year. Adjudicator David Greene of the CBC at the time praised the work of the college for its brave experimentalism.

Experimentalism was claimed to be the cause of another drama club's landing in the red. Dave Dunsmuir, president of the UC Players' Guild, explained the club's shaky financial position as "a direct result of our trying to fulfill a campus group's natural function." A loss of about $500 was shared between UC and St. Mike's when Karel Capek's R.U.R. failed to draw audiences to Hart House Theatre last November.

"Owing to our lack of funds," he said, "We have been forced to soft-pedal our activities." Purification, the Tennessee Williams play submitted by the guild to the UTDC Festival, was called by the adjudicator "superb in its direction." "But that doesn't put any money in our account," said Dunsmuir. "The whole problem of finance and function should be very deeply explored before the guild agrees to participate in the UTDC next year."

Both presidents explained that matters were further complicated by the need for booking Hart House Theatre at the end of one year for use in the next, and by the competition of all-Varsity productions by Robert Gill at cheaper rates.

The other clubs have also hit a slump, drawing little by way of box-office returns when they present non-commercial theatre. A Vic Drama Society executive-member said he was "tearing his hair" over the financial situation. "Something must be done immediately," he said, "or the college societies will be forced out of business."

exploring music

Last Sunday's offering on the Sunday-at-supper-time showcase, Exploring Minds, was a perfect illustration of all that is best and worst about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Music and Humour had an urbane master of ceremonies in the professionally urbane Lister Sinclair, delightful cartoons by the talented Graham Coughtry, and a very good basic idea.

Nonetheless, as one has begun to expect drearily in these situations, somebody goofed. At the beginning of the program, Lister Sinclair announced gravely that although the program was about Music and Humour, it was not necessarily going to be funny. Now after a preliminary of this sort, one might expect a fairly learned dissertation on the technique of comic music. Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Godfrey Ridout (who wrote the script) and the CBC, however, not only missed the boat, they fell off the end of the dock in doing it.

An excellent selection of musical bits and pieces made up the program, commented upon by Mr. Sinclair, most of whose remarks were confined, unfortunately to the genre: "There, it goes 'plink!' That's funny. Now we have an allusion to the William Tell Overture. That's funny too." Alas, it was not. Had we been given a genuine technical discussion, the program, although narrowed in scope, would have been far more absorbing. On the other hand, if we were not to be treated to a serious talk, we should indeed have been made to laugh. Much of the program's material offered a basis for the very best sort of spoofing, especially Mr. Coughtry's cartoons) which would have been much more appreciated by the non-technical spectator.

symphony conservatory

If you are one of those wise guys who think that student music-making and amateur music-making are synonymous as far as sheer horror is concerned, you would have come from Convocation Hall last week suitably corrected.

The Royal Conservatory Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Ettore Mazzoleni. The Symphony gives students the opportunity of playing along side professionals. The results encourage me to judge the evening as a professional concert.

Phyllis Osborne was soloist in Nights in the Gardens of Spain by de Falla. If I may say so, she started off well by her choice of dress and then gave a performance which was never exactly flamboyant or brilliant, but always in good taste. She worked with the orchestra, not against it. Together they evoked much of the exotic warmth of the work and showed rare feeling for detail.

A Canadian work, Fantasia and Dance for Violin and Orchestra, by Toronto composer Harry Freedman, was given its first performance, displaying affinities with the tundra of Sibelius, or the Sinfonia Antartica of Vaughan Williams. The two movements bear no direct relation to each other, apart from a quotation from the first movement in the second dance, yet the overall effect of Northern bleakness is sustained. The work emerged as powerful, well shaped and expressive.

Mendelssohn's Reformation Symphony is actually his fourteenth in order of composition, the second for full orchestra. Twelve of these were written for string orchestra and are still in manuscript, excepting the ninth, which Boyd Neel is to conduct in the next Hart House Orchestra concert.

A sound performance can work wonders with the dry counterpoint of the piece. It is pretentious. From the slow introduction, Mazzoleni whipped his orchestra up to a dynamic pace and they were with him all the way. The last roll of timpani was taken up with a round of justified applause. The allegro vivace has many weaknesses. It is insipid and embarrassingly sentimental unless injected with some degree of manliness. This was done. The andante was generally clean, even if a little off-pitch. The pompous bridge to the finale was taken with due pomposity, the brass blazing forth. The Bach-like passages were well handled. The pitfalls avoided, the orchestra wound up to a most satisfactory conclusion, in complete keeping with the spirit of the work and the occasion for which it was written.

Today's Hi-Fi Concert by St. Michael's Music and Drama Society (Carr Hall, 9:00 p.m.): Overture: Patrie, Bizet;
Harpichord Concerto No. 5 J. S. Bach; Symphony No. 4 Tchaikovsky; Water Music Suite, Handel-Harty; Diversissement, Ibert.

Russian Playbill Goes on Tonite

Two plays will be presented in Russian by the Slavic Circle this evening. The plays, Turgenyev's Provincial Lady, and Jubilee by Chekhov, directed by Professor Strakivsky are both produced after the success of last year's The Marriage of Figaro.

The first examines the results of a woman's attempt to introduce herself to St. Petersburg society through an effort to seduce an aristocratic friend. The second involves the systematic deflation and eventual shattering of a pretentious bank president.

The plays are to be introduced at the Women's Union Theatre, 79 St. George Street. Tickets are 75 cents, and include refreshments.

Gill Tackles Hamlet

The ghost walks tonight in Hart House Theatre, as director Robert Gill tackles one of the most challenging plays in the Shakespeare canon. His production of Hamlet will run until a week Saturday. Incidentally, the ghost will be played by Colin Hamilton, who only last week was cutting capers about the same stage as one of the gangsters in the UC musical, Kiss Me Kate.

Mr. Gill's intention is to present a straight Hamlet, easing off the directorial emphasis on elements subsidiary to the action proper. "Any production that tends to be academic," he says, "loses it immediacy." His settings were designed with an aim to functional simplicity, so that too many passages would not have to be sacrificed for scenic changes.

The plays' costumes were designed by Marian Walker, with the fight scenes staged by Alex de Naszody of the cast of the late lamented Tamburlaine The Great.

The director explains his choice of the Shakespearean play this year partly because he was able to find a Hamlet first. Anthony Grey, son of the founder and leading actor of the Earle Grey Players, he describes as "having an unusually sensitive ear for Shakespearean verse." Others in the cast include Judith Teague as Gertrude, Margaret Hogarth as Ophelia, Harvey Bliss as Claudius, and Alex Eptinoff as Laertes.

The play will start at 8:30 p.m. prompt, after which no one will be seated until after the first scene. "The mood has to be established at the start," says the director, adding "and anyway, it'd be awfully dark in there."

Glee Club To Give Concert

The Hart House Glee Club will be featured at the 272nd Hart House Sunday Evening Concert this weekend. Conducted by Ward McAdam, the Glee Club of over fifty voices will sing a medley of sacred, college, and folk songs. Last weekend the Glee Club participated in the Inter-Varsity Choral Festival in Convocation Hall, involving nearly 300 students from Guelph, McMaster, Western and Toronto. Tickets for the concert, which begins at 9:00 p.m., may now be picked up at the Hail Porter's desk in Hart House

UC Union Building Needed Says Dean

The need for a student union building at University College was stressed in the final report of Dean of UC Women, Miss Marion Ferguson.

Dean Ferguson, who retired last spring after serving over 30 years on the University's staff, said that the failure to achieve such a student union building was "the major disappointment" of her long term of office.

"Nothing can properly fulfill the requirements of the College short of the replacement of the entire front of the Women's Union by a new Students' Union that will be comparable to the Union facilities provided by all the other federated colleges", Dean Ferguson said.

The UC Women's Union building has just been completely redesigned and refurbished, said Dean Ferguson, and is about as adequate and attractive as a building of its age can be.

"But at its best it lamentably fails to meet the needs of the situation," said Dean Ferguson.

The UC Dean strongly recommended the project should be undertaken as soon as possible, and said that there was already a nucleus available for the building fund.

Luther Is Not Deplorable Debaters Side With Rowe

Martin Luther's claim to greatness was vindicated by Hart House debaters on Wednesday night. Members defeated the motion "That this house deploras Martin Luther" by 29 votes to 17.

The motion was presented by J. D. Brownlie, (II Trin.) who said "Of all the reformations that was needed Luther was the wrong man, to do the job. He reached a point where he was no longer able to justify his position theologically. Had he been an Erasmus, the reformation would have been less in the nature of a revolution."

"Violent controversy has fogged the issue," added Brownlie.

J. F. Brewin, (II Trin.) asserted that Martin Luther enabled Christians to follow their own consciences. "On the contrary," stated M. B. Callaghan, (I Law), "Martin Luther stood completely for self. He became Pope Luther of the Lutheran Church. He was a dictator, a violent and emotional man."

Opposing the motion, B. D. Lister, (II Trin.) said, "We live in an age where Christianity is better seen and not heard. We even want summer off. Christianity is a mere spectacle, a restful hour-and-a-half. It has become the thing to do. Martin Luther was an expression of the freedom to criticize. We must agree with his right to disagree even though we do not agree with this viewpoint."

Reverend John G. Rowe, of Huron College, London, the honorary visitor, sided with the noes. He said he did not believe Luther to be an exponent of freedom of conscience. Luther, he said, looked to temporal power to reform the church, appealing to the sword for reform.

"But Luther dramatizes the conflict between good and evil present in every human being. He also knew the absolute authority of the church had to be broken," added Mr. Rowe.

This debate was the final debate in which members could qualify themselves for election to the Hart House Debates Committee.

Tough Made 'Nensis Editor At SAC Meeting Last Night

Next year's Torontonensis editor will be Allen Tough, a second year student at Victoria. The Students' Administrative Council appointed Tough at its meeting last Wednesday night.

After his appointment, the new editor promised to keep up the 'fine tradition' of Torontonensis, but to make the contents more consistent and more modern.

"Torontonensis is one of the biggest college yearbooks on the continent," he said when interviewed by a Varsity reporter. "I want to make the name Torontonensis mean something to the students... through sales campaigns and through The Varsity."

Over two hundred copies of the yearbook have yet to be sold, out of a total run of 1600 copies this spring, he said. "We're producing a book that's even more for the undergraduate than before," he said. In the past, the majority of 'Nensis sales has been to graduating students.

Tough was editor of his high school yearbook, the North Toronto Pentagon, before coming to U. of T. Last year, he was Men's Athletics Editor for the yearbook, and this year co-edited with Dave Wood.

WUA Elections

Elaine Sossin, III UC, was yesterday elected SAC rep from University College, for 1956-57. Liz Van Every was elected UC Women's rep to the External Affairs Commission. Both students will be on the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College next year.

The elections were held yesterday, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. in UC's rotunda.

New Editor Meets Staff

Next year's editor, Pete Gzowski, would like to meet all those interested in working on The Varsity's masthead. He'll be available in The Varsity office Monday, after 11 a.m.

With the exception of managing editor, all masthead positions are open. This year's reporters and masthead types are welcome to air their views and opinions.

SAC At A Glance

The Students' Administrative Council, Wednesday night, besides picking next year's Editor of The Varsity (in a closed meeting):

- learned that Finance Commissioner Mogan was afraid that money could not be found for twelve Hospitality Committee blazers (six to button left; six right) costing $400 - $500;
- heard a "big wheel" on campus detest the term "big wheel";
- were moved to applaud by two emotional speeches on The Varsity, from opposing points of view;
- had the largest audience for a SAC meet in recent times, outnumbering Council members about three to one;
- smiled on hearing President Shoemaker say public relations are in a mixed state;
- circulated the agenda of a seminar on alcoholism, as a social problem affecting students, to be held in Hart House Feb., 24-25;

- applauded Debates Chairman West for his work;
- welcomed the announcement that Blue & White Chairman Thompson did not have any report;
- were happy to hear that the University Settlement were overjoyed with the publicity in The Varsity;
- were introduced to Vic Council members-elect, Joan Fiddler (II Vic) and Gerry Helleiner (II Vic);
- learned the McGill council with blazers had more distinction than SAC;
- were told to notice that the conservative member of council wore a different vest and jacket

- at each meeting while the flamboyant advocator always wore the same maroon jacket;
- laughed when a member suddenly pulled down his hand when he found himself voting for a motion he had just violently opposed;
- applauded the news that 1400 pints of blood had been donated to date;
- asked for the appointment of Student Service Commissioners for next year;
- learned that the School of Architecture was holding an open house on March 9.
- heard nothing from five of the 22 SAC members present.

SAC Hosts Blazerless

The Students' Administrative Council voted themselves on Wednesday night to be a Hospitality Committee. The function of this new committee of the whole will be to serve at the Settlement, at All-Varsity Reuevs, on Carabin weekends and on other official occasions.

It was also suggested that council buy 12 distinctive blazers at a price between $35 and $40 each.

Publications Commissioner Tom Robinson asked how many of these blazers would button down the left and how many down the right

The question of size was also discussed. Some members thought buying blazers might lead to discrimination because only those who fitted them could appear officially dressed.

Law representative Murray Mogan opposed any kind of distinguishing mark for SAC members. He thought members of the council should not be making themselves out to be "big wheels" on the campus.

The motion was defeated. SAC members will go unnoticed except by their deeds.

Members of the Students' Executive Council at McGill University have a distinguishing dress on formal occasions. Such a custom is quite common in other universities in various parts of the world.

The Students' Representative Council at the University of Sydney, has a supply of academic gowns on hand for such occasions. They are of normal design, except for a pale blue border on the front edges, and a university crest on one of these borders.

Academic gowns were also suggested at Wednesday night's meeting. It was stated that these were, after all, a distinctive feature of university life on formal occasions.

Library May Close Later Committee to Meet, Decide

Library hours may be extended, Mr. R. H. Blackburn, chief librarian of the university, replying to a SAC request for longer working hours, announced that a special meeting of the library Committee would be called. The committee would normally not have met again until September.

The SAC proposed earlier this month that the Wallace Room be opened until 11 p.m. during the month of March, as an experiment. Members felt that the library's smoking room, which is now open until eleven o'clock, does not offer the ideal studying situation.

Speaking at a SAC meeting recently, Mr. Blackburn said that the students have not shown a need for extra service. On the average only four students a night use the present facilities, he added. Furthermore, he said, both the library staff and the budget made it impossible.

UBC THREATENS NFCUS

Champions All!

If the Varsity hockey Blues look like a happy lot here, they were even happier 48 hours later as they trounced McGill 6-4 and Laval 7-3 to retain the intercollegiate crown. This shot was taken just prior to the Blues' boarding the train on Thursday night. —VSP by Jim Feeley

Plan To Replace It UNB May Quit Too Both U's Plan Vote

One more Canadian university threatens to drop from the precarious fold of NFCUS.

Last week, the University of British Columbia Student Council voted seven to three to withdraw from the federation and to take the initiative in forming a National Students' President Association to replace it. The executive motion will have to be ratified by a general students' meeting March 15 before it will take effect.

At the other end of the country, and in a motion apparently unconnected with the UBC action, the Students' Representative Council of the University of New Brunswick approved the holding of a student referendum on whether it should remain in NFCUS.

Earlier this year, the University of Manitoba withdrew.

McGill has been out for a year. Montreal University has left. Acadia University resigned last year.

And from Alberta to Dalhousie, Canadian University Press reports indicate strong anti-NFCUS feelings on other member campuses.

No immediate action on withdrawal by the University of Toronto is contemplated according to the only NFCUS committee member who could be reached by The Varsity last night.

Secretary Noga Kaplansky said 1955-56 has been a good year for Toronto in NFCUS. "We have everything to lose by withdrawing," Miss Kaplansky said, "and nothing to gain."

Toronto has been called the leader of NFCUS. As Miss Kaplansky pointed out, all U of T proposals were adopted at the regional conference in January and will be presented to the national meeting next fall.

NFCUS was upheld 10-7 in October when the SAC was considering withdrawing.

Possibility of student approval of the UBC motion is only 50 per cent according to CUP reports. No fee decrease would be offered.

Decision came when the council approved the majority report of a special committee formed last fall to investigate the advisability of NFCUS withdrawal.

The committee reported that

Varsity Overcomes Laval 7-3 Linseman Counts Five Points

Quebec City, Feb. 26 (CUP)—University of Toronto Blues smothered Laval University 7-3 here last night to capture their second Intercollegiate hockey title in as many years.

Blues edged McGill 6-4 in the Montreal Forum Friday night, and the double victory puts them out of touch with second place Laval with only one game left.

Laval have three games left but no longer possess even a mathematical chance of overtaking the Blues. Varsity have won nine contests in 11 starts for 18 points, while the Rouge et Or hold a 5-4 record for 10 points.

The league's leading scorer, Ken Linseman fired four goals and set up four more on the weekend's play to increase his season's total to 30 points. Blue centre Don Cossar scored three goals and added four assists to take over second place in the race for the individual scoring championship.

Blues rolled to a 4-0 first period lead last night and added another in the second frame before Laval could hit the score-sheet. The Frenchmen matched Varsity goal for goal in the last period but Blues were too far in front to be in danger.

Three goals within a minute late in the first frame began the Varsity onslaught. With Laval's Jules Hivon banished for two minutes Brian Anderson, Dave Jackson and Linseman made the power play pay off in rapid succession. Then Cossar fooled Lavoie for the fourth counter at 18:47, seconds before Varsity captain Red Stephen drew a misconduct.

Referees handed out a total of 74 minutes in penalties, 50 of them to the visiting Varsity crew. The battle came to a head midway in the third frame when Jackson and John Casey drew majors on the Varsity side, with Casey taking a minor too.

Laval's Pierre Raymond drew a minor and Michel Lagace and brother Roger drew a major each. Jackson took a misconduct penalty in the second period, minutes after Hivon left the game with a match misconduct.

Linseman fired his second goal of the night in the second period, with John Akitt and Cossar scoring in the third. Joseph Bouchard, Raymond and Roger Lagace tallied for Laval.

Friday night Blues took a 2-0 first period lead and increased it to 4-1 in the second frame. McGill outscored the Blues 3-2 in the last period, but couldn't match the power of the Blues to force a victory.

Two goal each by Linseman and winger John Macdonald paced the Blues to the victory over the Redmen. Cossar and Mert Wright added singles, while Leo Konyk fired two for McGill. Captain Dickie Baltzan and Pete Constable (Continued on Page 3)

The Bloody End

The University Blood Drive closes tomorrow night. Any student can give blood at 87 College Street, from 2-4:30 and 6:30-8:30 Monday, 12:30-2:30 and 5:00-7:15 Tuesday. Students' pints will still count in their faculty standings.

Students Raise Union Jacks Reclaim Parts of NY State

Watertown, N.Y. (Exchange)—A dawn attack by eighteen unidentified students of Queen's University, temporarily reclaimed most of Jefferson County, New York State, for the British crown, in the name of George III. The attack took place on the anniversary of George Washington's birthday.

The students, reported to be from Queen's University, hoisted Union Jacks over school buildings and posted proclamations in Watertown, Clayton, Alexandria Bay, and Lefargeville, all in Jefferson County, N.Y. This area was originally part of the old Thirteen Colonies.

"Whereas certain sorrowful events took place in these colonies, in the year of our Lord, seventeen hundred and seventy-six . . . we have decided that the 'iniquitous blot on the American escutcheon' must be removed, read the proclamation in part. It announced that the territory and all its inhabitants were repossessed for England in the name of King George III.

To make them appear bona fide, the plaques were shackled, and written in old English script.

In most towns, the incident was taken as a huge joke, but in one, the local police constable was reported as "quite mad" over the affair. The flags were quickly taken down by police.

Federal cash, for an expanded ten-year program of technical education, is needed now, according to the Engineering Institute of Canada. The institute intends to make this demand to the Gordon Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects.

The money would be used for more technical institutes, to attract better science teachers for secondary and advanced education, and to provide more room for 1966's booming student population, said Dr. R. E. Heurtz, president of the institute, last week.

Canada will not be able to keep up with the increasing technological demands of modern society, he said, and outlined the present shortage of engineers which is a bugbear of Canadian industry. He said the failure rate in engineering shows the poor training entrants are receiving in

After the US Supreme Court announcement that segregation in public education was illegal in the United States, Alabama was ordered to admit Miss Lucy. The riots and suspension followed immediately.

Student Elections Break Out All Over

Engineers Choose 2 Girls

A estimated one-quarter of the female enrolment in SPS will sit on the Engineering Society executive next year.

Dagny Vidinsh was elected secretary and Diane Hallamore third year SAC rep in Friday's elections. Sixty-four per cent of the SPS student body—a decrease of nine per cent from last year—voted.

John Rumble was elected president over two other candidates.

Miss Vidinsh and Miss Hallamore were the only women to enter the elections. Last official figures on engineering enrolment (1954-5) show seven girls and 1,797 boys.

J. M. Pastuchak was nominated outstanding freshman athlete and Don Cossar for the special bronze 'S' award.

Complete results were:

Mythical Student Elected To Post On Queen's Soc.

Kingston (CUP)—A non-existent student ran for the position of Assistant-treasurer of the Alma Mater Society at Queen's. He was elected.

Don Curtis, who collected 149 votes at the polls, defeated Murray Thistle, his only competitor, who is also non-existent. Thistle had the support of 47 voters.

The voting, reported the Queen's Journal, took place under a banner which bore the words "Vote intelligently".

The group who supported the mythical twosome pulled the prank to "make the students aware of their political irresponsibility," the Journal said.

The following is a very instructive game for the theory of the pawn chains.

Both White's and Black's pawns are jammed against each other on a broad front and it is precisely in such cases that it is important to see which player can use any remaining possibilities to open up the game. Here it is White who first opens up the QN file with 14.PQN4! and then prepares to open up the KR file with 17.PKR4!

CAGE BLUES TRIP MARAUDERS

Basketball Blues Top McMaster Leo Madden Top Man With 31 Intermed B-Ball Blues Downed

By JOHN WILSON

Leo Madden made his exit from Varsity basketball his best game yet, 31 points Saturday night in Hart House as the Blues topped McMaster Marauders 86-81.

Madden's total eclipsed the old Blues single-game scoring record of 43 set earlier this season by Detroit Tech's Nick Sica.

At ease for the first time in several weeks on the Hart House floor, the Blues appeared nonchalant while building up a 39-30 half-time lead. Ragged play by McMaster in the opening period left the Blues ample opportunity to split the Marauder defence for close-in lay-ups, while Madden's eagle-eye drew the visitors well out in the court to prevent long-range set shots.

Maintaining a comfortable 10-point margin down to the last two minutes, Blues traded hoop for hoop with the Marauders, giving the game a monotonous tone for the first time this season.

But a tight press in the dying minutes began to pay off for the visitors, with Max Wooley equaling Madden's accuracy from just outside the key. George Munro sank two free throws with 10 seconds left, slicing the Blue margin to 83-81, and there remained a possibility of McMaster tying it up.

Five overanxious Marauders crowded the Blues in the forecourt, leaving Al Vaichulis alone beneath the McMaster hoop, and Madden fired a length-of-the-floor pass to the lanky centre who laid it up to relieve the pressure. Madden added a technical foul with time running out and the Blues moved two points closer to second-place Assumption.

Now holding a 5-3 record, Blues can tie with Assumption for second spot by defeating McGill and Queen's in their two remaining league games. The Windsor club have a 6-3 record, and meet McMaster on the Purple Raiders' home floor Saturday night in the final game of the schedule.

Varsity Intermediates fell before a last-minute McMaster drive 62-60 in the preliminary contest, thus losing a chance at a share in the title with Assumption Seconds. Ed Rigby threw in 26 points for the Seconds, while McMaster's Dick McMillen replied with 24. Bill Bell added 17 for the visitors, before donning a senior outfit to test the Blues.

Blue notes . . . Rube Richman scored 13 points to place behind Madden in the Varsity totals . . . Max Wooley's dead eye accounted for 26 McMaster points, while Russ Jackson, of football fame, potted 17 . . . Western laced Assumption 74-50 Thursday night for their ninth consecutive league win. The Mustangs are now assured of their twelfth championship since the war, although two of those were shared with the Purple Raiders . . . Rumour has it that Madden heads south next fall to pursue a dental course. Fine playing Saturday night placed him amongst the best of Varsity basketball stars, reversing a stand we took last season.

Whites, Kingsway Tie 1-1 THL Curtain Rings Down

By JOHN VOJTECH

Shortly after nine o'clock, last Saturday night, the players on the Varsity Whites team wended their way home from the Arena for the last time this season, after a rough game against the Kingsway Lumbermen which ended in a 1-1 tie. That game rang down the curtain on the T.H.L. Major series as far as the Whites were concerned, and it also stretched their undefeated skein to eight games which included four victories and four ties. The game started out fast with the Whites having the majority of the play. A penalty to Dunc Brodie slowed them up early in the period as Tommy Allardyce shot from the blue line.

The lead didn't last long as the Whites roared back on the offensive. It wasn't long before Mike Elik was winging his way down to the Kingsway net. But the efforts of the Kingsway defense and Howard Mitchell, between the pipes for Kingsway, held the Whites at bay. During a scramble in front of the net, Brodie got hold of the puck and sizzled one into the top of the net before Mitchell could move.

From there on in, the game stepped up in pace, and in the second period the Whites had two good chances to go out in front. Brodie broke into the clear and went in on Mitchell, but was hit by a Kingsway player at the last moment. Brodie fell over Mitchell in the goal crease as Clare Fisher got hold of the puck, but the puck hit Brodie and stayed out. A few moments later, Ted Lotocki grabbed the puck in front of the net, but the puck failed to find the corner and ended up in the mesh at the side of the net.

On Passing Out . . . Tribute must be paid to Jack Wheidrake for his fine job in handling the Whites. The Whites were supposed to stay in shape so that a number of the players, academically ineligible this year, will be on the go for next year's intercollegiate team . . . John Smith, Don Stewart, Don Borthwick and Bob Church played well . . . Tom Riley played a consistent checking game which was a savior in the Lumbermen's side . . . Bill Kearney and Mike Elik were the White spark plugs . . . Brodie and Fisher kept the Lumbermen busy as they outskated their opponents many times. Look for this Brodie next year with the Blues, he should provide some nice action next year in keeping his opponents from getting anywhere. A fast skater, he has proved to be one of the more rugged players in the THL group . . . Hugh Curry came up with some nice saves . . . The Whites had the fans on the edge of their seats as they came closer on many occasions to adding to their total. However, they ended up the season where they began it, unable to put the puck in the net . . . To all players and Jack Wheidrake, we lift our mugs on high and say "Cheers". Signs of changing times: two THL pee-wee players asked for and received the autographs of the referees of the Whites-Kingsway game.

Western Takes B-Ball Toronto In Basement

By FLO MIDDLETON

Oh misery, oh woe! — another Western Victory! The Western girls took the wretched-looking Bronze Baby home to London for the second year in a row after they downed Toronto 33-18 on Friday and out-played Queen's 48-39 on Saturday. As for the Blue and White team, they did their best, but they just did not have what it takes to win the intercollegiate women's basketball crown.

In the first quarter of the opening game on Friday, with Toronto ahead at the end of the period, 6-4, it looked as though Toronto just might down the powerful Western squad, but two periods later, it was evident that Western was too strong for the girls from this campus. Sloppy passes and fouls proved to be the Blues' downfall in spite of the excellent playing of Joy Taylor, Sylvia Kerr and Marilyn Charters.

Down nine points going into the last frame, Toronto still had a chance, but the girls tried too hard and the plays did not click. As for shooting, Toronto was jinxed. Time and time again, the girls shot, only to have the ball bounce off the rim. Varsity only found the hoop once in the last minutes of play; thus to have the final score read 33-18, for Western. Top scorers were Marilyn Charters and Pru Smith with 5 apiece. On the guard line, Marion Capel and Meredith Robinson played an outstanding game keeping Western stars, Joanne Castles and Beth Maclean from their usual high scoring averages.

In the second Friday game, Queen's defeated the McGill team 42-29 in a rather sloppy, razzle-dazzle game. Petite Barb Clair on the Queen's team was by far the best lady on the floor.

On Saturday afternoon in the consolation game, Toronto bowed to the Redmen, 38-21. Again it was a matter of the ball not going in that jinxed basket — it was uncanny!

In spite of the faking of Sylvia Kerr and the intercepting of Meredith Robinson and the stalwart guarding of Lou Martin, the Blues were behind 23-12 at half time. The McGill forward line ran the Blues ragged and the accurate shooting of Dorothy May kept Montreal on top.

Toronto missed their starry forward Marilyn Charters who suffered a broken nose in the pre-game warm-up on Friday. The Blues shooting was too erratic and the play became much too fast for "heads-up" ball. Kerr was tops with 10.

The final game between Queen's and Western was a repeat of last year's final in excitement and excellent playing. It was not until the last quarter, that it was definitely Western's game. Up until that point, Queen's was London's equal and they had the advantage of home floor. As in the Friday game, Barb Clair with 19 points was Queen's star. Even though Western's Beth McLean was the game's high scorer, her play was not as spectacular as that of the Gael's little lady, who made the tall Western guards look sick. The game ended 46-39 for Western

McGill Swimmers Tops Western Wrestlers Win

University of Toronto teams failed in their efforts to return two championships to Varsity. The swimming team finished a poor last behind McGill and Western, while the matmen took second place to Western.

Up at Montreal, McGill splashed edged out Western by a single point to take the honours. The Redmen won five firsts, Western four and Varsity one.

The Western team of Bob Gledhill, Jerry Pink, Bob Eynon and Bob Eason established an intercollegiate record in the 440 yd. free style relay with a time of 3:46.5. That broke the previous Toronto-held record of 3:47.

Lloyd Kishino set a pool record in the 220 yd. individual medley relay, chopping two seconds off the old mark of 2:24.

The Western wrestlers fared a bit better down at London, trailing victorious Western by 20 points. Varsity had 68, followed by defending champion OAC with 67, McGill with 21 and Queen's with 16.

The Blues captured two individual championships, Freeman Roth taking the 123 lb. class over OAC's Ken Buchanan, and Bob Sibthorp defeating Doug Stephen of OAC by default. Western capped four firsts, and OAC added three.

In the intermediate division, the University of Toronto trounced second again, trailing OAC. The Varsity matmen ended up of points, trailing OAC by 14, and heading third place Western by six points.

Murray Berman of Toronto won the 123 lb. class, and Varsity's Jim Trenton at 137 lbs, and Bob Herod at 191 lbs, also claimed victory.

The fastest pin in the intermediate division came in the 167 lb. class when Ross Archibald (Western) nailed Frank Van Rappard (OAC) just 1:18 after the bout, got underway.

Hockey Crown

added singles for the losers. The twin victories assure the Blues of possession of the Queen's Cup for the second year in a row. Only one game remains but it offers little chance of interest other than seeing the Blues keep their record as close to perfection as possible. University of Montreal Carabins will be the visitors this Friday night in the last league game for the Blues.

Only issue now in doubt is the individual scoring championship. Linsman appears to have it in control with 30 points in 11 games, and one more game to add to his total. Only players likely to overtake the Varsity flash are McGill's Brian McCann and Dickie Baltzan. McCann has 22 points and Baltzan 20 in nine games.

it makes a difference

Now is the time for all students to vote. Essays, exams, dates, none of them are an excuse for not voting in faculty and campus elections.

You may feel inclined at this point to shuffle off the responsibility with a casual: "What difference does it make anyway?"

We'll tell you what difference it makes. Whether or not you vote means the difference between a good executive in your society and an indifferent one, between an active, representative SAC, and a bunch of self-seeking politicians lapping up prestige, between competent, interested members on the Hart House committees and inappropriate ones pushed in by local factions. It means the difference between group control and majority control.

If you vote, some candidate with ulterior motives will not be able to count on the indifference of the majority and get himself elected by his flunkies. If you vote, the $150,000.00 which goes annually from your pocket to different student governments may be wisely and profitably administered.

Each trouble that you have had with your executive this year has been due to somebody's failure last year to inform himself about the candidates and to vote.

It is common in the politically stagnant atmosphere prevalent on campus to find only one or two candidates running for the position of SAC representative, the position which should be the most hotly contested since it carries the greatest amount of power and prestige. In some colleges, the position has descended to the level of a job. In others the candidates by "tradition" are actually not allowed to make any campaign, in other words to make their reasons and qualifications known to the people who will be voting.

A small number of people running and a small number of people voting can only mean unrepresentative, incompetent student governments. Examples, unfortunately, are not lacking.

The responsibility is yours — find yourself a good candidate and vote for him.

justice and the law

There is good reason to suppose that there is room for vast improvement in our present legal processes.

Long delays, inevitable technicalities, and high costs now seem to be an inevitable part of the administration of justice in this country. There are on record numerous cases — both civil and criminal — that were not finally decided until years after they were first brought before the bar.

The practice of having long summer holidays for senior justices, for instance, means that anyone accused of committing a serious crime in the late spring may well languish in jail for four or five months before his trial even begins.

It seems rather evident that the present number of courts and justices are inadequate for our needs. But this is merely part of the reason for the "laws delays." There are many more anomalies in Canadian legal administration that need to be corrected. There must be some provision made for staggering the holidays of senior justices, so that important cases that come up during the summer can have a speedy trial. There needs to be an advisory legal and administration service for judges, and more effective court procedures.

The whole system of legal administration needs a thorough overhauling if it is to serve its essential purpose — the fair and impartial provision of justice.

"A Modern Problem"

Racial Discrimination

Racial discrimination is a modern, rather than an ancient problem, says the writer of this article, Egbert Tertullien, a student in the third year of the Political Science and Economics course at St. Michael's. He points the finger at imperialism as the root of the present trouble.

Within the last quarter of a century, six countries have successively held the Spotlight in race relations: The United States, with its Jim Crow and discrimination against negroes; Hitler's Germany, with its anti-Semitism and its sterilization of the so-called inferior races to make living space for the Aryan race; Palestine, with its open warfare between Jews and Arabs; Japan, because of its treatment of the Chinese in World War II; Kenya, where the Mau Mau are in revolt against the British planters; and South Africa, with its segregation policy against Negroes and Indians.

AN ECONOMIC INTERPRETATION

The predominant note in all this discrimination and tension is economic. The rationalization of Jim Crow in the United States is to keep the average whiteman above the Negro; in South Africa, it is to keep the white man above the Kaffir; Hitler's scapegoat was the Jewish capitalist; the Arabs feared Jewish economic competition; the basis of Mau Mau is the expropriation from the African landowner of the fertile highlands of Kenya.

The racial feeling against Indians in the Orient is basically a struggle of native tenants against foreign landlords in the rice, tea and rubber industries. The Immigration policy of Canada and Australia is as much motivated by economic considerations, as is the fear in the United Kingdom of competition for jobs between West Indian immigrants and British workers.

THE RACIAL STEREOTYPE

Superimposed on this economic base is the racial stereotype not uncommon in these parts — the sexual perversion attributed equally to Jews in Germany and to Negroes in the United States, the association of illiteracy with Italians; the "Do you want your daughter to marry a Negro?" in the United States, is exactly the same as the "Do you want your daughter to marry a Jew?" in Germany.

Inter-marriage is banned in several states in the U.S.A., as Hitler banned it in Germany.

IMPERIALISM, THE ROOT OF THE PROBLEM

Imperialism, which has sought to justify its economic control by regrading the colonial peoples as inferior, despising their personal habits and social customs, denying their ability to govern themselves, and describing them as a people without a history, is the root of this modern problem of race. Of this phenomenon, the Negro has been the worst victim.

But I can only say with Adam Smith in his Theory of Moral Sentiments, published in 1759, that "Fortune never exerted more cruelly her empire over mankind, than when she subjected those nations of heroes to the refuse of the jails of Europe, to wretches who possess the virtue neither of the countries which they come from, nor of those which they go to, and whose levity, brutality, and baseness so justly expose them to the contempt of the vanquished."

In like strain, Lord Oliver, a Fabian Socialist, who became Governor of Jamaica in the twentieth century, defending the Negro against the conventional vilification that he is incapable of progress, and is vicious, criminal and idle; he dismissed these accusations as "invented, imputed and exaggerated, in order to support and justify the propaganda of race exclusiveness."

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE IDEA OF INFERIORITY

The Caribbean area was historically, the first area in the world to be confronted with the modern problem, and the contact between the so-called "advanced" and "backward" peoples. The sugar plantation provided the setting, and the pattern of race relations was worked out in the context of a system of unfree labour in the form of encomienda, slavery and indenture.

Greek society had rationalized slavery on the grounds that some men were marked at birth for subjection and others for rule. Medieval society had rationalized it as the just punishment of transgression and sin, and defended it on the ground that in the eyes of God, master and slave were equal. But Caribbean society rationalized the unfree labour of the encomienda, slavery and indenture on the grounds that the races involved were inferior to the whites, and defended it as a means of civilizing them by introducing them to the advantages of Christianity.

Thus the problem of labour in classical and medieval society, essentially a social problem of which the racial factor was unimportant, became, in the Caribbean, and later, in other parts of the world, a racial problem. The unfree workers, chiefly white in classical and medieval society, was in West Indian society, red black or brown, and work became identified with non-whites.

Thus the struggle for racial equality necessarily becomes part of the larger world struggle for freedom, in general, and the attitude of individuals in the struggle depends on their attitude to social and economic development in general.

OUR READERS WRITE:

A Singularly Slanted Interpretation

Editors, The Varsity:

Mr Davidson's singularly slanted interpretation of last Wednesday's SAC meeting which appeared in his letter to the Editors on Friday begs an answer.

The Executive Committee's disciplinary recommendation was withdrawn after the editors had acknowledged incompetence by printing material which "in retrospect" should not have appeared, after the editors had acknowledged themselves to be in breach of contract with the publishers, the SAC, and finally after the editors had apologized for transgressing not only their own policy, but also that of the SAC.

The report was not withdrawn merely to avert possible resignations, but because the apology was accepted.

I would have deemed it a privilege to resign my council office had the editors not apologized, and had the council been swayed by the fuzzy-thinking, issue-skirting, pseudo-liberal appeal of last year's SAC President, speaking on behalf of the editors.

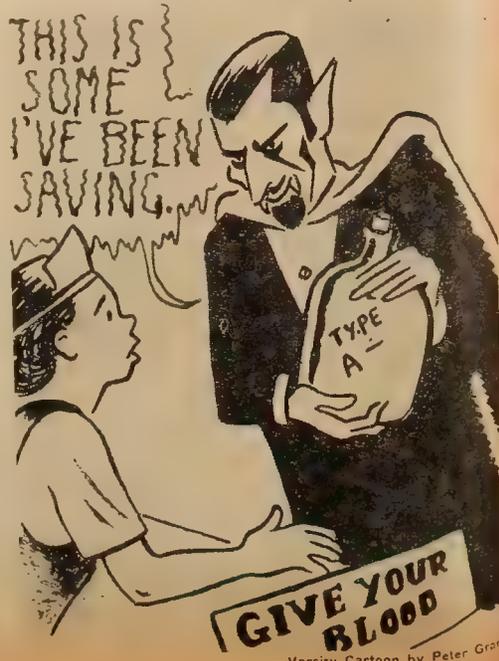

Matters of principle should transcend personal ambition and the expediency of keeping a crimson paper — of any quality — in the hands of the students.

M. A. MOGAN, III Law,
Finance Commissioner,
SAC.

Editor's Note: Students interested in a factual account of the SAC meeting, and the exact wording of the editors' statement should consult the minutes of the SAC, available in the SAC Building, and Wednesday's Varsity.

UNIVERSITY CITIES

The dream of a university city — a self-contained and consistently designed campus — has seized the mind of many a student and university administrator. Here are reports on two such cities in actual operation — the University of Mexico's sparkling, semi-surrealistic campus, and the University of Laval's half-completed buildings located just outside Quebec.

Mosaics & Murals Mark Mexican U.

By KENNETH McROBBIE

The energy and style in architecture and town planning that has accompanied the industrial expansion of South American countries, is very apparent in Mexico City.

Here, old native building skills that produced the great pyramids of Teotihuacan have combined with modern construction techniques to produce an architecture well suited to the perpetual sunshine of the 7,000 ft. plateau. The boom (Government Bonds pay over 7%) has produced much imaginative building.

There are some failures: Latina Insurance is almost bankrupt, while its great blue and silver skyscraper stands uncompleted. Some modern apartments command vast rents.

But exclusiveness is not the key note of this building programme: the Ministry of Communications layout is flanked by long apartment blocks for employees, and some of the poorest students in the world benefit from the most grandly conceived University in the world and Mexico's showpiece—the University City.

It stands near the temple of Cuicuilco (older than the Parthenon) on a wide bed of lava, approached via the Football Stadium (102,000 seats) and the Olympic swimming pool.

Statistics—80 buildings in 170 acres for 30,000 students costing in excess of $50 million, do not convey the spectacle.

There is a 15 storey science building, with a saw tooth pattern of lecture theatres with sloping floors; a liberal arts building nearly a quarter of a mile long; an engineering building with concrete and glass domes; a 14 storey administration tower, with main floor walls built of onyx slabs cut thin enough to admit light, and a mural on one wall which—significantly—depicts students returning to the nation the fruits of their studies; and, most impressive of all, the 12 storey Library building (to contain 1,200,000 volumes) whose windowless ten bookstack floors are covered on all four walls with the world's largest mosaics.

The students will have some idea of its reputation; they can scarcely be blind to its beauty. Huge walls of colour, the gleam of acres of plate glass and metal, the use of contrasting volumes, angles and surfaces, and the intricate variety of mosaics and murals—all on a scale that is humanized by the vast campus that slopes away in a succession of varied floor surfaces—grass, white stone, black lava, and shallow fountain basins with coloured floors towards a view of the two 18,000 ft. snow capped volcanoes 40 miles away.

"Too arty," some may say.

But in Mexico, art is popular; it has never ceased to be the possession of the people. The leading artists strive to incorporate in their work motives, patterns and colours that are of Indian origin.

Why? There is plenty of 'Progress' present in Mercedes autos and Italian coffee machines,—why devote all this money and brains to this project?

From the point of view of merely erecting accommodation, it could have been done more cheaply. Toronto's sewage system and side walks are more efficient than Mexico's. But are these indices of culture?

And so, conscious of his country's admitted shortcomings, and himself poor, the Mexican student can see visible proof of native intellectual and mechanical genius in his University City—a utilitarian work of art that will endure in its own right, and as a promise of his country's future.

Student Union, Residence Distinguish New Laval U.

By CAROL HOFFMAN
Varsity CUP Editor

Laval, one of the oldest universities in North America, is on the move to a new campus. In a multi-million dollar project, which may take years to complete, Laval is shifting its campus from the crowded centre of old Quebec to a spacious new campus, a thirty minute drive outside the city.

The university city, when finished, will be a complete entity unto itself. As well as having all the faculty buildings, with the possible exception of Law, it will contain a church for the city, a student union, and a residence. A total of over 40 buildings are and criminal courts in Quebec City are too great for the Law students.

It is not only for administrative purposes that the new plan was started in 1949. Unity of spirit is considerably helped by unity of body, and the separation of buildings provides serious inconveniences, remarks a Laval report on the progress of the plan.

To obtain the proper "university" spirit, it is necessary to have all the faculties on the same campus.

From the crowded city, Laval is moving to the wide open spaces; from a scattered assortment of buildings spread thinly through the streets, Laval is changing to a compact unit, complete to itself yet with unlimited opportunities for expansion.

Laval looks to the future!

Trend For The Future?

The idea of a University City might be a good one to keep in mind. According to the best estimates, the universities in this country—and particularly in this province—face a tremendous expansion over the next few years.

Rather than to strain the capacities of existing universities to the bursting point, it would be a good idea to consider establishing new institutions as university cities.

The benefits of such a city are these: that it brings together the students within a self-contained institution, within specially-designed, functional buildings, in an environment especially constructed for the student.

planned for in the near future—including a library, cafeteria, athletic arena, laboratories, and hospital.

The new residence, cost estimated at over $1,000,000, is the first one Laval has ever had. Before this, out of town students have lived in rooming houses and private homes.

But the advantages of community living for educational purposes, as well as the advantages of proximity to the campus, have made the new residence a necessity.

As well as a new residence, Laval is building a student union in the new city — complete with facilities for billiards, music and reading rooms, and a central dining hall. This building will cost about half a million dollars and is also a first for the Laval campus.

More than 1,300 students will probably register on the new Laval campus this fall. The new buildings of faculties of Forestry and Commerce are completed now, and the faculty of Medicine will be completed by September. When all is completed only the Law faculty may be left in Quebec. The distance between the new campus and the law libraries

Hard at Work

Still hard at work, tractors are digging up land and starting the construction work for more buildings on the new Laval campus. The campus will be open to students in some of the faculties this fall.

Hart House Hamlet

Alas, poor Hamlet! Directors give him a beard or a bunny-wabbit lip, a rampaging Oedipus complex or a mad push for Horatio, and succeed only in making him woefully lopsided. Yet Robert Gill's production, at Hart House Theatre all this week, by striving for directoral neutrality, achieves only pallidity. The play's action is comprehensible; the playing time not over-long, and the verse-speaking audible, but everything seems to be conducted at a rather unenthusiastic amble.

One of the main reasons for this sluggishness is an understandable timidity in tackling Shakespearean verse, and the few cast-members who are completely at ease in speaking it help to keep the production from foundering in a morass of drawn-out seasaw speeches. Most of the credit must go to Anthony Grey as Hamlet, whose ear for verse seems finer than that of most Canadian professionals.

Grey's Hamlet is a particularly euphonious one, though not very dynamic nor very interesting. Brooding and babbling in turn, this particular Hamlet even manages to keep the audience attentive (and appreciative) during the set bits.

Other ear-catchers in the cast are Colin Graham as a sonorous ghost, and William Davis as Horatio. Margaret Hogarth, as Ophelia, couples an easy grace of speech with an easy grace of motion. Harvey Bliss, who plays the conscience-ridden king, showed his legal training. Even in soliloquy, he sounded as though he were in a witness box, determined not to give the show away.

In this production, the play-within-a-play is the thing. The most outstanding performer of the evening, as far as I was concerned, was James Cunningham in the minor role of the Player Queen. His faintly Balinese gestures and stylized speech-rhythms brought home the ritualistic nature of the "Mousetrap," and its setting. Don Aitken, as the Player King, radiated an air of authority that was noticeably lacking in the heads of state.

A bold, multi-levelled and functional setting, designed by Mr. Gill and resembling the new European decors, is attractively impersonal in itself, and helps clip minutes from the playing time without too many behind-the-curtain thumps. Smooth and single-minded, the production should appeal to those who like to peel off the layers off a myth; it should also be seen by anyone with the play on his English Course who wants to obtain some idea of the basic plot without actually reading the book.

Dave Dunsmuir.

OPERA

Comes The Don

Many, particularly many in Toronto, might consider "Don Giovanni" an immature opera as it concerns, and even centers around, sex. To this objection it can only be pleaded that Mozart was young when he wrote it. Despite this, Don Giovanni, as sung and acted by the Opera Festival Company of Toronto, is an evening's entertainment fraught with good, clean fun.

Don Giovanni is that persistently popular figure of folk-legend, the gay seducer, whom every red blooded male in the audience would wish to be. The opera catches him in an off day; he fails to seduce anyone, in spite of several praiseworthy attempts. But his past record, according to an informed source, is much better. Leporello, his faithful stooge, unfolds to one of the Don's jilted loves a list of conquests including hundreds of ladies throughout Europe and Asia Minor, and "Here in Spain, one thousand and three".

After this, nothing Don Giovanni does or fails to do can lose him the audience's admiration.

Giovanni gets away with everything. Neither the fury of women scorned, the righteous rage of fiancées, nor high-minded trios threatening vengeance, can spoil his complete and unconscionable enjoyment of life. But at last, like all good villains, he makes a fatal mistake. Recklessly, (the term is that of the program) he invites the statue of the man he has murdered to supper. The statue, not having eaten in days, accepts the invitation, and the shock is too much for Giovanni. He succumbs, and the rest of the cast sing a very edifying little ensemble about sinners, and the grisly fate that awaits them. The Hollywood ending fools nobody; it is not meant to. We leave with the delightful imagination of Don Giovanni's life, while it lasted.

Don Garrard, as Don Giovanni, is a likeable rogue, with the honest and innocent face common to all successful deceivers, and a bedroom baritone which might well have seduced its thousands. But it is his long suffering accomplice and scorekeeper, Leporello, gleefully played by Andrew MacMillan, who brings the show to life. Mr. MacMillan looks almost too comfortable in the role to be an operatic actor; Evelyn Gould is lively and coquettish as Zerlina, a pert peasant objective of the Don's. Don Ottavio, Donna Anna's honourable and colourless betrothed, has some beautiful tenor parts, and Leopold Simoneau does them full justice.

The Opera Festival Company is producing Don Giovanni, Carmen, and Madame Butterfly intermittently until March 10.

Students Plan Arctic Journey At HH Exploration Club Meet

A student expedition from Toronto to Edmonton northwards to the Arctic Ocean, across the Northwest Territories to Fort Churchill and back to Toronto is under consideration. Plans were examined at the Hart House Exploration Club meeting last Monday night.

It was thought, however, that this trip might not materialize until 1957. Members plan a trip to the Rockies this summer.

Also presented at the meeting were reports and color slides from the expedition to Algonquin Park. During the showing of the slides, comments on the problem of survival in the forest in winter were discussed.

Warden McCulley, who attended the meeting, said he was pleased at the suggestion of Exploration Society President Bill Angus, that the winter expedition to the bush be made an annual undertaking.

Student PC's Vote Rogers

Ottawa: (Exchange) — The Progressive Conservative Student Association last weekend decided at its annual meeting:

The people of Canada should own the proposed natural gas pipeline running from Alberta to Eastern Canada.

The federal government should give financial aid for education, "within the framework of the Constitution."

Students should be given income tax deductions for tuition and expenses.

Nineteen universities from the Maritimes to British Columbia were represented by over sixty students at the conference.

Ted Rogers (III Trin.), president of the U of T's PC Club, was elected a vice-president of the Association.

while NFCUS projects are worthwhile, they could be carried on just as effectively by a more streamlined organization.

The report recommended a substitute body with no permanent national executives. Various projects, such as art contests and exchange scholarships could be delegated to committees at the annual convention, the UBC report suggests.

The UNB decision was passed at a special meeting held in response to a student petition. SRC members decided to hold the referendum February 29.

NFCUS members opposed the motion for a referendum on the grounds that it would be too much work for them to defend. The petition constituted a want of confidence in the Students' Council, they said.

The UBC substitute proposal is modelled after the Pacific Students' Presidents Association, comprised of 70 west coast universities.

If the proposal is adopted by the student body, UBC will invite all Canadian universities to an immediate conference.

The conference would be to discuss all possible NFCUS alternatives, UBC said, not merely to adopt the UBC plan.

Two Views On Seniors

A survey on Senior Matriculation examinations, made last summer, does not agree with President Sydney Smith's annual report.

The survey, made for the Board of Education, called Senior Matriculation a "fairly reliable screening device" for university entrance. But the fact remains, according to the president's report, "we need more information about our prospective students . . . to give some direction to the selection process."

The survey, based on a study of 469 Toronto high school students who entered university in the fall of 1954, said: If you were under nineteen, got over 70 per cent in your Grade XIII exams, and had an IQ of more than 115 when you entered university, you probably would have passed a fairly difficult course in your first year.

Dr. Smith's report stated that "we are seeking evidence about the reliability of other tests . . . We have our doubts about the Grade XIII examinations."

The survey said that fifth form achievement is comparable with first year university achievement.

100 Foresters Hold Meet On Ontario's Land, Water

Over a hundred Forestry students and graduates at "the largest meeting of local foresters ever held in Toronto," suggested solutions to Ontario's land and water problems Tuesday night.

The joint meeting of the Forester's Club (from the U of T) and the Canadian Institute of Forestry decided:

That soil and water conservation, and increase of fish and wildlife population, an increase in recreational facilities, and greater production of forest products are necessary in Ontario.

That, to accomplish this, a proper system of land classification and careful planning in the management of all our renewable resources is essential.

Most suggestions came from a 'multiple use' panel. Multiple use involves efficient economic use of land, plus the use of the land for long-range conservation.

Intelligent forestry practice and coordinated dam systems can solve Ontario's present water problem, and stop the spring flood-summer draught cycle, the panel said. This should also increase wildlife, members said.

WARDEN STARS ON TV

Makes Debut on Friday As MC Of Ford Show

CBLT will carry the personality of Hart House Warden Joseph McCulley into Canadian homes every Friday night at nine, beginning this week.

"Graphic," as the show will be known, has no set format other than a Canadian panorama. It will be produced by the CBC for the Ford Motor Company of Canada.

"It will show Canada through her people," Warden McCulley said. "There will be personalities on it, some of them well-known, some of them unknown, but personalities nevertheless."

The first show will feature an Edward R. Murrow type gimmick, with Warden McCulley in a Toronto CBC studio interviewing Yousuf Karsh in his own photography studio in Ottawa. A visit to the RCAF Institute of Aviation Medicine in Toronto a segment showing spring fashions and a meeting with some Walter Thornton models will also be included in the Friday premier.

Downtown television columnists have waxed enthusiastic over Warden McCulley's television debut. The Ford Company, in undertaking the most ambitious program in Canadian TV, searched extensively for a personality to carry the show.

CBC plans, as announced in Toronto newspapers, are for filmed portions to be included in the program later. The first show, however, will be live.

Special theme music will be composed by Louis Applebaum, Graphic's music director. Mr. Applebaum will conduct the musical background for each program.

Ottawa Debaters Get NFCUS Trip For Overseas

London (Exchange) — French-speaking University of Ottawa debaters won a trip to Europe and the NFCUS Debating Association finals here Saturday night. This is the first time in several years the title has been won by a French-language team.

They defeated English-speaking Ontario Agricultural College debaters in the finals.

The University of Manitoba and Dalhousie University were eliminated in the semi-finals, Friday night.

Toronto had been defeated in the quarter-finals for the contest, in January, by Osgoode Hall.

Now that the contest has been won by an NFCUS member-university, the question whether a non-NFCUS university should be awarded the prize, becomes redundant.

McGill To Vote On Scholarship To Co-ed Lucy

Support for Atherine Lucy, the recently suspended Negro student at the University of Alabama, has spread to the McGill Students' Executive Council.

McGill SEC will hold a campus-wide referendum Wednesday to decide three proposals. These are:

- That McGill University SEC should send a letter of support to Miss Lucy, on behalf of students,
- That the SEC should offer her a scholarship at McGill if she is not readmitted to the University of Alabama,
- That if she is not able to accept such a scholarship, if approved, it be offered to another student who has suffered because of racial prejudice.

Funds for a scholarship would come from SEC revenue.

US Debating Tour; Results "Successful"

Toronto debaters Clyde Batten (III UC) and Moisha Reiter (III UC) returned last night, fresh from an "extremely successful" debating tour of three US universities and Assumption College, Windsor.

No decisions were made in debates at the US colleges but at Assumption, Batten and Reiter were given a unanimous verdict by the judges. They opposed the motion "Canada is unnecessary." They argued the same question at the University of Chicago and affirmed at Wayne University, Detroit, and the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., that "Co-education should be abolished."

"It was an unparalleled success," said Clyde Batten last night, "and a memorable experience."

SPS Freshmen Examine Riots, Probe Results

The engineering riot of September, 1954 has cropped up again in the department of English.

Freshman engineers are reading, as part of their English course, John Stuart Mill's "On Liberty". Dr. G. Cotter, lecturer in English has assigned the engineers an essay on the riot, and advised them to consult Varsity files.

The students are to discuss the action of the Caput and the fact that the SAC had no say in judging those involved in the fracas. They are to relate these, and other points, to appropriate chapters in Mills' book.

During the riot, Prof. W. J. McAndrew, registrar of University College, was injured as he tried to halt an onrush of engineering freshmen during a tour of the campus.

The Caput met later, suspended the Engineering Society's constitution and fined the society $4,000.

Rotary Prize For Sellers

Gabrielle Jane (Gay) Sellers, president of the UC Women's Undergraduate Association, winner of seven undergraduate scholarships, IV Modern History student, traveller, athlete, writer and debater, has been awarded a $2,500 Rotary club scholarship that will take her to Oxford next year.

Gay will read for a B.Litt. in Canadian history at Somerville College.

Miss Sellers has won the following scholarships at Varsity since graduating from Haverall College in 1952: Edward Blake Admission, George Wrong Memorial, John F. Gray Memorial, Reuben Wells Leonard Admission, Reuben Wells Leonard Social and Philosophical Studies, UC Alumnae Association, and Kappa Kappa Gamma International Undergraduate.

"I'm going to Oxford because they wear gowns here," she told The Varsity. "They may be black, but I'm not proud."

As WUA president, Gay campaigned for red undergraduate gowns in UC. She has also been EAC Rep and First Year President of the WUA.

She visited Japan last summer as Toronto WUS co-chairman. She has debated in UC's Parliament, acted in the Player's Guild, played hockey, softball and basketball and written for the UC Gargoyle and The Varsity.

Gay, born in 1934, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, is one of 128 students from 32 countries to receive Rotary fellowships

WHITE TO COACH BLUES

Dalt White Announced Gridiron Blues Coach

Dalt White, Assistant Football Coach at the University of Toronto for the past four seasons, was last night appointed Head Football Coach of the Varsity Blues. The announcement came following a meeting of the Athletic Directorate in Hart House. Jack Kennedy, who handled the Baby Blues last year, and Senior Basketball Coach John McManus were named as White's assistants.

Since the January 17th resignation of Bob Masterson, who left Toronto to accept a position as General Manager of the Calgary Stampede, the general consensus on the campus has been that White would take over. This conjecture was strengthened considerably by a quote from Harry Griffiths in the McGill Daily to the effect that "They (Varsity) don't have to look very far for a coach. They've got a first rate man right on the campus in Dalt White." To the casual observer, moved to Toronto's Western Tech, where he handled football, basketball and track. After five years there, he accepted a position as Assistant Director of Physical Education for the Ontario Department of Physical Education.

In 1951, Dalt joined the Athletic Staff of the University of Toronto, where he immediately took over the reins as Assistant Football and Basketball Coach.

"We'll certainly start next season without a big name on the roster," said White last night. "But we should be able to produce some before the football season's over."

The Blues lose the entire first-string backfield, with the exception of Harry Wilson, who is going on to OCE, and Ed. Skrzypek, Don Smith and Dick Risk have also bade farewell to Varsity football, as have Earl Ford, Bob Waugh and John Wismer.

"All we need is a successor to Phil Muntz," said White, and the first name to crop up as the most likely prospect to fill Muntz's cleats was Intermediate freshman star Tim Reid. The names of Larry Joynt, Stew Winter and Don Cornish also were mentioned as members of the Baby Blues likely to battle returnees Al Riva, Rich Bethune and Wally (Continued on Page 8) this would be merely a personal opinion, but it must be remembered that Griffiths was on the Varsity sports scene for a good while, before travelling to McGill to take over as Athletic Director. Dalt has never actually played football, but has a long coaching career behind him. He graduated in Arts from the University of Toronto in 1938, and took a year at Ontario College of Education.

For the next two years he was football coach at Port Colborne High School, where one of his halfbacks was Ted "Teeder" Kennedy, who later played for and captained the Toronto Maple Leaf Hockey Club. In 1940, Dalt coached his team to the Central Ontario High School Football Championship.

Value of Federation Discussed At Next EAC, SAC Meetings

By BOB BROWN

The question of the value of Canada's national student federation moved closer to this campus today.

A special executive meeting of the External Affairs Committee will be held next Monday to consider Toronto's continued participation in NFCUS. The question will then come before the SAC at their next meeting on March 7, said NFCUS Co-Chairman Ed Schofield.

The action of the Toronto committee follows hard on the heels of moves at the University of New Brunswick and at the University of British Columbia to pull these universities out of the national federation. Student referendums will be held at both these universities within the next two weeks on this issue.

Toronto's two NFCUS Co-Chairmen, Bill Smyth (III UC) and Ed Schofield (IV St Mike's), appear to be sharply divided on the question of Toronto quitting NFCUS.

Bill Smyth, the EAC Co-Chairman of the Toronto NFCUS committee, said that he was in favor of Toronto retaining its membership in NFCUS. But Schofield, the SAC head of the NFCUS committee, said that his views were different from Smyth's. He refused further comment until after the meeting.

Other comments were: Murray Mogan, SAC Finance Commissioner: "NFCUS is not adequate—and it can't be cured from within, NFCUS should be allowed to die a natural death. Probably in a few years a new organization will spring up, but . . . the present one cannot work itself clean."

Josephine Flaherty, Nursing SAC Rep: "I'm in favor of NFCUS." But in answer to a query about the efficiency of the national office, she said its inefficiency was "a well-known fact".

Sandy MacPherson, Meds SAC

Rep: "Although NFCUS is fine in spirit, it has consistently shown itself over the six years that I have been on this campus to be utterly impractical. Its record has been a long series of crises and evaluations, and each year the wish to give it one more chance, with no one having the courage to do away with it."

'Best Season' — Drama Critic

Some hope for the allegedly "dying" theatre of the North American continent was expressed here Monday by John Beaufort, one of New York's most influential drama critics.

Mr. Beaufort, critic for the Christian Science Monitor, gave the second lecture of a series on "Canadian Theatre," conducted by the Uof T Department of Extension. The lectures are currently being given weekly in the Nursing Building.

Although New York openings last year amounted to 73 as against 264 fifty years ago, he said, the percentage of "artistic and commercial successes" had increased. "In fact," he added, "This has been the best season of the post-war years."

The role of the critic consists of appraising the interpretative work of the artist, said Mr. Beaufort, "to say what he's doing and how well he's done it." Qualifications to do this, he said, included "a capacity to respond, a recognition of the public he serves, and an awareness of his own fallibility."

Women's Last Opportunity To Eat This Year In HH

Members of Hart House are invited to bring their lady friends to the third and last Hart House Invitational dinner of the year, this Friday evening, 6:15—6:45.

After the dinner there will be a short break during which members may show their guests through the House.

"The Intercollegiate Quartet Contest for the McDowell Barber Pole will start at 8:15 p.m." said Undergraduate Secretary, John Becker. "There will be five quartets competing: the Skulehouse Four from Toronto, and quartets from McGill, Montreal, McMaster, and Waterloo."

The quartet contest will be followed by coffee and cake in the East Common Room. Tickets for the dinner may be obtained at the Hall Porter's desk.

To Make A Vaccine....

duced, a proper culture media for the monkey kidneys, on which the polio viruses live, had to be found. Three research workers at the Labs eventually produced Media No. 199, a chemical tissue-culture media containing about 60 different ingredients. This media was selected by the United States Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, to make the vaccine that could be injected into humans.

Workers at the Connaught Labs had to overcome several problems before production could continue full-scale. Bacteria grow well on the kidney culture, but must be avoided. A completely aseptic technique has to be used, from the monkey to the final ampule of vaccine. The kidneys must be chopped with scissors into fine fragments, since automatic equipment cannot do a satisfactory job.

The vaccine is checked and double-checked by the Laboratories, and by the Federal Laboratory of Hygiene. Last year, vaccine was produced for 900,000 children. This year, two million should expect the inoculation.

On Campus, 7:30 today on CJB.C. will interview Varsity co-editors, Wendy Michener and Bob Brown and next year's editor Pete Gzowski. The editors will be interviewed by Ted Schaefer, the U of T student who MC's On Campus, a student program.

Virtually all the Salk polio vaccine produced in Canada has come from the University's Connaught Laboratories. They also manufactured most of the polio virus used in American Salk vaccine production for the 1954 trials.

Before the vaccine could be pro-

Ice Blues Meet Carabins In Varsity Hockey Finale Point Records Could Fall

Top Blue scorer Ken Linseman and his two line-mates are on the spot this Friday night when the University of Montreal Carabins are visitors on Toronto ice in the Blues' final league game.

Linseman, by scoring one more goal, can shatter the existing Varsity record, while a seemingly impossible nine points would break the league record for one season set by Carabins' Bernie Quesnel in 1953.

Even one more record can conceivably fall come Friday night when the Frenchmen make their last visit for the season. If Linseman and his line-mates, Don Cossar and John Akitt—and this is almost humanly impossible—can score eight points apiece, or 24 points between them, they can tie the existing record for one line; that set by Quesnel, Claude Dagenais and Claude Hotte in the season of 1953.

Quesnel fired 23 goals and picked up 15 assists in that season, while the other two added their efforts for a total of 97 points in 12 games. Varsity's big three have 73 points now, which is likely a record for University of Toronto teams, at least since the war.

Actually, if the Blues go all out, they will probably whip the Carabins by at least ten goals. Of this they are certainly capable, as the season's record has shown. In addition to this, the Carabins with absolutely nothing to lose, are likely to follow a rather obscure pattern laid down in the past and show up minus a full complement, which will add to their already apparent weakness.

In 1953 for the last game, which meant nothing to the final standings, the U of M arrived with nine players, and lost the contest to what was a relatively weak Varsity club 8-7. This Friday, if they do the same stunt, the story is likely to be somewhat different.

Blues are without injury, a state they have managed to retain for the whole season. Dave Jackson's game leg is responding to treatment, while John Macdonald has a bit of a swollen ankle. The little man fired two goals against McGill last Friday and seems to be finally hitting his regular pace.

Already intercollegiate champions for the second year in a row, by virtue of twin victories over the Redmen and Laval last weekend, the Blues should be very much at ease this Friday night. Such a situation is more than likely to lead to a slaughter in favor of the Blues.

Before the game the champion Varsity club will be presented with the Queen's Cup representing the Intercollegiate hockey title. After that spectators are likely to witness one of the best games of the season. It would be hardly worth missing.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

The appointment of Dait White as head Varsity football coach will put a stop to quite a few rumours we have overheard in the past month or two. Some of these suggestions have been perfectly reasonable, but these are far outnumbered by the ridiculous ideas some people have picked up in their trailers.

The first of these latter suggestions, which we caught while riding an elevator in Simpsons, was Johnny Metras. Mr. Metras is so tied up with athletics at Western that he couldn't be dragged away with a tractor-trailer.

Number two was none other than the ex-tenor manager of the Toronto Argonauts—Harry Sonshine. That suggestion came from a few steps over yonder in the Varsity news department. To them, the resignation of Mr. NFL Raicer from his Argo post, coming so close to the expected announcement of the Varsity coach could mean only one thing.

The third on the list was carried to us via a little birdie from Kingston. Up there, they were sure it was Al Pfeifer, who led the Big Four in scoring last year. Al still has a good deal of active playing left, and to propose that he take the job was just about as silly as Ike kicking Gus Braccia out of the U.S. Army and telling him to come and coach at Varsity.

Then some poor chap who occasionally graces the Varsity office suggested that the Sports Department take over en masse. Thanks anyway but we have enough trouble trying to make our box to print a picture of a hockey player when we have space enugh to the bottom three inches of his hockey stick.

And so they went. Dozens more were proposed, including just about everyone from Mayor Phillips to the Duke of Edinburgh. All this may appear to be rather irrelevant, but it does indicate one thing. The students and citizens who have any knowledge whatsoever of the happenings in Varsity sports are interested enough to be concerned about the month-long vacancy of the top position on the University coaching staff. We hope that they're satisfied with the choice. Dait White has spent most of his life in football circles, and his wide experience should prove invaluable. He's got a tough job in front of him, but we're willing to bet he comes through with flying colours.

Glancing about. Congratulations to our Women's Sports Editor upon her appointment as St. Hilda's SAC rep. . . She'll come through with flying colours too. . . If anyone mentions to you the possibility of a 12-page Varsity think of us and say "yes" . . . Any less space and we'll have to buy our own ads to print the Sports news in. . . It's not QUITE that bad. . . !

Dents Wallop Vic 7-0 In Interfac Playoffs

By JOHN VOJTECH

The intramural hockey playoffs got under way Monday at Varsity Arena with two games played and one game yesterday. Results were pretty well as were expected as Sr. Meds knocked off Dents' A 7-0. Jr. Vic took the measure of SPS 6 by a 4-0 score. St. Mike's C's scored the first upset of the playoffs by knocking off the highly touted SPS-4 team, 3-2, in overtime.

In the Meds-Dents game, Jim Wilks fired four goals to earn the star of the game tab. He scored three times in the first period as the Doctors completely outplayed the Dentists. By the second period, the Dentists ran out of steam and the pace began to tell on them. Wilkes added his fourth consecutive goal early in the period, Don Robertson, Vic Doray, and George De Veber added singletons to complete the rout.

Jim Gordon came up with the shutout and he was greatly aided in this by the good defensive work of Meds. Dent's goalie Walt Miladinov came up with nifty saves on Wilkinson, Day, De Veber and McDougall in that order in keeping the score down to what it was. Other Dents stars were John Kennedy and Bob Marshall.

St. Mike's C team came up with a surprise victory as Chuck Stock sent them on against Trinity A's tomorrow, as he scored midway through the overtime period. The game started with the Irish getting a quick goal by Mike Eustace. Leo McGuigan added the Irish second tally a few minutes later. It looked for a while as if the Irish would make a walkaway of it, but Skule came right back as goals by Peter Maik, on a breakaway, and Marv Larsen sent the teams deadlocked into the second frame. The period was the roughest seen around here for quite a while as both teams went at it tooth and nail. With three minutes left to go in the game, a donnybrook broke out with the players on the ice from both teams in the fight. Tempers cooled quickly as the referees got the game under control right away. This set the stage for the overtime in which the Irish went ahead to stay.

For Skule it was Larsen, Maik and Taylor who played their hearts out. St. Mike's players Terry and Kevin Wheeler, Tim Donovan, Jack Tait, and goalie John McRae, who came up with a terrific save on a breakaway by Maik, starred for this game.

Jr. Vic loafed to a 4-0 win over SPS-6, as McDonald sparked his team with a two goal effort. Woods, and Johns added singletons as the Jr. Vic team were content to check their opponents into the ground and wait for their chances. Brewer, Woods, Garet and Tanner came up with the shutout. McDonald played well for Vic, coming up with some good saves. Clarke, in the other nets, came up with a good save on McDonald. Thus, Sr. Meds will advance into the next round against Jr. SPS with whom they should have little trouble. Trinity A's will meet St. Mike's C team in what will prove to be a close game. Jr. Vic have the dubious distinction of having won their way into the next round to meet St. Mike's of Montreal Carabins in Varsity Arena. Ken Linse-

the band wagon

Hearken, brothers, for the fesson of today is on conformism.

Now conformism, as we all know, consists in jumping on the band wagon, in adapting one's self to the pressures of the majority who want to make everyone like themselves.

Conformism, is sacrosanct. First because it has the blessing of the majority, and anything goes in democracy, if it has the blessing of the majority. Secondly because it makes things a lot easier both for the government which finds it a lot easier to make laws when everyone is alike, and for the individual who is thus alleviated of the necessity of making up his own mind about what he ought to do.

We are not so naive as to advocate blanket non-conformism. This too is sacrosanct, although only to a self-righteous minority. They think that by automatically resisting all society pressures they are classing themselves with the few real thinkers in the world.

Anyone who has ever heard of Hobbes and his monster, and who has ever recognized the monster in himself, must be aware of the need for social pressures of some sort in order that human beings may live peaceably together.

The difficulty is, of course, in distinguishing which are the pressures that exist for the protection of the guy next door and which are those that exist solely for the preservation of the status quo whatever it may be.

Society pressures, holy as they are to both church and state, have never at any time been equivalent to a moral right. Conformity is rather the anti-Christ of true ethics, since it represents the adoption of standards who pretend the prestige of godness largely because of materialistic pressures and often involving no individual thought or personal decision.

Conformism is Newton's law of inertia posing as the ten commandments.

In Canada at the moment pressures of conformism dictate that black and white shall be equal before law as well as before God. Meanwhile to the South of us right out in the daylight a young negro student is the victim of all the fury of conformism scorned.

This single example should be sufficient to exemplify the separate natures of ethics and conformism. It also demonstrates the need for individuals who are willing to step out of line in order to change the status quo where it does not coincide with their ethics. It is easy for us from the position of different social pressures to recognize the "right" in this case.

But which of us can say that we would recognize an individual out of line with the pressures of our own particular conformity? Which of us can say that we look with equanimity upon the person who discusses masturbation in public, the person who wears a long beard, the person who would abolish the death penalty, the person who believes in communism, or the person who enjoys reading Greek?

And which of us can say that he would have the courage of this negro girl to face social censure for the sake of his private convictions?

Here endeth the lesson for the day. W.R.M.

British West Africa

Clash of Cultures

Both Marty Friedland, I Law, and Alan Cairns, Grad Studies, were in West Africa this past summer on a World University Service study tour. Here they give their impressions of British West Africa, one of the countries they visited.

Every country leaves one particular impression on the visitor. With the West African territories of the Gold Coast and Nigeria the overwhelming impression is of change, which manifests itself in bustling, hectic, confusing activity which is altering the structure of society. Canada is usually considered to be young, rapidly growing and dynamic, but the growth here has historical links with the past. It is evolutionary. In West Africa the change is revolutionary and represents a break with the past.

It has been born of a clash of cultures which often leaves the visitor with an impression of incongruity.

Nowhere is this more evident than in the mushrooming cities. Modern residences and striking government buildings are found beside ugly, congested shanty towns. Trucks, oblivious of traffic rules, careen down the cluttered roads. They represent the new society. However, they have far from replaced the universal system of the past—human transport. Women with babies strapped to their backs still carry immense loads, on their heads.

A short distance from a growing city the visitor will come across small villages which, at first glance, appear to have been bypassed still the stream of activity. The local chief will still possess dignity and power, and the appearance of a group of white students will be a distinct occasion. Even this however is deceptive. The feeling of peacefulness and rest is belied by the galvanized tin roofs which have occasionally replaced the traditional thatch. In addition the villagers are probably building for themselves a new school, a dispensary, a day nursery, a community center or other symbols of Westernization.

In fact, it is in the villages that the transformation is often most apparent.

The government in both countries lays great emphasis on village self help. Special government officers are assigned an area for which they are responsible in assisting and encouraging the villagers to do things for themselves. The results are impressive and bear striking testimony to the African's desire for advancement.

Contact with the west goes back to the fifteenth century. Until the twentieth century, however, this contact was localized, and in general confined to missionaries and traders, Nigeria was not united under British administration until 1914. In the Gold Coast the strong and cohesive Ashanti tribe was not effectively subdued until 1901. Since then contact has been both pervasive and constant, climaxed after the second world war with a tremendous acceleration of social, political and economic change which meets the visitor at every turn. The complete lack of white settlers meant that the Europeans who were the stimulus for this change were always numerically insignificant. Even now the number of Europeans in the Gold Coast and Nigeria is in the neighbourhood of 30,000, while the combined indigenous population of the two countries is 36,000,000.

OUR READERS WRITE:

Rubber-Stamping Table-Thumping SAC

Editors, The Varsity:

Last Wednesday night I was a spectator at part of the regular meeting of the Students' Administrative Council. During the time I was present two items of extreme importance were discussed.

The first of these was decided in camera. Apparently members felt that none of the student body (their electors) should hear what they had to say about the nominees for the editorship of The Varsity.

The second item was consideration of a report of the executive committee recommending censure for what committee members called "bad taste" in certain issues of the same paper. During the debate, none of the members of the SAC, apart from three on the committee and Robert Brown, editor of The Varsity, had anything to say about the censure move.

It appeared to an interested spectator that either:

(1) members of the SAC have nothing to say and are just enthusiastic table-thumpers thumping par excellence the impassioned speeches of last year's and this year's SAC presidents on and pro the recommendation, or else;

(2) they have something to say on controversial issues but do not wish to let anyone hear it.

The whole meeting seemed to run too smoothly at times. Many present, not members, felt, as I did, that members of the SAC are a rubber stamp for decisions made elsewhere.

Admittedly, this is only a small sample of the year's activities upon which to base an opinion of the SAC, but I feel students in general should take their representatives to task on various points, and ask them for more information about what they accomplish (I did not see my own representative at this meeting) and so see that student government is government by the students, through their representatives.

Rubber-stamping table-thumping is a travesty upon the name of student government.

To Love Nature Is Essential

Editor, The Varsity:

To love may very well be a fruitless sin, but to love nature, at least in the case of poets, is, even if sinful, essential. You however regarded this precious and unfortunately too beyond-worldly phenomena as below the dignity of the modern sophisticated poet.

But since nature has to be the basic subject matter of art, modern poets have to deal with it in some way. They very aptly reflect and emphasize their age by selecting the ugliest or most insignificant aspects of nature and reproducing them in the language of intellectual bums who are natural enough despite their unnatural education. The result is obviously an incoherently simplified and sensationally insufficient stab at self-created problems.

I know that loving nature is old and outmoded, very much like "loving" and "nature" itself. But a final stand for order and beauty would at least be pleasant, before the Varsity literary Issue will finally be hung among the trophies of abstraction in the mind's gallery of ugliness.

Otto Veidinger, II Pre Meds. A passionate lover of lonely nature.

Sorry

Editor, The Varsity:

Monday's Varsity contained a letter by me discussing the last S.A.C. Meeting. In describing the appeal by last year's President, on behalf of the Varsity, my first and third adjectives were personal. I am sorry that the personal friendship between last year's president and me was drawn into a public issue.

Murray A. Mogan, III Law.

Ed. Note: The adjectives referred to are "fuzzy-thinking" and "pseudo-liberal".

Not Much Fun

Editor, The Varsity:

With the exception of your "Life" format on the presentation page of your "Literary Issue" and of course your brown ink, I find the rather ostentatious internal planning sadly lacking in design, clarity and originality. While there may be an excuse for the incorporation of design elements which are very reminiscent of the Spring issue of the Undergrad 1955, still there is little excuse for confusion.

It may be of interest as a parlour game but having to turn handprints to associate pictures with captions and articles with authors is not much fun.

Gerald Finley, Grad Studies.

We Want Truth

Editor, The Varsity:

We would like to denounce Mr. Auseklic Perkons as a suppressor of truth. We cannot understand his indignation at Varsity's truthful representation of the facts in his picture entitled "Squalor and Poverty" (February 14 issue).

We would like to call his attention to the fact that at the same time there appeared a picture depicting "Luxury and Opulence" and the two pictures showed fairly both sides of the medal.

Tactless, our eye! We want the truth!

P. W. & R. S., II SP5

Thanks!

Editor, The Varsity: On behalf of the University Settlement, I want to express my thanks to the staff of The Varsity for the Settlement supplement which was published last Thursday.

I realize that this was indeed a co-operative venture, and that we are indebted to Hal Jackson for conceiving the project and we owe a very special vote of thanks to Mike Cassidy who gave so generously of his time in helping us gather the material, and in serving as the liaison between The Varsity staff and the Settlement.

Please convey our appreciation to the members of your staff for their assistance in making a very helpful project possible.

Jackson's 5 O'clock

Calvin Jackson, leader of the well-known Toronto Jazz quartet, will be the solo pianist at today's Hart House 5 O'Clock Concert. "Mr. Jackson's concert will be mainly classical," said Henry Best, III U.C., Secretary of the Music Committee. "He has had an extensive classical training and always enjoys an opportunity for solo work."

Mr. Jackson has used his talent in other fields besides public performance. He has written the scores for Hollywood and National Film Board movies, as well as the music for the Maria Chapeleine ballet. He has done a great deal of arranging for CBC orchestras. The Cal Jackson quartet has been appearing regularly for five years at the Park Plaza Hotel, with occasional road trips. Last fall they spent a week at Basin Street in New York and will return there as part of a proposed three month American tour this summer.

They have appeared on a transcontinental radio network, on their own TV program, and have made two long play recordings. Last fall the quartet came on the campus for a concert in Convocation Hall in aid of the Red Feather. The TSO featured them in a Pop Concert at Christmas, conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan.

Cal Jackson, today's Hart House concertizer, is seen with Howard Reay, drummer of the Cal Jackson Quartet.

UC'S PLAYERS' GUILD MAY MAKE LAST BOW

The UC Players' Guild, one of the oldest drama groups on the campus, may be disbanded this Thursday.

Members of the club's executive said Tuesday that a motion for dissolution would be put before the next open meeting of the club. "A general lack of interest this year seems to indicate that members of the college see no need for the drama group's existence," they said. The meeting will be held Thursday at 1:00 p.m. in Room 4 of UC.

"The motion is not sheer pettishness," said Charlotte Holmes, Vice-President of the group. "Nor is it a desperate publicity stunt to drag out an unwilling crowd. We feel that if the crowd is unwilling to attend, we have a valid reason for disbanding."

Stage-manager Wally Russell said that the only practical thing to do was to junk the present fuzzy setup and evolve a workable administrative system."

The Players' Guild is now completing its "most inactive year to date," said Dave Dunsmuir, President. Dunsmuir said that a main factor had been a heavy loss in a Hart House production in November, after which, "no-one seemed interested in a production that was financially less ambitious." A planned production of Euripides' Agamemnon had fallen through because of the time taken to round up a cast, he said.

"This year," said Miss Holmes,

"The club has been only the executive, more or less. Unless enough people prove to be behind next year's executive they'll find themselves in the same leaky boat."

"A few earlier-year members have seemed anxious to further college drama, she said. "And if they can persuade the club that it's worth saving, they'll probably save it."

Dunsmuir indicated that if reaction to the motion produced its defeat, nominations for next year's executive would be in order, provided those nominated had "some constructive ideas about the guild's function."

Group Goings-On

The Vic Madrigal Group presents a concert of madrigals and related choral selections today, in Wymilwood at 1:25 p.m. Included are works by Morley, a Church Cantata by Buxtehude, and a chorus by Buononcini. Another concert will be presented in Wymilwood Sunday at 9:00 p.m. The group's string accompanists, conducted by William Metcalfe, will then also present a String Suite from the dramatic music of Henry Purcell.

OCE COMEDY

Also today, OCE's annual three-acter will be staged in the college's auditorium. This year's production, which will run for two nights (curtain at 8:30), is Andreyeff's comedy, The Sabine Women.

VIC FRENCH CLUB COMEDY

Another three-act comedy will feature the final meeting of the Vic French Club. They will present Gabriel Hervilliez's A Louer Meuble, Monday, March 5, in Wymilwood's Music Room. The meeting begins at 8:00 p.m., and will include refreshments a la francaise and dancing to recent recordings of French orchestras.

hh glee club

Last Sunday evening, about fifty young men assembled informally before a large audience in the Hart House Great Hall and proved that, of all musical mediums, there is nothing quite like a male chorus to appeal to all tastes. The last of the regular Sunday evening concerts for the spring term featured the Hart House Glee Club, directed by Ward McAdam.

The audience was set at ease by the graceful manners of Mr. McAdam, whose occasional interspersed introductions to the music added humour and friendliness to the proceedings. Under his direction, the Glee Club demonstrated a versatility of both vocal technique and repertoire: they sang a program varying from Palestrina's Tonebrae Factae Sunt to the spiritual Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray, and, unlike many similar vocal units, actually demonstrated a stylistic difference in each selection.

This reviewer was impressed by the vivacity and exactness of their singing, but more particularly by their excellent diction, so clear as to be almost uncanny, especially in the humorous numbers where clarity was absolutely essential. The choir also sang with true tonal richness; the basses did not grunt the low notes of Schubert's Grave-Digger's Song and the tenors (not high baritones) sang the upper parts of Will Ye No

Come Back Again without straining.

The soloists who sang with the choir were well picked. Stuart MacKinnon's singing of Stanford's Song Of The Sea was rollicking and masculine. Jerry Epstein voiced a Negro quality into the spiritual and James Metcalfe was convincingly calypso-like in Marry A Woman Uglier Than You.

LOGAN'S PICNIC PACKAGE

One of the most difficult tasks that can face the talented motion picture director is the adaptation of a play from the legitimate theatre. The un-talented director, of course, has no such problems, since he just sets up his camera and photographs substantially the same action that took place on the stage. Picnic, the Pulitzer-prize winning play by William Inge offers an even more terrifying prospect than the average: it's one of the best plays of the past ten years or so.

Fortunately, the supremely gifted Joshua Logan has been permitted to film Picnic, which he originally directed for the stage, and which has been dedicated to him by the author. Not only has Logan's tense and moving style been transferred to the motion picture version, but the play has been ideally adapted to cinematic demands. So much so that when I read the play after I saw the film, it seemed disturbingly confined.

Inge's play is essentially a dramatic interplay of character hung on a seemingly inconsequential event: a Labour Day picnic in a small Kansas town. Into this lazy summer morning drops a wandering, muscled youth with a bragging tongue and a few part-time ambitions, who used to play football for the college that the scion of the town's leading family attended. Inge surrounds this sex-bomb with five lonely women: the vacuous town beauty and her artistic, tomboyish kid sister, their mother, who has never recovered from the hurt of her husband's desertion, an acid, frustrated schoolteacher of waning but luxurious beauty, and an elderly widow with no one to mother. Each has her own reasons for her loneliness, but for all five the answer is the same: a man. Before the hobo leaves town the following day he has, albeit scandal which will keep the town gossips busy for the next ten years Released onto the yawning expanse of the CinemaScope screen, Picnic has spilled juicily over the edges of the original play. Logan has taken advantage of every opportunity to increase Picnic's emotional and dramatic scope via the motion picture, and he has succeeded magnificently. This film has a breath-taking visual beauty and authority, and the director has fused the minute details of character observation which are found both on the stage and in the documentary film (but rarely in the commercial feature movie) with first-class performances from most of his major players.

As the hobo Hal, William Holden managed to cope with a part totally unsuited to him by sheer virtue of his own sincerity, and Susan Strasberg, daughter of the Actors' Studio's Lee Strasberg, plays the intellectual tomboy with charm and candour. Kim Novak's performance as the beautiful sister is more problematic. Most of the time she exhibits a laudable sincerity, but her lack of innate dramatic style and her faulty voice throws her performance completely out of key with the others.

Stage directors have a tendency to try and impose the restrictions of drama on the motion picture, but Joshua Logan has exhibited an unerring knowledge of the cinema's advantage on his first attempt.

Skule Foursome Meet Songsters

The Skulehouse Four sang their way to first place for the third time in three years, to win the seventh Hart House interfaculty quartet contest Monday. Runners up were the Archetypes.

With this win, the Skulehouse Four will enter the intercollegiate quartet contest this Friday evening in the Great Hall, after the Invitational dinner.

"The other finalists, the Archetypes, had the edge in balance and blend," said HH Undergraduate Secretary, John Becker, "but the Skulehouse Four had a tremendous edge in presentation." The Engineers' quartet edged the artsmen by 31 points out of 600.

The Skulehouse Four is an amateur group which has been singing on campus for three years. This year, it sang in Skule Nite '55, and went to the McGill Winter Carnival Revue. Last year, it won the first intercollegiate Quartet contest. Members of the quartet are Bob Hill (IV SPS), John Rumble and Don Elliott (III SPS), and Jim McKee (II SPS).

Quartets from McGill, the U of Montreal, Waterloo College and McMaster will compete Friday night with the Skulehouse Four for the McDowell Barber Pole, the trophy donated last year by former Undergraduate Secretary Garth McDowell when he started the intercollegiate contest.

The interfaculty contest was started in 1950 by Gerry Hart and Charles McCurdy, to give all ambitious quartets on the campus an opportunity to learn from competition and competent judges.

A College Without A Campus Frontier Educates Campmen

Due to the efforts of Dr. Edmund Bradwin, workers in the isolated part of Canada's frontier can receive the further education they need.

The college where they study has no fixed courses no entrance requirements, and no permanent buildings. Called Frontier College it extends from coast to coast wherever there are lumber, mining, construction or railway camps with workers who might profit from instruction.

The chief virtue of the plan, conceived over 50 years ago by the Rev. Alfred Fitzpatrick and Dr. W. E. Bradwin, is that it is completely adaptable to the individual needs of the workers.

The courses are prepared for four broad categories of campmen, new Canadians wishing to learn one of the official languages of Canada, younger men wishing to improve their education, "old-timers" wishing to discover new outlets, and semi-literate who want to learn to read, write and "figure".

The college depends for its instructors upon university undergraduates who take jobs in the same camp with the workmen and teach them at night. By sharing the same labor conditions during the day the teacher gains the confidence and respect of his fellow workers who are then willing to spend evenings attending classes.

Dr. Bradwin, the founder spent thirty years teaching. Approximately 2,000 men are enrolled in Frontier College classes each year, in 60 to 70 camps.

"In past years many U of T students have taken employment as laborer-teachers," said Roy McCurdy, former Varsity Blue. "I contributed to my basic education in the development of at least a meagre understanding of my fellow beings."

Representatives of Frontier College are visiting this campus tomorrow at 1:00 p.m. They invite male members of the campus to attend a showing of the NFB film Frontier College in the Music Room of Hart House, or to phone the Principal at WA. 1-7922 for information.

Annual Hart House Elections To Be Held On March 7th

Nominations for the Hart House committees, which were running at an all-time low late last week, took a sudden jump Friday. More than enough candidates for each committee have been nominated.

Seventy-three candidates for 40 vacancies are listed for the elections next week. Undergraduate Secretary John Becker said he was "very pleased" with the late rush of nominations.

Obituary

Campus flags at half-mast Monday marked the passing of Professor J. C. Robertson, Professor Emeritus in Classics at Victoria College. Professor Robertson was a member of the class of '99, and was Dean of Victoria University when he retired, in 1933. His funeral was Monday, in the Victoria Chapel.

Nursing Wins Trophy By 2% Blood Campaign Short 44 Pts.

Nursing has won the Blood Drive competition. Final results, released last night, show that Wycliffe and Forestry are both within 2% of winning the Skule Cannon Trophy. However, Nursing will be presented with the trophy at the next Students' Administrative Council Meeting, next Wednesday, with "great pomp and ceremony," said Nursing SAC Rep Josephine Flaherty, head of the Blood Committee, last night. The total number of pints collected is 1466, she said, according to official Red Cross laboratory records.

Miss Flaherty said the Blood Committee's records had shown about fifty more pints donated than the Red Cross's. She said she had checked the Red Cross figures and faculty enrolments too before announcing the final results, to be sure Nursing was not winning the trophy unfairly. P & OT were the greatest losers in the recount.

Engineering leads the whole university in number of pints donated, by nearly ninety pints, with 255. Because of their large enrolment, they stand low on the list.

Miss Flaherty said that sixteen men had given blood from Wycliffe on Monday and Tuesday, two-thirds of that college's total.

The campaign had been extended to this week so that medmen could give more blood than they had.

At the last SAC meeting, Wycliffe Rep Tom Robinson had threatened Nursing. Wycliffe would take the blood trophy away from Nursing, he said, in a last minute spurt this week.

For the complete, final, accurate, Red Cross results, please look to the box.

Protest Meeting, Tears and Pills, For UBC Girls

Vancouver BC (CUP): "Home Ec Staff Relents After Girls Collapse," read the headlines. The story, reported in The Ubyessey, stated that a protest meeting was held down under strain of assignments and "unwarranted personal disciplinary measures."

The Ubyessey is the student newspaper at the University of British Columbia.

In the story, no mention was made of what precisely were the "personal disciplinary measures." However, the paper stated that two fourth year girls were treated with sedatives at the University health service for nervous strain.

One fourth year Home Ec coed reported that one lecture ended up with half the class in tears.

The Home Ec students' president called some of the problems a "misunderstanding." Home Ec officials plan further meetings with students in an effort to clear up the situation.

Soc. Asks Coverage For Campus Events

The Engineering Society executive doesn't like The Varsity's campus news coverage.

Members passed a motion Tuesday that The Varsity is not doing an adequate job of covering campus activities.

They don't like NFCUS, either. They instructed their SAC reps to vote against the federation, in the light of the University of British Columbia's motion last week to set up an alternative organization.

Only member of the executive to vote against censuring The Varsity was Bill West, SAC rep. Jim Vasoff, Skule Nite producer, abstained.

No Varsity reporter was present at the meeting.

Paul Walters, Society president, said the motion was worded so that other colleges would be able to express their disapproval at next Wednesday's SAC meeting.

Walters said he felt coverage of campus activities has been inadequate. "There have been lots of activities that would have made good stories but The Varsity has failed to cover them."

Specifically, he mentioned (1) a story on cherry trees, written by Ron Kerr, publicity director, which had been, he claimed, first lost and then cut down and printed on the back page, (2) the proposed publication of an engineering year book, and (3) some pictures on a film which were also lost by The Varsity.

Other executive members were unavailable for comment last night. Gordon Kelly, first vice-president, was not at the meeting. He did not disagree with the action, he said.

Jim Vasoff, debating society president, felt censuring The Varsity was "paradoxical" consideration.

Question Editors On Paper Policy In Radio Forum

There has been talk on the campus lately about the proper function of a university newspaper. Last night on CJBK, Toronto, Ted Schaeffer, interviewed the editors of The Varsity, next year's editor-elect and two other students on this subject.

The discussion took place in Schaeffer's regular Wednesday night CBC Dominion network program "On Campus".

"The function of a campus newspaper was to be a glorified bulletin board and a guide to campus opinion" said co-editor Brown.

Student-staff relations at Varsity are none too cordial, said Miss Michener. "The Varsity should be able to do something to improve communications."

In reply to a question of how to accomplish this, she said The Varsity could carry news about professors and their opinions of student affairs. "Many professors, she said, "were unwilling to offer comments and had no interest in reading or writing for The Varsity".

The editors agreed that censorship of a campus newspaper should be conducted solely by the hiring and firing of the editors.

"When the Students' Administrative Council hires an editor, it should be prepared to place confidence in him," said Miss Michener.

Laborers Learn From Frontier U. — A New Light For Rugged Minds

The college without a campus is looking for professors.

Frontier College, a nation-wide organization that tries to reach workers who desire a further education, will be presenting a National Film Board movie, Frontier College, in Hart House today at 1:00 p.m. in the Music Room.

The college is interested in finding students who are willing to take jobs in the same work camps as the people wanting instruction. The students share the same working conditions as the men, thus gaining their respect and confidence.

Then the student-teacher will nold classes during the evening with the same men as he works with during the day.

Dr. Baldwin, the founder of Frontier College, stated that each year approximately 2,000 men, in 60 to 70 camps, participate in the project.

The program's chief virtue, said Dr. Baldwin, is that it is completely adaptable to the needs of the individuals participating.

The work that the students selected as College teachers will go to is in construction, railroad and other camps scattered across Canada. Those interested should attend the meeting today, where Frontier College officials will be present to answer questions, or phone the Principal at WA. 1-7922.

No Candidates Or Members At HH Nomination Speeches

Both candidates and members were missing today as the annual nomination speeches for the Hart House elections began.

About 50 students were present to hear 13 of the 24 nominated for the House Committee speak. The other 11 students nominated did not show up.

Undergraduate Secretary, John Becker, hazarded the opinion that "things are usually slow the first day."

Mr. Becker also said perhaps more candidates would have spoken if there had not been such a large number standing for election to the House Committee.

Speeches will continue today and tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. in the East Common Room.

Owner Fined — Anti-Negro

Chatham: (Special)—A Dresden restaurant owner was convicted here yesterday under Ontario's discrimination laws for his refusal to serve two negro U of T students on Nov. 12 last year.

Morley McKay, whose similar conviction last year had been later reversed by a higher court, was ordered to pay a fine of $50 and court costs of $311. The two students involved are Percy Bruce (III UC) and Jake Alleyne (Occasional).

Maritime Money For Student Aid

Ottawa: (NFCUS Items) — A $500 university entrance scholarship has been established by the Atlantic Region of the national student federation.

Delegates from the Atlantic universities, meeting last month at the University of New Brunswick, decided to establish the scholarship. The money will be raised by local NFCUS committees on the various campuses, and it will go to a high school graduate who could not otherwise attend university.

On February 29, it's Marriage Or A New Dress?

By MARY JANE ROWLEY
Varsity Staff Reporter

Yesterday was Leap Year Day. All over the campus, the bravest men, even the dauntless engineers, huddled around in frightened groups looking cautiously around before venturing a single step.

When I approached a member of the second-greatest sex to ask politely if I could borrow a piece of paper, he took off as though he had just seen Frankenstein's mother!!!

And where did this sneaky (from a male point of view) custom begin? Nobody really knows for sure, not even the Encyclopedia Britannica, as I discovered yesterday afternoon when I trotted over to the library to get some information on the subject.

According to another source, the custom supposedly started with an incident between St. Patrick and St. Bridget. However, it did not state just what this incident was so I leave you to draw your own conclusions.

About the year 1228 in Scotland, a law was passed which stated that during Leap Year, a woman could woo the man of her choice with words or looks in whatever manner she pleased.

If the man refused her, he was fined, unless he could prove that he was engaged to another girl. The same law was later passed in France and Italy. During Leap Year beans supposedly grow on the wrong side of the pod.

There, briefly is the reason why all the red-blooded husky men of the campus looked like timid mice caught in a trap yesterday. Here's hoping you took advantage of your big chance girls.

Remember if your quarry for some unknown reason turned you down, he has to buy you "a new silk gown," at least according to the old English custom. This could run into dough, fellows.

Support of Lucy Called 'Meddling' By Americans

Winnipeg, (CUP) — Letters naming Canadians as "meddling" and believers in "lousy British justice" were published this week in the University of Manitoba paper, The Manitoban.

The letters were from the United States and came following the sending of a telegram to the University of Alabama protesting the treatment of Autherine Lucy.

FLASH — U.S. court orders Autherine Lucy readmitted to Alabama U. by March 5.

A negro co-ed attempting to gain entrance to Alabama U. The Manitoba Students' Union sent the telegram after Miss Lucy's suspension.

A letter from Tallahassee, Fla., charged Canadians with keeping "your Negroes a hundred years behind ours and you still treat them like animals."

Redmen Down Skule Fifths 5-2 To Advance In Hockey Playoffs

Sr. UC moved on into the next round of the hockey playoffs by virtue of a 5-2 victory over SPS V in yesterday's activity. However the Artsmen were given a very stiff battle as the Engineers started off at a dizzy pace and were not outplayed by as much as the score indicates.

SPS fought on even terms with UC for most of the first period until Nadin scored for UC on a slapshot from inside the blueline. This goal, scored with about two minutes to go in the first frame, seemed to take most of the starch out of the SPS attack and it proved to be just a matter of time before UC's superiority was brought out.

On the second period it seemed as if the game was going to become a rout as UC potted three goals in a little more than three minutes. Green made it two nothing as he picked the far corner on a two-man break with Dysart. The lone SPS defender fell in trying to check Dysart and this left Green open for his drive.

By AL TONON

Naylor scored the third UC goal a minute later as he picked up a good pass from Jeans and let go with a labelled shot to the open corner of the net. Hugo duplicated Green's feat on a colourful rush that had the SPS goalie, Valenti, beaten from the moment it left his stick. Laywine scored his first of two goals for SPS as he flipped the puck over the prostrate UC goalie who had gone down to stop a shot which bounced off the post into the Skuleboy's stick.

Less than half a minute later Scott got the goal back for the Artsmen as he broke into the clear and drove a wicked shot at which Valenti waved rather hopelessly. Although obviously beaten the SPS squad still had some fight left in them as Laywine scored on a pass from Shannon which set him in the clear.

UC came up with a brilliant team effort which can be seen by the fact that no player on the team scored twice. Martini and Hugo played a great game on defence for the UC squad and pipe custodian, Lepoidevin, made some good stops on the shots he was called on to handle. For the underrated SPS squad, Smith, Shikaze, Klauke and Molinaro turned in a great offensive game. They were backed up by steady defensive work by Shannon and Skrzypek as well as Valenti, who had no chance on the five shots that did get past him.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN BROOKS

Earlier this hockey season, we got ourselves quite heated up over the refereeing in the Toronto Hockey League Major Series. As a matter of fact, we came back from a game one night and produced a column which would have made the first honest referee who exer existed turn over about ten times in his resting place. Not only would it have disturbed those who "rest in peace" but, (and if we can be absolutely corny) we would likely have been "resting in pieces" come the next time we ventured northwards to Varsity Arena.

Fortunately for all concerned, we had no room to run a column on that particular night, so it was stashed away for the next issue. The next day, the column met its fate in the waste basket. Better sense prevailed. Sure, everything that was produced was true, but everything that was produced was also in defence of the Varsity Whites' hockey team. The Whites were mired deep in the cellar at the time, and although we naturally didn't like to see them there, we forgot for a moment that all teams get a raw deal from the refs now and then.

The incident was forgotten and life returned to normal with the cold weather. The little ditty which follows turned up in our office the other day and brought back memories of the day when we called those birds everything under the sun that was printable in The Varsity and more besides:

*I think that I shall never see
A satisfactory referee,
About whose head a halo shines,
Whose merits rate reporters' lines:
One who calls them as they are,
And not as I would wish by far.
A gent who leans not either way
But lets the boys decide the play,
A guy who'll sting the coach who yaps,
From Huskie Town or other saps,
Poem are made by fools like me
But only God can referee.*

They are supposedly doing their best, especially if they carry the crest of the Ontario Hockey Association on their shirts. Most of our beef in that column was against calls made by the officials, but there was one page or two devoted to an incident which involved the referee and a fan which certainly was not in the better interests of the league of referees. In our unabashed criticism, we were shaking a finger of ridicule in the direction of two referees who handled a game between Kingsway and the Whites and in which one of the refs took it upon himself to move the fan, who had been heckling him constantly from the rail seats. Fans have been yelling blue murder at officials since time immemorial, and it's the duty of the referee to ignore the razzing and carry out his job on the ice. This one didn't, and no one was more embarrassed than he when the fan laughed back and stayed where he was. Now things like this don't happen very often, but when they do, they are proof that referees are human too. They've got one of the hardest jobs in the world, and it's pretty difficult for them to pay no attention when they hear themselves labelled from complete idiots to dehydrated jackasses. For officiating to suit everyone, though we'll have to agree—only God CAN referee.

Intermediate Girls Victors Defeating Western 32-31

By FLO MIDDLETON

In an exciting game on Monday, the Varsity Women's Intermediate Basketball team squeezed out a close 32-31 decision over the Western Intermediate team. In their best game of the season, the Baby Blues ended the unbeaten streak of the London squad and avenged the defeat by Western of the Senior Blues last weekend.

Exhibiting a determined effort to win, the Toronto team had a definite edge over Western on floor play during the first quarter. In spite of the deadliness of the Western forward line, Barbara Campbell and Arleen Seaman played well, breaking up plays with many interceptions and fast breakaways.

Towards the end of the first half, both teams played a more defensive brand of ball with Toronto having the slight edge in the scorers' books.

The second half opened with Toronto only ahead by two points and the erratic playing was a good indication of the tension. Western seemed to score every time they had the ball, but Toronto managed to keep up with UWO on free throws and the accurate shooting of starry Jill Segond.

Going into the last quarter of play, the score was tied and from there on in until the final buzzer went, the game was anyone's. The lead in the game exchanged hands several times, but on the average Toronto managed a one point edge.

In the last minute of the game, the score was tied when Rosemary Burns was awarded a free throw. The basket was made and Toronto won the game 32-31.

High scorer for the Blues was Jill Segond with 12.

Varey Captures Seventh Straight

Bill Varey (PHE) climaxed his indoor track season on Tuesday by capturing his seventh straight event. He copped the two mile senior run with a near-record time of 9:50.8. Ron Toop (UC) was close behind, with Bill Gelling (SPS) and Bruce Hughes (UC) finishing third and fourth.

Bill Leslie (SPS) won the junior two mile, followed by fellow Engineers Pete Sidorchuk and Don Pearce. Skule continued its relay dominance over UC by whipping the Red and White in the mile relay. Don Shepley, Doug Mason, Bill Gelling and Dick Harding turned in a fine 3:50.6 effort.

In the final events, Victoria's Normie Williams won the senior standing broad jump with a leap of 9'12". Runners-up were Don Shepley, Bill Sayers (Vic) and Bruce Faulkner (Pharm). The junior jump was taken by Angus Bruneau, while Canzi and Sidorchuk placed second and third. Next week's final meet will consist of the distance medley relay (2 x 3, 1 x 6, 1 x 12), shot put and high jump.

Reed Trophy At Stake

With the interfaculty playoffs well underway in all sports, interest is running high in the Reed Trophy race. Due to the fact that the final issue of The Varsity is not until March 16th, it is hoped that the final standings in the competition will be available at that last roundup issue.

Interfaculty sports on the Toronto campus began back in 1893. In 1936, further interest and rivalry was added to an already flourishing system when T. A. Reed, then Financial Secretary of the Athletic Association, donated a trophy, bearing his name, to be awarded annually to the faculty or college gaining the most number of points throughout the year.

As the number of participating entries increased to the present seventeen, a division was made according to registration. An All Year High Point Championship is awarded to the winner of each division, and both have their names engraved on the trophy.

In addition to the Reed Trophy, cups are presented for almost every interfaculty sport, from basketball down to water polo.

St. Mike's from Division One and Law from Division Two are the defending champions of the Reed Trophy. At the Christmas tabulations, Law had retained its lead in the second division, but SPS had replaced the Irish at the top of the first division.

The Reed Trophy, which stands in the Hart House trophy case, is likely one of the most magnificent trophies of its kind.

Sports Staff

All members of the Varsity Sports Staff are requested to drop down to the office and pick up assignments for the March 16th Final Issue. Assignments (with lengths) are posted on the Sports bulletin board. All copy must be in by 10:00 p.m. on Sunday, March 10th.

We're Done For!

We ran across this shot the other day in the Varsity Sports photo morgue. To our way of thinking, it's one of the best crowd shots we've run across in a good while. The gentleman standing on the left is ex-Varsity coach Bob Masterson. Note the young lady near the top right corner of the picture—guess she was a Western fan!

UC Gals Top Victoria 2-1 Earn Hockey Playoff Spot

"A Thriller!" This is the only word that can be used to adequately describe the girls' hockey semi-finals at 4:00 p.m. Monday. UC's 2-1 in overtime. Both teams went out on the ice prepared to fight hard for a victory. The play was hard and fast for girls' hockey, but most of all it was exciting. One of the best moments of the year (mostly Vic supporters) saw some breath-taking saves by both goalies. Joyce Klef, keeper of Vic, and Elaine Sossin of U.C. Both played outstanding games between the pipes.

Peg Mahaffey of UC, opened the scoring for the home team to give UC the lead 1-0. Vic soon rebounded with a goal scored by Joyce W. ...

The second and third periods saw no scoring but there were many thrills, with both teams checking closely and playing hard. The regulation time ended with the score tied one all, and so it was decided to play overtime, with the first goal to be a sudden death goal winning the game. The winning goal was scored by Barb Wilkinson of UC, after about four minutes of overtime play, thus ending the game and making the score 2-1 in favour of the U.C. girls.

If this game is any criterion of what the finals will be like, they are sure to be exciting. Let's have some spectators out on Monday and Friday at 4:00 p.m. to see P.O.T. 's and U.C. 's battle it out for the championship in a ...

look around, brother

The decision of NFCUS to lend its official support to Autherine Lucy, a negro student fighting to get into the University of Alabama, has underlined the problem of civil rights, both in the United States and in Canada.

In the United States, the recent decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in schools has been met with the greatest amount of resentment ever felt by the South since civil war days. The southern whites, fearing for their social and economic position, are determined to obstruct any attempt by the negroes to gain full rights.

Yet the problem in the South is by no means so simple. It is not merely to protect their own interest that the southern whites are fighting so vehemently against "integration" with the negro community: it is to defend a way of life, and ethical beliefs.

Many in the South sincerely believe in the stand that they have taken, opposing the granting of equal rights to the negro race. It seems senseless to us, that a people so dedicated to a constitution whose principles are fundamentally opposed to segregation could still give such whole-hearted opposition to civil rights for the negro. But the rationalization of the South's position was accomplished long ago, and by now is deeply imbedded in the social consciousness of the area. The problem, if it is to be solved must be approached sensibly and cautiously, with the emphasis on the long-run solution of education, and not the short-run one of force.

Here at home in Canada, we have often felt superior to the Americans with their racial problems. But how much of our superiority is due to our own tolerance, and how much to the fact that we have no large numbers of a different racial group? Where Canada has had occasion to deal with its minorities — as in Dresden — our record has not been too good.

It may be that we should also spend some time examining our own conscience, as well as dispatching telegrams and messages of sympathy to the South.

Tolerance, like charity, begins at home.

we're at it again

When there is nothing else to talk about, the time has arrived for talking about Student Apathy (the worst kind).

Apathy is being more interested in sex and alcohol, which are likely to influence the lives of every one of us profoundly, than in football games, Hart House debates, Mock and/or Model Parliaments, the SAC, or student editorials, all mercifully unlikely ever to influence anything.

Apathy is the antisocial practice of coming to university to learn something, studying when you should be out raising hell, and passing finals.

Apathy is not giving a fiddler's hoot about those countless initialled organizations which shall not be named here, in case anyone is skimming this editorial to make sure it isn't about them.

Apathy is — aw the hell with it.

Harsh Denunciation of Socialism

This "harsh denunciation" of socialism was written by R. M. Renfrew, a student in first year engineering. Renfrew's thesis is that Socialism is an atheistic philosophy that lacks real roots.

A passage from the Russian writer Dostoyevsky forms the basis of discussion in this essay, and it might therefore be wise to quote it immediately.

"As soon as he reflected seriously, he was convinced of the existence of God and immortality, and so at once instinctively said to himself, I will accept no compromise! In the same way, if he had decided that God and immortality did not exist, he would at once have become an atheist and a Socialist. For Socialism is not merely the labour question; it is above all things the atheistic question—the question of the Tower of Babel, built without God, not to mount to Heaven from earth, but to set up Heaven on earth."

The foregoing is a most thoughtful and thought-provoking statement, and if one considers George Orwell's Animal Farm with it in mind, a most worthwhile discussion evolves.

Since the story of the Tower of Babel figures so largely, let us consider the details of its story. The people had settled in a very satisfactory location, and after they had become accustomed to the daily existence, they decided that fame and comfort could be gained by the construction of a tower which would reach up to Heaven, thus giving them direct contact with the Deity.

However, seeing their labour, God was immediately aware of their intent, and stopped the work by causing a multitude of languages to be spoken where previously all had spoken the same. Their consequent complete failure to understand one another resulted in an ignominious scattering to other parts of the land.

Few stories are so engagingly descriptive of the course of history. If the story was prophetic, then certainly the prophecy has been fulfilled. Without exception, every human attempt to set up a Utopia on this earth has failed, and the grander the attempts, the more abysmal have been the failures. Unquestionably, most of these attempts have been established with a sort of "brotherhood" aim in mind.

Outstanding examples of these are Communism, the British Labour Party, the League of Nations, and possibly the United Nations which has so far accomplished very little of what it sought to do. Each one has ended in squabbling, division, and often open warfare. As soon as the crisis has passed, the brotherliness disappears, and we are again in the factual world.

Dostoyevsky has actually summed up Socialism in the only practical and realistic way ever encountered by this writer. Socialism cannot admit God. This would defeat the attempt at the outset, for if one postulates that man can "lift himself by his own bootstraps" then there cannot be a God who reigns supreme and is so pure as to be humanly inaccessible. By Socialist theory, man, through the improvement of his environment, will gradually elevate himself to a position of completion and harmony similar to the perfection found in the rejected Heaven.

Anyone who has read Animal Farm will recall that at the outset of the revolutionary period "Sugarcandy Mountain" was proclaimed a sheer fable, and whenever it was recalled, it produced mental disturbance in the mind of the animal concerned; it was not reconcilable with the doctrines of the revolution.

Yet where do these standards of perfection originate? Surely in the atheistic theory! Was not the aim of the animals in Animal Farm to attain the ideals of comfort possessed by the humans! That is precisely what Dostoyevsky has said. Heaven is to be set up on earth. To do this, there must surely be an original Heaven as the model. Therefore it would seem that the Socialists have built a golden palace on a brass foundation, to evaluate things by their standard.

Perhaps a closer analysis of Socialism might bring to light a few undesirable features. In the novel, Animal Farm, it may be recalled that the revolution was planned by a thoughtful mind but executed, in a moment of hot-headedness, by a number of extremely dull ones. Does not this suggest something to the enquiring mind? Have not the great Socialist "reforms" been carried out in moments of passion? Consider the French Revolution, the post-war British Labour Party reforms, the Russian Revolution, the Peasants' revolt of England's history, and many others.

These were all excellent in thought, regrettable in deed. The thought of Heaven on earth is agreeable to everyone, and rightly so, but each time its fulfillment has been attempted, it has been accompanied by barbarity, excess, horror, and the worst in human failure.

The thought of God is always far from the minds of these great geniuses who advance Socialism, and He means nothing at all to their followers.

Yet those who are more conservative in their thinking, ready to admit the possibility, though not perhaps the actuality, of the existence of God, are usually shy of radical Socialism. Of course, it is preposterous to say that no social advances should be attempted. Does not the code attributed to God lay down the most stringent rules of human behaviour which, when examined, provide a most suitable base for social advancement?

It is not an exaggeration to say that, when religion flourishes, principally Christianity, there also flourishes artistic beauty, culture, progressive thought, and consideration for one's fellows, yet where radical socialism abounds, there is a distinct lack of thought, but just enough thought to prevent a race of "numbskulls," and tremendous technical progress, but at the expense of many of the finer things of life.

This may seem to be a very harsh denunciation of Socialism under a mark of comparison. It is not! It appears as such only because we are accustomed to resolving the two under one heading—Liberalism.

But such diametrically opposing qualities cannot be resolved. One must overcome the other, and that is why Dostoyevsky's analysis is so true. He recognized the facts of the situation, and from a close contact with both sides was able to divine the nature of the conflict.

U of T's Graphologist Honey-Haired UC Student Does Character Analyses

The human character has always been an object of fascination down through the centuries. The ancient Egyptian kings used to employ readers who were supposed to be able to ferret out and interpret the inmost secrets of the heart. The Chinese thought that character was revealed in dreams. And in more recent times, writers like Dostoyevski and Dickens believed that character was amply revealed in physical features, in the shape of the mouth, the length of the nose, the size of the ears etc.

The 20th century's contribution to the ever intriguing occupation of character revelation is called graphology—the interpretation of handwriting. Among the earliest people to have his handwriting examined was Augustus Caesar who had his handwriting analysed by C. Suetonius Tranquilinus in 2 A.D. As far back as the eleventh century, the Chinese had noticed peculiar relations between personalities and their handwriting.

In 1622, through the encouragement of Camillo Baldi, an Italian, the school of Abbe Michon, the originator of the term graphology was founded. Baldi recognized the fact that all people write in an individual way and that these traits of character can be recognized in any handwriting. Among later amateur graphologists were Goethe, Poe, Browning and Gainsborough.

All About Andy

By TONY NOXON

Did I ever tell you about Andy? No? Well, perhaps not. Andy was an acquaintance of mine whose most notable characteristic was his love of sports. He was a real sportsman and athlete. He regularly read the sports pages, not only of the morning paper, but of the two evening papers and the weekly supplement. He listened regularly to the sportscasters, enthralled by their accounts, and moved by the quiet and reasonable way in which they gave them. He also watched all kinds of sports—hockey, baseball, rugby, boxing (his favourite), etc.

Andy didn't just keep his opinions and his love of sports to himself. Oh no. He was always extolling the virtues of sports. "Yes sir," he would say after an exhausting morning watching tournament golf, "yes sir, there's nothing like a good game of golf—keeps you fit, keeps you in condition, keeps you on your toes. Yes sir, there's nothing like sports to keep you on your toes I always say." Indeed, he was always saying it. How well I remember his saying it after a brisk, bracing walk from the stadium across the street to the car park, or after a particularly strenuous session winding his watch.

By the end of the nineteenth century close studies were being made of the graphometer process by psychologists. The Encyclopedia Britannica states: "studies in which scientific controls are used do not invariably disprove the claims of graphologists. Significant group differences have been found; but so far, any application of it to test individual traits is uncertain."

Unknown to many, there is an amateur graphologist here on the campus. She is honey-haired Judy Bostock, a first year student in Eng. Lang. and Lit. at UC, who arrived from Britain last August. A native of Somerset, eighteen-year-old Judy first became interested in graphology while attending a Roman Catholic convent where she picked it up as a pastime between exams. She is also interested in palmistry and the interpretation of dreams and omens.

In analysing handwriting, Judy follows this form. The most important thing is first to assess the speed of the writing. She also tries to get hold of a personal letter, or a piece of writing in which the writer is emotionally involved. She tries to detect signs of falsity or to detect if anyone has deliberately changed his manner of writing.

The writing is then placed in one of ten classes, depending on, among other things, slope of line, formation of letters, and spacing of words. For example, a downward trend in a slow-writing hand indicates depression on the part of the individual, while an up-sloping hand usually indicates a large dose of self-confidence.

Further indications of character, says Judy, are adjustments, that is the initial joining of letters to one another within a word, and the pressure of strokes. A heavy line, for instance indicates aggressiveness while a light one suggests timidity. Simplification or embellishments indicate, generally speaking, humility or pride.

Lampman, Famous Canadian Poet Former Student of Trinity College

By WILLIAM CHADWICK

High on the left-hand wall of Trinity's Convocation Hall is riveted a stone plaque, with its centre the profile of a man's head done in bronze bas-relief. But for an unruly curl hanging loosely over the forehead, the face, with its clearcut features and aristocratically curled moustache, is typically Victorian. It is also a young face. On the plaque are inscribed the words "Archibald Lampman, class of 1882."

Lampman was born in 1861 in the rectory of Trinity Church, Morpeth. At fourteen he went to T.C.S. and four years later enrolled at Trinity University, where, contrary to expectations, he graduated with only second-class honors.

However, this is not surprising since he was editor of Rouge et Noir, (now The Review) and scribe to Father Episkopon, and his academic studies must have suffered accordingly. As he writes in a letter to a friend a few years later, "the exigencies of a college education weigh on one like a kind of famine, and when I look back on it now it seems to me that a man cannot be expected to do anything original while lectures and examinations are hanging, however remotely, about his imagination."

There is little doubt that he was generally liked at Trinity, mainly because of his kindly nature and enlivening conversation.

While still a small child, Lampman had developed a deep love for the beauties of nature, and when working as a civil servant in Ottawa he always spent his holidays on long canoe trips or hikes through the wilds of Northern Ontario. Like Wordsworth, whom he most resembles in his poetry, he was happiest when surrounded by the natural beauties of the countryside for he too, was deeply conscious of the still sad music of humanity, and one escaped it by taking possible from the din of cities.

Unlike Wordsworth, though, he never immortalized the simpler types of human being, and consequently, his poetry is concerned solely with Nature, though even here he never managed to parallel the sublimity of the Lake poet. His forte lies in his ability to record detail and capture feeling. In a poem called Heat, where he is describing the progress of a hay wagon along a dust-thick country lane on a furnace like summer day, he says:

By his cart's side the wagoner
Is slouching slowly at his ease.
Half hidden in the windless blur
Of white dust puffing to his knees.

Archibald Lampman wrote good poetry, but he did not write great poetry. His particular abilities, well defined before his early death at the age of 38, is best summed up by L. C. Cayley in his obituary appreciation of Lampman in the Trinity Review in 1899.

"Above all, Lampman was a Canadian poet, and it was of Nature as she appears under Canadian skies that he sings, and so teaches us to open our eyes to that which we had never seen before. He loves the great Mother and he can make others share a joy that is all too rare." Those who love the Canadian countryside and especially its northwoods will find in Lampman's poetry the best expression of its sights and sounds, and those who enjoy poetry will find in his simplicity a blessed relief from the incoherency affected by modern

Engineers Rap Varsity

Commenting on the motion against NFCUS, Walters said he thought a new organization, such as that proposed by the UBC Students' Administrative Council would lead to reappraisal of a national union. He said he understood 80 per cent of NFCUS's operating expenses went for administration.

All members of the executive, except Jim Vasoff, voted against NFCUS. Last year, following long and heated discussion, the society voted 11-9 to support the federation.

In previous years, the society has appointed a "Varsity rep" to notify the paper of upcoming events. This practice has been dropped. Walters said the executive meets every two weeks and The Varsity should send reporters around to see if they would be welcome.

The president said he had talked to students of other colleges about the matter and they agreed that The Varsity has been negligent.

"They seem to have lots of time to write stories about Philosophers' Walk, but they ignore several campus activities."

He said coverage of the recent society elections had been "not bad" but that advance publicity was inadequate. Walters said he had talked to Bob Brown, co-editor of the paper, before the elections.

"Power" Blamed For Bad History

"Power is the reason for the great lie in history," said Rev. W. L. Lyndon Smith, professor of Church History in Trinity College recently. The subject of his address was "History and the Big Lie."

Describing history he remarked: "History starts with the human itself and therefore is the most humane of studies."

"Theologically one would expect a Christian to have an advantage in being a historian. Christianity is based on a historical character and the very idea of man and his significance is seen sympathetically and respectfully."

Both in the religious and political world, said Lyndon Smith, native will makes intelligence its slave and the will works for power. As Christian faith loses its hold, disintegrates or moves into the realm of the state, the state in turn moves into the realm of the church. The complete balance, he pointed out, lies in the theory of the state as physical and the church as moral and spiritual.

"Men, the speaker concluded, will not follow you for freedom, but for power. Power respects nothing except in that it can use it. Our hope is that the follower of lies will, himself, be the victim of lie."

Runneth-Over

Ithaca NY: The Cornell Daily Sun has been banned from meetings of the women's fraternities' councils on the campus. No reasons were given.

Halifax, NS: The students health clinic at Dalhousie has been severely criticized by residence girls there. In an open letter to the Students' Council, the girls claimed that doctors were not there when the clinic was supposed to be open to all, and that when students did see a doctor they did not obtain a careful diagnosis.

The matter was brought to the attention of university authorities, and it has been decided to discuss the problem at a Senate meeting.

Spokane, Washington: The percentage of students who are married remains close to the high 25 percent figure and shows no sign of lessening, reports the University of Washington Fraternity newspaper. This is the one bright note in an otherwise gloomy picture of rising student enrollment and crowded residences on the Washington campus, the paper reports.

Northampton, Mass.: Reactions against the late Supreme Court order concerning the integration of Negroes in schools has aroused violent comment on college campuses, especially in the States. Here are some of the comments, printed by The Sophian, of Smith College girls on the subject.

"We'll have none of it," said one Baton Rouge student concerning integration. "The Supreme Court shouldn't interfere with something like this. My father works for the Segregation League and he thinks they're inferior beings. I think they're equal... But different."

A sophomore from Richmond, Virginia. "We're in a terrible situation. Negroes have surrounded our neighbourhood and now make up 50% of the grade school... Property values are going down... We're selling our home and moving further out."

"I didn't pay too much attention to the decision—which was selfish, I suppose, being a Negro myself," reported a freshman from Orange, N.J.

Ithaca, NY: Discussing the need for an honour system at Cornell, one council member commented: "A 1952 committee had shown that 47% of the student body cheats—this despite the fact that 70% considered cheating 'unfair'."

Durham, NC: The editors of the student newspaper, The Tarheel, at the University of North Carolina, have been in considerable hot water lately. It all started when the editors charged that the new appointment as football coach at the university meant "professionalism coming to roost." The student body rose in protest and petitioned for the recall of the editors.

However a campus wide vote on the subject was held, with the editors running to hold their position, while the president of the inter-dormitory council opposed them for editorship.

In what has been termed "the most controversial election in the University's history," the editors were returned to their position. "It was a question of the freedom of the press," remarked one campus newspaper.

Kingston: What makes a good professor? What are the necessary ingredients of a good professor? The Queen's Journal questioned several faculty members on this topic. A few replied as follows:

"A first-class professor is one who is interested in his subject beyond anything else on the face of the earth." (Head of the Philosophy Department.)

"A good teacher must be deeply interested in his students as individuals," said another professor.

"Besides having the proper technical qualifications, a good professor must have enthusiasm," reported a third.

Abroad Say You're Canuck Students Advised By Panel

"If you are travelling in Britain, be sure and let the people know that you are Canadians," advised Robin Ferguson at yesterday's meeting for students who are planning a trip to Europe this summer.

"Otherwise," said Mr. Ferguson, "they will think you are Americans. I don't wish to cast any reflection on the Americans, but if the English know you are a Canadian, they think of you as 'one of the family'."

The meeting featured a panel consisting of Robin Ferguson, from England, Edgar Walter, Germany, and Aline Landau, France. They each stated what the Canadian student could do to make himself welcome and better thought of in his particular country.

Edgar Walter advised students to stay at the youth-hostels scattered throughout Germany if they ran short of money.

You will also see more if you travel by bicycle or by plane. If you are hitchhiking, you should carry a small Canadian flag."

"To understand the people of a district," said Miss Landau, "you should try to live with the people of that district. Each district in Paris, for example is like a different city."

"There is no tipping in Germany," said Mr. Walter. "Everything is included in the price. But in Switzerland, you must tip for everything from a cup of coffee to a postage stamp."

Miss Landau said that in France one must shake hands when one says good-morning. With regards to shopping it is better to shop in the bigger stores because there prices are fixed.

One member of the audience, Kurt Weitz, who went to Europe last year said it was quite easy to get behind the Iron Curtain. "You can even arrange with the local police to keep a daily check on you," he said, "If you disappear then they will start an immediate investigation. However it would be wise to inform several people when you will return, as an extra precaution."

WUA Has Meet - No One There!

Insufficient members to form a quorum caused the cancellation of the UC Women's Undergraduate Association's nomination meeting on Tuesday afternoon.

President Gay Sellers attributed the low attendance to the inconvenient hour (4 p.m.). There were a number of conflicting college interests, hockey, swimming and the Alexander lectures, she said.

The meeting has been rescheduled for tomorrow, and will be held in the Women's Union Theatre at 1 p.m. Candidates for the executive are urged to have their supporters present.

Campus Profile

By JIM VASOFF

Those who were fortunate enough to squeeze into the Hart House East Common Room last Monday noon, saw the Skule-House Four again proclaimed winners of the Hart House annual quartet competition.

This was the third time in a row that the engineering group had won the contest, setting a new record.

Few people were aware, however, that another new record was set that same day.

Bob Hill, the quartet's bass, has been a member of the winning group in the contest for the past four years, making a perfect score for his undergraduate career. He started as a freshman in 1953 singing with a group called The Four Cops. Three of the "cops" graduated that year leaving Bob alone to form a new quartet. Bob is now in final year mechanical engineering. Besides his singing activities, he is well known to Skule Nite patrons as the barnyard philosopher "Stacey" who for four years has given his candid viewpoint on campus happenings.

For the past two years, Bob has directed Skule Nite. The high calibre of these shows is adequate proof of his ability.

Bob is the holder of a Leather Medal, the highest award given by the Engineering Society to those in the fourth year who have displayed "leadership and outstanding ability during their undergraduate days."

Trinity Supports Democracy

After The Election

Here an irate student tries to rip down an election sign advertising candidates, college elections. But some students say they're ugly.

—VSP by Ed Staworzynski

Try to Overthrow Gov't Opposition Plot Foiled

The men of Trinity College last night upheld western democracy as the best institution under which individual rights can flourish. In doing so, they also defeated an unofficial move to force the resignation of the government of the Trinity College Literary Institute.

The vote for the motion, "That democracy can do more than any other political or social order to promote and preserve the individual rights and liberties of mankind," was 30 to 23.

The government of the TCLI runs all Trinity College activities. A member of the J. M. Kirkwood-led government said last night that if the opposition, led by John Brewin (II Trin.), defeated the government, it might cancel funds for Trinity's annual athletic dinner, Episkopon, and stop the purchase of new records for the college collection.

Opposition members, during the debate, claimed that Western democracy was weakening, not growing stronger, and that it tended either to fascism or collectivism. The government speakers said that democracy was not perfect, but provided the best guarantee of individual rights yet devised in a political system.

First government speaker, Dave Morris, listed alternatives to democracy: autocracy, totalitarianism, or government by a privileged class. He said there were objections to all three, and that democracy was "the first, last and only hope for twentieth century mankind."

"Western democracy can do absolutely nothing but destroy itself," said opposition speaker John Wilson. He cited the "purest form of democracy" — in France, which had produced "total chaos."

"There is very little connection between Christianity and democcracy," Wilson said. "It's about time for the second coming of Christ."

A member, who asked for an alternative to the potentialities of Western democracy, the "can" in the resolution before the house, was told: "Outhouse."

Students at Dal. Protest Closing Married House

Halifax, N.S. (CUP) — The married students at Dalhousie are petitioning the federal government to keep their quarters open, at least for another year.

They have requested the help of the Dal Students' Council and the University Administration, to support their petition.

The quarters of the Mulgrave Park Married Students Association are run by the University, and provide low rental accommodation for married students. These pay only enough rent to cover the cost of maintenance.

The quarters, which were built in 1946, for the veterans, are on a site required by Central Housing and Mortgage Co. However there are similar houses, in a worse state of repair, on the same site, which will continue open indefinitely, states the students' petition.

"The married student is becoming more and more the pattern on University campuses and especially so in the professional schools," reads the petition in part.

They point out that there is an acute housing shortage in Halifax, and that "it is most difficult to find suitable residences for student families."

As a result of the petition, the Administration is approaching the Federal Government concerning the possibility of keeping the quarters open.

Foresters Withdraw Trophy Claim Agree Nurses Truly Deserve Cup

A last minute attempt to have the placings in the Corpuscle Cup upset came to nothing last night.

Yesterday morning, forestry students claimed they had unearthed some unrecorded blood donors, which would boost the faculty percentage past that of nursing. Nursing was declared the official winner in Wednesday's Varsity by the Blood Committee.

A final statement issued by the Blood Drive Committee was then issued. It stated there was originally a discrepancy between the figures of the committee and those at the Red Cross Blood Donors Clinic. Checks were made and the final standings according to the official laboratory sheets in the Red Cross office were published in yesterday's Varsity.

The statement continued, "The Faculty of Forestry claims to have won the blood campaign. According to Red Cross files, the faculty contributed 49 pints of blood for a percentage of 56.9."

"The Blood Committee has done its best to check these figures to ensure their accuracy. The figures in Wednesday's Varsity are the final figures to be published by the committee." Bill Hannaford, Forestry Blood Campaign director said last night, "We checked over our figures and found that a couple of fellows had not contributed."

He added that forestry students were "glad nursing won. They deserved the trophy, they did a good job."

Anglo-French Unity Depends on Culture

Canadian unity, if it is to come about at all, will be soldered by culture, a prominent Quebec churchman said this week.

Very Reverend George-Henri Levesque, dean of the faculty of social sciences, Laval University, lectured on "Our Canadian Cultural Life" at Eaton Auditorium.

"Our two cultures live together," Abbe Levesque said, "because history shows them as being faithful servants and messengers of freedom. It would be unworthy if two such cultures could not live peacefully side by side in our day, for genuine freedom's true aim is friendship."

Culture must not materialize and identify itself with civilization, the Abbe said. It resides in, and aims at, man. But culture and civilization, while distinct, are unthinkable without each other.

Abbe Levesque said the culture of Canada consists of "diversity within a framework."

"Strand" Circulation Doubled In Record Publication Year

Last year The Strand wasn't even always picked up. This year our circulation has more than doubled (from 300 to 650), commented Hugh Currie, co-editor of The Strand, a Vic publication.

The final issue of The Strand came out yesterday. It is a mimeographed publication on yellow paper either 8 or 12 pages long.

"We've published once a week every week, since September," Currie continued. "That is, except for last week, when we were preparing for the final."

The budget of The Strand has jumped this year from about $75 to $200, said Currie. The money is mostly supplied by the Victoria College Union, although this year, The Strand has included a few advertisements—to help the finances along.

"We have to give unlimited publicity to all Vic events," Currie reported. "It states in the constitution that The Strand is just a publicity organ for the VCU. However, The Strand has changed its nature quite a bit since it was founded," he added.

He said that the paper had "taken off" the faculty and administration this year, with not too good results. The Strand had published faculty portraits at the beginning of the year, but that after a while the staff had banded together, and refused any more information.

"Things have pulled up lately," he said. "We're winning favour back. We've become more mature since the beginning of the year."

Professor Presents Probation, After Pen Care in HH Monday

Criminal treatment — on film — will be presented to students next Monday night in Hart House. The School of Social Work, sponsors, want people interested in parole and probation work, or just interested, to come.

Professor Stuart Jaffary, of the School, will answer questions on the treatment of the offender. Films are planned on penitentiaries, after-care of discharged offenders, and probation. Representatives of the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry Societies (organizations for the rehabilitation of prisoners) will be there, as well as Mr. D. Coughlan, director of Probation Services in the Ontario Attorney General's Department.

The film evening is Monday, March 5, at 8:00 p.m., in the Hart House Debates Room.

Ring Around The Tub In Knox

Extraordinary situation above is the result of someone playing "bathtub, bathtub, who's got the bathtub." Reporter Mary Jane Rowley and a staff photographer discovered this tub in Knox College's backyard at midnight. An anonymous call drew special attention to the "1925" inscribed on the product.

—VSP by Ed Staworzynski

Bathtub Roams About Campus Stolen From Razed Building

A lost bathtub has been wandering around the campus for the past three days.

First stolen Tuesday night from an old St. Mike's building which is now in the process of being torn down, the bathtub was carried by conspirators, rumored to be from Emmanuel College, into the Vic Men's Residence.

According to one of the cloak-and-dagger men, it was first substituted for somebody's bed. The covers were carefully put over the top of it so that it actually did bear a faint resemblance to a bed. The bed's occupant arrived home late from a date to find that his bed had acquired a slight "sag" since he had last slept in it.

Then the ubiquitous bathtub was taken to another room where it was filled with water, after a plug had been put in it. The only trouble was that there was a string attached to the plug and then to the door-knob. When the unsuspecting residence man opened the door, the plug was pulled out and water flooded the entire bedroom.

After this incident, the annoyed house mother felt that the tub should "disappear," but was unable to budge it. Finally on Wednesday night, the culprits were asked to remove it by the authorities — in other words, the don.

The tub was then hoisted over a picket fence and into Knox College, where it remained until noon on Thursday. Commented one Knox professor, "Everyone thought it was a huge joke. At first we thought that the non-theological residents were trying to get back for the feast which the graduates will be having to-night at the Graduates' Banquet."

The date 1925 which appears on the tub has a special significance for Knox College. 1925 was the year of Church Union — the union of the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists and the Methodists. However, a number of Presbyterian groups remained out of the union — one of which was Knox College.

"Could there be malice in this prank?" asked the reporter.

"Not at all," said a conspirator. "Just a friendly suggestion to clean up a bit."

Provincial Grants Upped Education Is Emphasized UofT Gains $613,000

The university's budget belt need not be tightened this year, thanks to the extra half million dollar maintenance grant given it yesterday in the Ontario Legislature.

In his Budget Speech to the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon, the provincial treasurer, the Hon. Dana Porter, allotted the University of Toronto and the Ontario College of Education over five and a half million dollars for maintenance, and almost three million dollars in capital grants for 1956.

Included in the grants is a million dollars for the construction of Toronto's new Dental Building, the same amount as last year. The total increase in grants to the U of T over last year is $615,000—$500,000 for maintenance, $115,000 for capital expenditures.

"With this grant, we can balance the (University's) budget very well for the coming year," said Mr. F. R. Stone, Vice-President of the U of T's Administration, yesterday. "We needed more than we received last year in order to balance the forthcoming budget. As it stood, we were afraid that there was going to be a deficit."

"As yet, we don't know the exact way in which the grant will be spent," Stone said. "Recommendations will have to be prepared and then submitted to the Board of Governors."

"In this budget, there is a special emphasis," said Mr. Porter in his speech. "It lays a special stress upon the universities. The total amount provided for our institutions of higher learning represents an increase far greater than has ever appeared in any single budget in the history of Ontario."

Ontario will spend $24,982,000 on higher education — universities, agricultural colleges, and the Ontario College of Art—in the fiscal year 1956-57. This is $7,057,000 more than in 1955-56.

Mr. Porter said that the emphasis on university education should be on the humanities as well as the sciences. "In our urgent need for persons of special scientific training, let us not overlook the

McGill Students With Miss Lucy — Vote Approval

Montreal: (CUP) McGill students voted Wednesday to send a letter of support—and nothing else—to Autherine Lucy, the negro co-ed battling for admission to the all-white University of Alabama.

The students, in a campus-wide referendum, voted approval of the first part of a three-section question, namely that McGill's student council send a letter of "encouragement" to Miss Lucy on her stand.

But they defeated the second two parts of the referendum, which read:

—that the McGill students' council assure her that if she is unsuccessful in gaining admission to the University of Alabama, a scholarship would be provided (by the students' council) for her at McGill.

that if Miss Lucy should not accept the offer of a scholarship, that the scholarship be

Which Home Away From Home?

Each year students leaving home for University are faced with the problem of finding a place to live. The problem, that of the choice between residence or a private boarding house, appears in a different light to each person, but eventually will come to depend on the needs of the individual, the personality of the individual, and the all-important pocket-book.

A large percentage of students on coming to University, feel that the time has come to shake off the old ties of high-school discipline and be free to act as they wish. But this is a change which cannot be wrought too suddenly, and many students are not yet ready to handle it. The limited restrictions of residence life will serve to curb this spirit of independence until it is mature enough to be allowed free reign.

On the other hand, many feel that the opportunity for the student to solve his problems by himself is of more value, and that the private life of a boarding house is the solution to this. Here also the shy person can feel more at ease in the homelike atmosphere, and make friends easier.

There is also the fact that extra-curricular activities are limited by the curfews or meetings demanded by a residence. Living in a boarding house would enable the student to plan his engagements in accordance with his own time, as long as he does not interfere with, or disturb, those in whose home he is living.

Dean Bissell of University College, when questioned on the subject by a Varsity reporter, said "I consider residence life to be tremendously important, and that it should be extended as far as possible." However the Dean felt that in view of the size of the student body, and the various economic backgrounds of the students, compulsory residence life would be impossible, unless there were to be an enlarged scholarship plan. He said that he didn't "like to see anything made compulsory."

A Whitney Hall student felt that residence life was "advisable but should not be made compulsory, although it is a deterring factor in many courses." A Victoria male student was in favour of the idea, as "a good introduction to College life," while a Loretto College co-ed's comment was that "It's Hell . . . restricted and very dull."

UNB Motion Keeps NFCUS "'58 at Least" Says McGill

McGill

UNB

Montreal: (CUP) — There is no indication that McGill will rejoin NFCUS before 1958, reported the McGill Daily in a wire to The Varsity. McGill withdrew from NFCUS last year, and there had been some hope expressed in NFCUS quarters that she would rejoin this year.

Fredericton (CUP) — The University of New Brunswick will remain in Canada's national federation, for next year at least. In a Wednesday student referendum here, a majority of the student body gave NFCUS their support for the year 1956-57.

Tour Scotland Through WUS Application Deadline March 9

Beating grouse at Balmoral castle is an unusual way of making a summer play. But Scotch students do it, and ten U of T students have the chance, too, through World University Service of Canada, this summer.

Other jobs open: summer waitressing, looking after children, canning fish. WUS guarantees the maximum a student will pay is his return fare on the Empress of Britain. The students who go are guaranteed their job before they go.

This is the second year a WUS Scotland exchange has been arranged through former Toronto graduate Geoff Johnston, now at St. Andrew's University in Fife. There are openings for seven girls and three men. About three and a half months will be spent in Europe. Ann Kilgore (III P & OT) has information at WA, 3-5513. Deadline for applications, which can be gotten from (and must be returned to) the SAC office, is March 9.

AVRO Offers Scholarships Aiding Engineering Students

Eight scholarships, an aircraft design prize and a $3,000 students' loan fund are to be established at the University of Toronto by A. V. Roe Canada Limited, this spring.

The scholarships are part of a general scheme to help engineering students at Toronto, McGill, Montreal and Queen's universities.

Announcing the awards, Mr. Crawford Gordon, president of Avro Canada, said, "We hope that these awards will serve to focus the attentions of young Canadians on the many opportunities in the aeronautical industry."

Five Avro scholarships, worth $500 each, will be awarded on the basis of need and academic ability.

Three "Orenda" scholarships also worth $500, will be awarded.

Montreal: The McGill Daily has launched a crusade for speedier ambulance service at the scenes of accidents. It charges that fewer than half of the hospitals in Montreal have ambulances and that precious time is lost while the police, the only persons authorized to call an ambulance, get to the accident.

The Daily graphically illustrates its point with a photograph of an old woman, lying in the gutter in a pool of blood. The woman, who had been hit by a bus, died during the hour it took for an ambulance to arrive.

BLUE CAGERS VIE FOR SECOND

Do Battle With Queen's, Redmen Should Pick Up Twin Victories

Our University of Toronto basketball Blues end an average season this weekend away from home when they board a train this afternoon for Kingston. Tonight they take on Queens while on Saturday they move into Montreal to play the McGill Redmen. Two wins, and Toronto should have little trouble in capturing these two from the dorms of the league, would tie Varsity with Assumption for second place in the Intercollegiate cage loop. The two wins would also give the Blues an eight-thirteen win-loss record.

This evening they meet hapless Queens Golden Gaels. Queens has had a little difficulty this year, as a matter of fact they have yet to win a contest. The Gaels should have a good squad next year when most of their team returns, including this season's high scoring freshman, Greg Stone.

Win number two should come in Montreal on Saturday when the John McMann's gang go against the McGill Redmen. The Redmen have only managed to win two games this year, both at the expense of the Gaels. Leo Du-plexis and Finton Hefernon are the Redmen's best.

The Blues will be at their tops this weekend with everyone making the trip. Leo Madden should add to his last three game total of 25 points a game as he closes out his Blue career.

The Intermediates will travel with their older brothers as far as Kingston where they will meet Queen's tough Seconds.

Ice Blues Play Final

University of Montreal Carabins will be trying for a little revenge tonight when they are visitors on Toronto ice in the last league game of the current season for the champion Varsity Blues.

In three meetings this winter the Blues have dumped the Carabins 6-4, 6-3, and 5-3. Last year it was these same Carabins that kept the Blues from recording the most perfect season ever in Intercollegiate hockey by forcing a 1-1 draw in the second game in Verdun. This season there is little they can do to hurt the Blues, who have lost two in nine and are already so far out in front that nobody can catch them, but they can make it difficult for high-scoring Varsity snipers to set a new record.

There are three records up for auction amongst the Blues, to say nothing of the individual scoring championship, Ken Linselman will be gunning for a new Varsity record of 18 goals in 12 league games. He has 17 now, enough to tie the mark set last season by Dave Reid. Eight more points for Linselman would tie the record set by the Carabins' Bernie Quesnel in 1953. Eight more points each for the first line would tie the record set in 1953 by Quesnel, Claude Hotte and Claude Dagenais. The now famous Carabin "Punch Line" picked up 97 points that season, an all-time high for this league.

the puck loose behind the Vic defence and went in to score to put the Irish ahead to stay.

A few moments later, it was the Vic team that had two players in the penalty box. Paul Finlay scooped a pass over to Joe Horvat who picked the corner which he was knocked over by a Vic defender.

The second period was four minutes old when Joe Horvat deflected Bob McCormick's long shot from the blue line into the net. Then the rough stuff began. Both teams left caution to the winds as they roared up and down the ice. Bryce Tanner came up with a nice save on Ron Shepherd's solo effort as he stopped a backhand which Shepherd just barely got away as he was checked. Guy Drolet let a long shot go that slied through Tanner's glove, hit the cross bar of the net and bounced out. A few moments later, with Vic again short handed, Horvat picked the top left hand corner for the score on a pass from Ron Doty and Paul Finlay.

There were twelve penalties in the game with seven of them going to the Scarlet-and-Gold. At times, tempers flared and it seemed as though a mild donnybrook would be on the verge of appearing. However, the referees

SMC Blanks Victoria 4-0 To Move Into Semi-Finals

By JOHN VOJTECH

St. Mike's A's defeated Jr. Vic yesterday at the Arena in a thrilling playoff hockey game which ended with the Irish out on top 4-0. Joe Horvat came through with three goals to lead the St. Mike's attack. Jack Andrews sparked on his fifth shutout of the season as he came up with some good goaltending which saved the day for the Irish on many occasions.

The Men from Vic started out fast as they controlled the play for the first four minutes of the game. It was the work of Andrews that kept Vic off of the score sheet as the Irish floundered badly in the opening minutes. Brewer, for Vic, had the best chance to put them ahead, but Andrews saved. To top off their poor opening performance, the Irish received three successive penalties, so that they played for three minutes two men short. Andrews came up with sensational saves, notably on Johns who was in close. With the Irish one man short, John Halligan picked up

Vic Tops Dents Winning 24-21

Led by Manny Radonski's 16 point performance Victoria College's Senior team edged out Dentistry A 36-33 yesterday evening in a Sifton Cup basketball playoff game.

The close game saw both teams tied 10-10 at the end of the first period and Vic ahead 24-21 at two-thirds. They maintained their three point advantage in the last stanza.

Radonski was the big difference, besides breaking the Dentistry zone defence on outside shots, he also nabbed many rebounds. George Aubrey, displaying a beautiful one hand push from outside, hooped eight for the victors.

Al Riva again led Dentistry with ten points, all on one hand jump shots from the top of the keyhole, while Zoli Janvier hooped nine points. Janvier was the game's top rebounder, grabbing almost all the Dent rebounds. Bill Schwetz got eight for the losers.

Victoria meets their real test on next Tuesday when they take on the title favoured Junior Engineering team at Hut House in a semi-final encounter.

Tomorrow afternoon St. Mike's B meets Jr. Skule in a playoff encounter. The finals get underway on Monday, March the twelfth with a two out of three series.

Trinity Wins Rough Contest 4-1

One of the fastest, roughest games to be seen at Varsity Arena this year, was played yesterday as Trinity A's bested St. Mike's C team by the score of 4-1, in interfaculty hockey competition. A blistering pace was set right from the beginning and before the period was over, it looked as though Trinity were going to have a tough time beating St. Mike's. Only the terrific netminding of Irish goalie, John McRae, kept the Trinity team from scoring more times than they did as he pulled off tremendous saves on Panther men in rapid succession.

McRae started his work by coming up with a save on Denpencier who went in on a breakaway. A few minutes later and McRae's Iron Curtain was broken, as Bill Lovering hit the twine to put the Panthers ahead. The penalties came thick and fast as Jack Taft got a minor for falling on the puck. Leo McGuigan in attempting to talk the referee out of his decision, talked himself into a ten minute misconduct. Pete Sanderson went off a few moments later as he threw the broken portion of his stick into the stands for a ten minute misconduct.

McRae's magic kept working for him as he pulled off saves on Pete Giffen and Max Sanderson. He managed to get his toe on a drive by Chris Johnson. And so the period ended with Trinity out on top 1-0.

Jim McKinnon was sent off for charging early in the second period and Trinity took advantage of this when Dave Osler broke in with Chris Johnson. Osler drew the Irish defender out and passed to Johnson who scored. Jim McKinnon received a skate out over the right eye as he returned to partake in the game's action. Brooke Ellis caught the St. Mike's defence AVOL as he got the puck at the Irish blue line from where he skated in on McRae, and out-shifted him for the goal, one of the most we've seen in a long time. To complement the Trinity scoring, Mike Denpencier scored on a pass from Pete Sanderson.

The rest of the period was studied with penalties, and as the Irish were playing five men

Speaking OF SPORT

By HOWIE MANDELL

It's always interesting to note the expression that comes over visiting players' faces when they first enter Hart House Gymnasium. After one quick look at the size of the court, some look at their teammates with an "Oh No!!!" expression on their face; some just stop and disgustedly stare, while others burst out in spontaneous laughter.

Perhaps I'm being a little overdescriptive, but it is high time that something was done to alleviate the conditions in one of the worst courts on this continent. Not only is the playing surface under regulation size but the seating capacity is far from good. As a matter of fact, there are at least a half-dozen high schools in this city whose basketball courts are far superior to that on this campus.

In case you think that this is the first cry for a decent field house at the university you're mistaken. Back in 1950 the rumour had gone around that a hardwood floor might be laid at Varsity Arena. That's as far as the project went. On March 6, of that year, Bob Dneiper wrote the following in his Speaking of Sport.

"Two reasons Warren Stevens gives for not starting the work (laying the floor) immediately is that (1) with the stadium going up they haven't got money and (2) although basketball is the coming game, it hasn't reached that stage of development where Varsity could pack in four thousand people."

Well, the stadium is up, and if you ask any one of the 1500 fans who manage to squeeze into that beautiful air-conditioned rectangle in Hart House on Friday evenings, they'll tell you that basketball has, after six long years, reached its full stage of development.

And While We're In A Beefing Mood...

If there is anything anyone in a newspaper sports department hates, it's the unknown advisor. Who is that chap? He's the guy who comes down here every fourth day to rant and rave about his team not being included in yesterday's Varsity. We ask him if he would like to help us cover the spectacle, he is out of this office faster than you can say Jackie Robinson.

SPS Srs. and Sr. Vic earned two births in the Sifton Cup basketball semi-finals when they scored wins in yesterday's playoff action. Skule topped Law A 59-37, while Vic eked out a close 36-33 decision over Dents A.

The Engineer game was much closer than the score would indicate. Law trailed by six points throughout the first two periods, but fell apart in the last stanza, when four of their five starters fouled out.

Skule, displaying a sharp passing attack, broke into an early lead and finished at the period holding a 18-12 advantage. The first period developed into a battle of the boards between Engineer Roy Webb and Lawyer Bill Corcoran. Ed Skrzypek, Skule topped the opening period scoring with seven points. Webb pointed four, while Corcoran led all scorers with a 15 point output.

Webb continued his great rebounding in the second frame and hooped four consecutive points at a key moment to send Skule into an eight-point lead. But Kellock of Law had a rough afternoon as he missed four lay-ups. Law was also hurt by Corcoran's inability to find the range on jumps within ten feet of the hoop.

Earl Ford threw in six straight points early in the last frame to send SPS into a ten-point lead which they never lost. Law's replacements for its four fouled-out starters were unable to cope with the superior Engineer squad, which went on to win easily.

Ed Skrzypek was second high man for Skule with nine points. Taps for Law, and also their best man, was Lionel Schipper, with 12. Ted Luck followed with ten. In Wednesday's playoff games, St. Mike's B edged SPS X 47-44 and Dents III walloped SPS V 60-39. Ed Iglar paced St. Mike's with 20, while Paul Ostachuck was best for Skule with 19. Jim Sweeney's 17 points led Dents III to their win over SPS V.

St. Mike's meets Jr. SPS today in a playoff game, while in Monday's final, St. Mike's A will tangle with Dents III.

no cynics here

We noted with some minor interest that the only tax to be reduced by the Ontario Government this year was the tax on race-track betting. This same tax has been reduced several times in recent years.

We also noted that the leading millionaire race-track owners in Ontario are supporters of the present conservative government in Ontario.

If we were cynics, we might believe that there was some connection between these two facts.

But we're not cynics.

a note of integrity

The decision of President Eisenhower to run again for the presidency has suddenly transformed the political situation in the United States. He seems assured of achieving his goal, and it may well be that the slightly-battered Republican party can ride into office hanging to Ike's coat-tails.

The guessing game over Eisenhower's decision has lowered his prestige. But he more than made this up with his veto of the gas pipelines bill.

This bill, passed by both parts of the US Congress, would have freed natural gas from federal controls. President Eisenhower, and many of his most powerful supporters, were known to be in favor of the bill.

Yet because Eisenhower felt that "undue influence" had been exerted on behalf of the bill by some gas companies, and specifically that an attempt to bribe a US senator had been made, he vetoed the bill.

This action, which lost him the support of many of his most influential supporters, was an act of political integrity which is all too uncommon nowadays.

a double need unmet

The additional funds granted by the province to this university will be welcome indeed in providing for the essential needs of an educational institution the size and stature of this one. But it should not be thought that these grants provide an answer to the problem of expansion.

Situated as it is in the heart of one of the fastest developing areas on this continent, it is not hard to foresee that this university must bear the brunt of the expansion that will come to all Canadian institutions of higher learning.

But it would be fallacy indeed to suppose that all that is needed to provide for expansion is money.

If this institution is to increase in size, many changes in its organization will prove necessary. The present system of four federated arts colleges, for instance, will not prove adequate to handle double the number of students.

The university stands in need of both more funds and more long range planning.

NFCUS Examined:

"It's Very Difficult"

This article, written by Bill Smyth, NFCUS Co-Chairman on this campus, is an attempt to explain the difficulties facing the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Spring is the time of re-birth and inspiration, the mystics tell us, when the sun becomes the golden chariot of Apollo, when birds twitter away as they are commonly supposed to do, and poets flower forth.

But spring is also a time of remembrance, for every year at this time Toronto students remember that they have not yet "questioned the value of NFCUS." NFCUS, for those who have not been confronted with the letters sufficiently, is the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

So this year, as every year, the organization is being harshly criticized, and some students at Toronto feel that their university should withdraw. In this article, I propose simply to describe the problems with which such a body must deal, in attempting to coordinate the thoughts and activities of students in our great, ungainly and under-populated Canada.

Any organization which wishes to carry out well the ambitious program which NFCUS has undertaken must combine four major factors, which I shall list:

1. quite considerable financial resources
2. agreement (or nearly so) of participants in important policy and organizational decisions
3. the institution of a central, policy-making, and organizing office
4. the support of campus committees in projects of a national character, and implementing local projects which the federation subsidizes.

The national federation of course commands comparatively few sources of revenue, for a body attempting such far-reaching projects. Since it must have a national office, to handle the volumes of correspondence from throughout Canada and all over the world, to organize projects, to administer the Travel Service, the scholarship campaign, national and regional seminars, to make policy decisions on national and international matters, to speak for Canadian students as a whole; since it must have a national conference to give Canadian students the opportunity to take their part in creating the federation—since these are prerequisite, the federation must spend money for their implementation.

At present it has not sufficient funds to absorb these expenses without detriment to the projects which it can carry on.

The Missing Dimension

Editor, The Varsity:

One night last week a small boy came to our door. To the person who opened he showed a card on which it stood in an adult's handwriting: "Dear friend — would you help a family with six children whose father has been unemployed for several months, by buying some paper flowers from the boy?"

What would be the reaction of most people? The boy was going from door to door on a rather cold winter night. His clothes were a pathetic sight, and when he took out his gloves, there were such large holes in those that the few coins he received got lost in them and dropped on the floor. Probably many people would wonder whether the case was really one of genuine distress, but at least it looked like one. And it is also likely that most people would give some money and then forget about the whole thing. That is, unless they have had some personal experience of what it might mean to be in the boy's situation.

This event made the writer think of the difference between the life of those who have the privilege of going to a university and that of many others whom they hardly ever meet. There are people on the campus who are working for the University Settlement and other worthwhile projects, demonstrating their concern by action rather than by words. On the whole, however, there is little evidence in the student activities of any awareness and concern by action rather than by words.

The writer remembers a debate about communism and the threat of war where the speakers mostly attempted to amuse their audience with miscellaneous jokes but were almost painfully anxious not to appear to be, taking the matter seriously. The only topic that seems to make everybody dead serious is domestic party politics. There is not too much cause for rejoicing here, however, because the behavior often bears more resemblance to conditioned reflexes than to reasoning.

One is hardly taken by surprise when the aspiring future leaders (from homes and environments much better provided for than that of the kid selling paper flowers) spend whole evenings in the Model Parliament, preparing for their future roles by filibustering and thwarting each other's attempts to have matters discussed, without having really anything to say themselves. What the moral of all this is, I would like the reader to think about.

Clarification From EAC

Editor, The Varsity:

The situation discussed in the editorial of February 23 "procrastination", must be clarified. The editorial does not reveal the pertinent (or correct) facts.

The SAC recognized that the establishment of a Canadian Institute for "making Canada known and understood to newcomers" largely affects foreign students, and recommended that the External Affairs Committee, the appropriate group, consider the matter.

The EAC, after consideration of the proposal, realized that the official letter of support, which was sought by the two students, should come from the SAC. It was recommended that the EAC executive at its meeting Feb. 28 give final consideration to the ideal.

Their recommendation to either sanction or reject the idea would be reported to the SAC on March 7th (not the "final hectic meeting") to be voted on by the entire council. The right channels have been chosen in every case. Is this "short shrift to the consideration of positive student proposals"?

OSA Artistry International

art for canada's sake?

Rody Kenny Courtice, at the Ontario Society of Artists exhibition at the Art Gallery of Toronto last night, said that she felt this year's OSA show was well up to the high standards of the society. She emphasized the fact that not only were the media and subjects greatly varied but also the styles, and that pictures in contrasting styles were hung together without "fighting." The variety of this annual exhibition is becoming one of its most stimulating characteristics.

The two dominating works of the main gallery, for example, (by reason of size at least) were by Cleve Horne and Oscar Cahen. The first is a naturalistic portrait of the Hon. Sen. W. Davies (who like Winston Churchill is a man robust enough to deserve firmer support than the transparent, semi-abstract floor over which he floats); and the other, called Structure, is a painting of vague flat forms in startling "fluorescent" colours.

If the styles were varied, so were the ages and reputations of the artists. Two University of Toronto students had works accepted; Clive Clark, a well constructed steel and nylon string sculpture and Gerald Finley, a painting, full of movement and narrative possibilities, called The New Dress.

Among the artists with established reputations in the show were Robert Pilot (with a canvas eminently suitable for living-room hanging), Grant MacDonald with another of his exquisite but now tiresome adolescent studies, William Winter and his pale green children, Sidney Watson and his quaint primitivism, and the two Haworths who shared with Donald Neddeau a similarity of subjects, certain points of technique and a "dancey" quality.

Among the variety of media, R. York Wilson and Jack Nichols have used the synthetic plastics recently developed by Mexican muralists. Both artists have done murals in plastic paint for the Salvation Army building in the medium. In the OSA show they reduce the colours—used by the Mexicans with brilliant, vivid power—to proper Torontonion greys and browns.

Speaking of Torontonion characteristics, the few paintings sold, with the brilliant exception of Tony Urquhart's Christmas Tree, tended to be subdued in colour as well as small and low-priced. Oscar Cahen's Structure was (significantly) unpriced.

Mrs. Rody Kenny Courtice also said the show lacked anything in the way of an all-over Canadian character. She felt that this, though unavoidable, was unfortunate. I think, however, that possibly this very internationality and variety is a Canadian characteristic. National characteristics were developed when communication between countries has become culturally alive too late in-history to have any other than the new international character of art. This is the mark and may be the strength of the new country's art.

An interesting attempt is being made by the society to determine whether the name of the artist influences our opinion of the painting. Society members have prepared twenty-three unsigned pictures for identification. The game is good fun for any regular gallery-goer.

calvin jackson

As a piano soloist, Cal Jackson is not at home with the traditional masters. He came without his rhythm section to give a classical program in the last of the Wednesday five o'clock recitals at Hart House.

Cal Jackson is of course widely known in the jazz field and will perform with his quartet at the Stratford Festival this summer.

Since he returned from the West coast, he has built up a considerable following among Toronto jazz lovers.

In his performance of the Waltz in C sharp minor and of La Fille aux Cheveux de Lin there was too much Jackson and too little Debussy and Chopin. In the Chopin Waltz the phrasing was so jerky and angular that there was a complete lack of any musical line.

The pianist obviously had command of all the notes in the Debussy, but had no understanding of the phrasing as the composer had written it down. Mr. Jackson was more at ease playing Villa Lobos and Albeniz, possibly because Spanish and Latin American music, which is similar to jazz in many ways, demands a strong rhythmic sense.

Mr. Jackson's particular vigorous approach to music proved most successful in his own compositions: Mosaics and Fog. There have an interest of their own, because of their combination of jazz idioms with more traditional styles in which the influences of Bartok and Debussy are especially noticeable.

As was made evident by the response of the audience, Calvin Jackson will always be in the jazz field. His wonderful improvisations on My Funny Valentine and the songs from South Pacific showed Cal Jackson at his best.

His style is casual, relaxed and humorous, yet his improvisations are marked by a good understanding of form. Despite Mr. Jackson's excellent training in classical music, it must regretfully be said that when rhythm is not the essential element, he does not seem to make prominent anything else. As a result, his interpretation of many of the classical items in his repertoire lack expression.

However, this concert did not impair Mr. Jackson's reputation in the field of jazz.

But one hopes he will bring his quartet with him next time.

The provincial government's grant of $100,000 to the Stratford Shakespearean Festival Foundation indicates that the dole-dispensers have come to realize that there is a place for the arts, even in the account-books of officialdom. In fact, Provincial Treasurer Porter even presupposes a "cultural heritage" for Ontario by assigning the Festival a future share in it. Or does he mean that after the Festival, comes the heritage?

In either case, we seem to have a heritage, and the provincial government, by calling it to our attention and giving it financial support, have pledged themselves to continued help in nurturing it. Perhaps one day they may even come to support less flamboyant artistic projects, so that a Canadian ballet company dubbed "national" will not have to scurry home from the Deep South for want of a few (very few) thousand dollars, or appeals for support will not have to be made from the stage of Ottawa's "Canadian" Repertory Theatre on the rather doubtful grounds that Canada is in danger of becoming the only "civilized" country not to have an active theatre in its capital.

It is significant that the award has been granted for the Festival's building fund. For the past three years the planners have been in danger of being throttled by the shoe-string on which they were operating.

Coming as it does in the middle of an extensive campaign for building funds, the grant will undoubtedly be received with more than mild rejoicings. But an earlier grant without stipulations, designed to place the artistic project on a satisfactory financial basis from the outset might have seemed motivated more by interest in the arts and less by an interest in international prestige.

The Stratford Shakespearean Festival has achieved an artistic eminence that the provincial government now feels obliged to maintain. We hope that this obligation is derived, not from a frantic desire to maintain the reputation of this still-amorphous entity called Canada, but from a new-born sense of duty aimed at the cultural betterment of those who live here.

artistic apathy?

The UC Players' Guild, tearfully proclaiming that nobody cared, held a meeting yesterday. For this meeting, over fifty undergraduates showed up, with blood in their eye over the suggestion that the guild be disbanded owing to STUDENT APATHY. This reaction, and the constructive suggestions that were made at the meeting, suggest that there is no lack of creative intuitionists in University College. Perhaps the failure here, as elsewhere, lies in an inability of those at the top to channel this enthusiasm in the proper direction.

painters eleven at hh

Exactly how to criticize a show of this emancipated painting is not all clear. I can not say to myself, "This is what he is trying to do, and here he succeeds, and here he fails." The only clear purpose is the painting itself. These paintings, however, do not often easily explain themselves. They are sometimes a coherent, consistent— if unexpected— experience for the viewer; more often they seem confused and unsatisfying, and exist for me only as a vague annoyance. This will be the basis for my criticism; the kind of experience that the paintings are for me. With no hint from the artists I find this the only possible approach. As for explanations, you can try to find them for yourself; perhaps explanations are not as important as we think they are.

Of the paintings, three by Nakamura and two by Hodgson give me satisfaction. The three Nakamura paintings, Island and Fog, Lakeside, and Inner Movement, are direct, uncomplicated, delicate works infused with calm life. Green and Blue and Regatta, by Hodgson, have sweeping movement and free forms, and again a feeling of life. This difficult-to-define "feeling of life" is mostly lacking in the other work in the show.

Interestingly, the above two artists use a limited range of colour, while those whose use of colour is more ambitious seem to have lost control, with unhappy results. Oscar Cahen leads me into some fantastic other world, but I soon tire of his surface cleverness. Dark Flower, also by Cahen, represents a more challenging direction.

I have the feeling that little of this painting springs from the ultimate concern with life that is the business of the artist. Perhaps the artists are involved with the troubled surface of affairs, but so are we, and their copying of it can only tire us further and confuse us.

He said that "in some countries the whole paraphernalia of science is diverted to serve the objectives of the state."
"Our efforts must be devoted to achieving a balanced program of university expansion," he said. Mr. Porter outlined briefly the province's advisory role in planning for university expansion, to cope with 1966's impending flood of university applicants. Maintenance and capital grants to other Ontario universities were increased by two and a half million dollars. Carleton College was the biggest gainer, with an $800,000 grant for new buildings. Other increases in capital and maintenance grants: Queen's, $500,000; UWO, $500,000; McMaster, $350,000; University of Ottawa, $350,000; Assumption U, $400,000.

Grants to the Ontario Agricultural College, Macdonald Institute, Ontario Veterinary College and Kemptville Agricultural School, were increased by almost four million dollars, to nine million dollars.

The reason given was that she had slandered the university authorities in charging them with conspiring in a riot over her admission. A university official said Miss Lucy "would be killed" by mob action if she attempted to return to the campus.)

Despite the student vote, there was evidence of sympathy on campus for the 26 year old negro-coed. One professor offered $10 in a letter to the McGill Daily to help Miss Lucy in her fight. "Alternatively," said the professor, "the money might be offered to one of her white fellow students to seek more congenial surroundings in South Africa."

Both the McGill Daily and the President of the McGill Students' Executive Council had spoken out in favor of Miss Lucy's stand.

The only battle to appear on the scene was one between John Halligan and Vic's Grant. As hard as they tried to get at each other, cooler heads prevailed. Koshan, McDonald, McLean, Egan, Johns and Nourse played well for the Vic team, as they have all season long.

For the Irish, Frennette, Wadsworth and Reddall played well on defense. Kostyk played his usual crushing defensive game. Shepherd, Doty and Fisher played well for St. Mike's on the forward line.

With Vic now eliminated, St. Mike's A's will meet Trinity A's next Monday in the semi-final.

PC Leader Visits Campus

George Drew, national leader of the Progressive-Conservative Party, is coming to the Toronto campus Monday.

The leader of the opposition will make two speeches while on the campus. An address characterized as "a major policy speech" by Ted Rogers, President of the U of T Progressive-Conservative club, will be made at 9:00 p.m. in the Music Room of the Vic Union.

"All students are welcome to attend," said Rogers. During the question period after the speech, students will have an opportunity to ask the Rt. Hon. George Drew "anything they like — and he will answer all questions to the best of his ability," said Rogers.

Beforehand, Mr. Drew will make a speech on "Canada" at the annual dinner of the Trinity College Literary Institute at 6:30 p.m.

Prof. Ferguson Guest Lecturer

Professor G. A. Ferguson of the Department of Psychology at McGill University was a guest lecturer of the department here on February 20 and 21.

His lecture topic was "The Role of Mathematics in Psychology."

This dinner will be preceded by a reception at the college.

Another reception will be given for the opposition leader following his speech at the Vic Union.

It will be held at 95 St. George, said Rogers, and will be open to all students who listened to the Rt. Hon. George Drew's speech.

SCM Forming Work Camps Chance for Summer Students

About 100 students from all parts of Canada will have the opportunity to meet each other and live together this summer in "work camps" sponsored by the Student Christian Movement, it was announced this week.

Students will work in factories or in mental hospitals, and live in one of the four camps located across the country. Two of the camps are located in industrial areas—Montreal and Calgary, while the mental health camps are located at Weyburn Mental Hospital in Saskatchewan and Oliver Hospital near Edmonton. The experience obtained from the latter two in techniques of psychiatry has attracted psychology students especially in the past years.

Students interested in learning more about the work camps are invited to drop into the SCM office in Hart House.

Applications for AVR Now Closed SAC to Discuss Revue Wednesday

Five applications have been submitted for the directorship of next year's All Varsity Revue. Donna Heineman, chairman of the Students' Administrative Council's AVR Committee, announced last night that applications have been closed. They will be considered at a full meeting of the AVR committee next Monday.

The AVR was last produced on campus in 1953. It was then an all-campus revue, with students from most faculties in the campus participating. It has not been held for the past three years because of financial difficulties, difficulty of obtaining playing time in Hart House, and trouble in getting all-campus support.

The AVR's Committee recommendations on:

- (1) Whether there will be an AVR next year, and
- (2) Who will direct it if the SAC decides to sponsor it, will be presented to the SAC next Wednesday night.

"The applicants seem very good," Miss Heineman said.

Charles Fator (I, Pre-Med). His application shows that he has done several camp shows.

Marvin Catzman (I, U.C.) He has been director of a review-type skit and played the leading role in RUR presented by St. Michael's College and U.C. last fall.

Phil Cowan (I, U.C.) He has done several musical comedy productions. He has been co-producer and director of several shows at a summer camp.

Curt Reis (III, U.C.) and Mitt Barnes applied together for Director and Musical Director.

Reis has directed six campus productions and won acclaim in the campus drama festival.

Next year he will be doing graduate study in philosophy.

Barnes has written several background scores and four ballets. He is presently studying at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

D. G. Creighton Award Winner - Best Non-Fiction

Professor D. G. Creighton, Chairman of the History Department, University of Toronto, last week was announced winner of a Governor General's Award. The second book in his series, "John A. MacDonald, the Young Politician", won this year's creative non-fiction award. This is the second time in three years that Professor Creighton has won this honour. In 1953, when the first volume of the series was published, it was widely acclaimed from all quarters as an important contribution to the perpetuation of Canadian History.

The professor's latest work, published in 1955, has been well received, not only as has been indicated by the award, but as shown by other sources as well. The Globe and Mail says of it, "... a most valuable and permanent contribution has been made to Canadian literature."

Professor Creighton was born in Toronto, and received his primary degree at Vic., later studying at Oxford. In 1927, he joined the History department here, eventually ascending to its chairmanship. Since 1940 three fellowships were granted him, culminating recently with the Tyrell Medal for history writing.

FROS Peterboro Weekend Five Foreign Students Visit

Five of the more than five hundred foreign students at the U of T will be heading out to Peterborough this Saturday to spend a weekend in Canadian homes.

The visit, arranged by the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students' Association, and the Peterborough Rotary Club, will put each of the five students in the home of an average Canadian family for the weekend. "The purpose of the weekend", said Mrs. Kay Riddell, FROS secretary, "is to help the foreign students understand Canada and Canadians better."

This weekend will be the third such visit arranged through FROS. Previous weekends have seen five other students go to Peterborough last year, and seventeen to Bowmanville last fall.

The students going on this weekend include a married couple and two other students from Trinidad, and a student from Jamaica.

Miss Mizpah Duncan, a 26-year-old co-ed from Nassau, British West Indies, said that her participation in the Bowmanville weekend "was good for me."

"The people are not 'nice'—they're natural", said Miss Duncan, "there is a great personal relationship."

Mrs. Riddell explained that the function of FROS was to initiate and organize activities such as this that would help the overseas student know Canada and Canadians better. "We're a clearing house and center of help for foreign students, aiding them in finding their way around the city."

Mrs. Riddell said that one of FROS's biggest difficulties was in getting sufficient Canadian students to come out and help greet the overseas students.

Skulehouse Four Competes At 8 With 4 Quartets

The Skulehouse Four, winners of the Interfaculty Quartet Contest, will try to cop the Intercollegiate Quartet Contest Trophy at 8 p.m. tonight in Hart House. They will compete with quartets from McMaster, McGill, Montreal and Waterloo.

Last year, in the first Intercollegiate Contest, the Skulehouse Four were the winners of the "McDowell Barber Pole", a trophy donated by Garth McDowell, the Undergraduate Secretary of Hart House.

"Members of Hart House should bring their girls to the Members' Invitational Dinner, 6:15-6:45", said Gus Ivory (III, Trinity), Secretary of the House Committee. "We have also arranged for coffee and cake in the East Common Room following the quartet contest."

'Russian Clergy' at Knox

A visiting "Russian clergyman and his escorts" kept Knox College in an uproar last night. The visitors were "Archbishop Borax," a "politburo official" and "an agent of the Russian Secret Police". The occasion was a banquet for the graduating theological class.

An estimated 90 students and their guests listened to "Archbishop Borax" describe the "very personal aspects" of Russian theological life. Said the "Archbishop": "In Russia our seminaries are built across from cemeteries in case some theologians disagree. I am glad to see that in Canada you can disagree with the professors in safety."

The lecture was occasionally interrupted so that the "politburo official" could cut out parts of the speech. An attempt to describe "Russian liberty" was quickly stifled by the hovering "secret police agent."

The heavily garbed visitor was asked if there is religious freedom in Russia.

"Of course, all the people who are living are free — those who are not free are not living."

"Is it true that there is only one political party in Russia?"

"No. We have the Young Communist Party, the Old Communist Party, and the Middle Aged Communist Party."

The "Archbishop" was introduced by "an official of a well-known church," who later conferred upon him an "honorary Doctorate of Divinity."

The skit ended when the Archbishop was chased off the platform by his whistle blowing "protectors," who kept yelling, "To Siberia with him."

Final Reception Of WUS Tonite

Engineers Like Toike Oike But Want More 'Obscenity'

Some engineers at the University of Toronto are disappointed in Toike Oike, their student newspaper. They prefer "much more obscenity, as it used to have before the reform." Those interviewed appreciate the humor though some wish that it were more risqué.

A small cross-section of Skule students voiced their opinions on a poll conducted by The Varsity last night. They were asked to give comments on Toike Oike.

Most were in favor of the paper and thought it good reading. One almost universal complaint though, was that it did not come out often enough.

One graduate student said that Toike Oike has a tendency to "class the Engineers as lacking in the humanities."

Typical comments were: "The Varsity could learn something from the Humor Column in the Toike Oike." "A little risqué but the Engineers are mostly men so it doesn't matter." One girl student thought the paper was sometimes a bit vulgar.

The general attitude of the Engineers was that the paper covers Skule news sufficiently and "that it is typically engineering—which is good."

Most of them get a kick out of the jokes; "chock full of humor"; "don't find jokes like them anywhere else—thank goodness."

"Heavenly days" was a faculty member's comment.

What Makes a Fireman Tick?

Firemen were checked for radio-activity last night after the $22,000 Mining Building blaze. Shortly after the fire, two University of Toronto graduate students arrived with geiger counters. They checked firemen, their equipment, the building, and the gutted laboratory. An arson squad will investigate the cause of the fire tomorrow. —Photo courtesy The Telegram

Isotopes In Lab; Check Firemen In $20,000 Blaze

Fire gutted a second-story research laboratory in the Mining building last night.

Thirty firemen and 200 pieces of equipment were checked with Geiger counters when it was learned radioactive materials had been stored in the lab.

Damage to the 50-year-old building was estimated at $8,000 by the Toronto fire department. Fire, smoke and water damaged at least five lecture rooms and laboratories on two stories before firemen left.

Total damage was estimated at $20,000 by an unofficial source.

Firemen found a leadlined wooden box inside the gutted lab. The wood on the outside was charred, but the lead covering was reported intact. There was some other radioactive material in the water on the floor.

Immediately after the fire, the gutted lab was checked with geiger counters to determine the degree of radioactivity. Although no dangerous radiation was found, for safety reasons, all firemen, their clothing and equipment were checked for radioactivity. (See picture at left).

An explosion started the fire and broke two windows on the College St. side of the lab. An official cause for the fire has yet to be determined but it is believed a lighted bunsen burner may have ignited escaping hydrogen in the lab.

Twenty-five foot flames were leaping from windows when firemen arrived. "I thought for a while we had a pretty good fire on our hands," one fireman said. "It was so hot, the back stairs were charred when we went upstairs," he said. These stairs are thirty feet from the laboratory door.

He complained of the heavy, opaque, smoke in the building.

By eight o'clock, ten minutes after arriving, firemen had extinguished the flames. They threw broken glass and lab equipment out the windows and ripped away tin ceilings over the gutted lab and hall, to check any spread of the fire. Still-smouldering timbers were thrown out windows.

For an hour and a half they mopped up water on the Mining Building's first floor and basement. On the main floor, water had dripped into Dean McLaughlin's office, into classrooms, and the hall. The water flooded parts of the basement as well.

Tarpaulins covered the main floor at the worst drip points. Firemen used mops, pails and pumps to drain the building.

Two university professors were immediately called to the scene. President Smith and several other professors arrived later in time to be checked for radioactivity.

Police stopped President Smith when he first tried to enter the building.

President Smith was photographed with four firemen after they had been checked for radioactivity. He was reported unradioactive. "You can have babies now," he told the firemen as he left.

All the fire equipment was

No Meeting Yet Held By Library On Late Closing

The SAC's request to have library hours extended to 11:00 p.m. for the month of March has not yet been considered by the Library Committee. Nor has the date of the committee meeting to consider the request been set.

Mr. R. H. Buackborn, chief librarian, attended the SAC meeting of February as a result of an investigation on library hours, was asked to call a special meeting of the committee to consider the students' council request to keep the Wallace Room open till eleven on an experimental basis.

At the last SAC meeting, February 22, a letter was received from Mr. Blackburn stating he would ask the chairman of the committee to call a meeting "at his earliest convenience."

Late last week, Mr. Blackburn said he did not know when the meeting would be held. He could not say whether or not it was planned before the next SAC meeting (which is this Wednesday.)

Mr. Blackburn said he would inform the SAC by letter of the results of the meeting.

Vic Committee Opens Drive For Student Social Work

Sparked by a disgust with the futility of student activity, the Victoria College Union has begun a campus-wide movement to direct student energy towards helping worthy groups outside the campus.

A committee of five Vic undergraduates has contacted student governments in all colleges and faculties to support this movement and — with the exception of UC — has received unanimous support.

The Vic idea is simple. "The university should be one of the focal points in the life of a community, and as such should be conscious of the needs of that community," says a committee statement, released to The Varsity last night.

Among the activities the statement lists as possible student contributions to outside activities are:

—The entertainment of a group of underprivileged children.

—Reading to people in an old age home.

—A recreation program for New Canadians.

—Opening dress rehearsals of student dramatic clubs to children.

—Teaching English to New Canadians.

SPS called the idea "very good," wished them luck, and advised contacting the new Engineering Society executive.

Trinity Board of Stewards commended Vic enthusiastically, suggested several specific outlets for constructive activity and pointed out student governments might act as liaisons between students and social agencies. Trinity also suggested directing initiatives along constructive lines.

PHE called the idea "worthwhile."

P & OT backed the Vic committee, but joined all faculties with heavy timetables in warning that students might not be able to spare the time to support social work agencies.

B-Ball Blues Take Second Spot Down Gaels and McGill Redmen Leo Madden Top Man With 19

By HOWIE MANDELL

Montreal Que. (Staff) — The Basketball Blues of this university had their backs to the wall this weekend when they pulled out of town to do battle with Queens' and McGill. They had to win these two games to gain second place in the Intercollegiate Basketball League final standings. Well, this morning McManus' crew are in that prized position, doing everything that was asked of them Friday evening in Kingston they defeated a rejuvenated Queens' crew 69-64 and on Saturday they ended the season with a 75-64 victory over McGill Redmen.

It took a real team effort on Friday for the Blues to squeeze by Queens. After a winless season the Gaels were up for their match with Toronto, and gave the Blues a battle all the way. At no time throughout the contest did the Blues hold a greater than seven point lead over the fighting Gaels.

Toronto scoring was a collaborative affair with Peter Potter leading the field with 14 points. John Dacshypp hooped 13 while John Sheppard and Ruby Richman garnered 11 and 10 points respectively. Potter played one of his best games of the season, scoring most of his baskets on jump shots from the corner. Sheppard played a particularly good rebounding game, getting a good percentage of them in the first half.

Greg Stone and Bruce Page were the game's top scorers, each hooping 19 points. Stone got most of his baskets under the backboard on layups and hook shots. Jim Harrison scored ten for the losers.

Ahead 66-62 with a minute and a half to go, Leo Madden began ragging the ball and was fouled in the process. He sank one shot and the Blues grabbed the rebound on his second shot. A few seconds later Potter added to the Toronto total on a layup to put the game on ice.

On Saturday, a tired bunch of Blues outplayed the Redmen all the way to capture an easy 75-64 victory. Leo Madden made his farewell performance in a Blue uniform a memorable one as he led Toronto with 19 points. Handling the ball well and passing beautifully he spearheaded the Varsity attack all evening. John Dacshypp played his usual high scoring game hooping 14 while Al Vaichulis chimed in with 12. Pete Potter and Ruby Richman sank ten apiece for Toronto.

Don Wright led McGill with 21 points, 13 of his total came in the second period. Bucket man Leon Duplessis finished the season with 15 points. It was Wright who kept McGill in the game in the diving moments when Toronto threatened to walk away from the Redmen. McGill's chief difficulty throughout the game was their inability to sink the dozens of shots they took.

NOTES... Assumption ruined the Blues' chances of holding second place by themselves when the Raiders clobbered McMaster in Hamilton on Saturday 93-50... Both teams end the season with identical seven and three records... Pete Potter and Ruby Richman carried the 200 mark in scoring on Saturday while Hesh Rotman fractured the century mark... Madden will probably go to Temple next year where he should be a great asset to that school's basketball team...

Carabins Defeat Blues 3-2 Guevremont Tops In Nets

By JOHN WILSON

Clever netminding by Cy Guevremont and furious back-checking by visiting University of Montreal forwards paced the Carabins to a slim 3-2 decision over the Intercollegiate champion Varsity Blues as the league schedule came to an end for Toronto Friday night in Varsity Arena.

Guevremont played the full game in the Montreal net, despite a broken nose sustained in Thursday afternoon's practice session, and with his vision slightly impaired by a plastic face guard.

It was the third loss of the 12-game schedule for the Blues, and their third on home ice. Varsity dropped one-goal tilts to each of the other clubs in the four-team loop this season, but Friday's loss had no bearing on the final standings. Blues have already won the Intercollegiate title by whipping Laval 7-3 a week ago in Quebec City. However the win means the Carabins still have a chance of reaching third place, while either Laval or McGill will occupy second place depending on this weekend's action. There is no post-season playoff for the championship.

Winger Ken Linseman fired his 18th goal of the season in the second period when Blues were trailing 2-0, and Johnny Macdonald tied it up in the opening minutes of the third. Linseman's tally set a scoring record for the Blues over one season, eclipsing the old mark of 17 goals set by Dave Reid last year.

Carabins seemed to control play throughout the game, relaxing for only a few minutes in the third period after Macdonald got the tying goal. Gerard Houle coasted the Blues as-leep in the opening minute of the first frame after breaking up a Varsity rush at his own blue line. Carrying himself he picked a path between the Blue defenders to the left wing and beat Cecutti with a slightly screened drive to the lower left-hand corner to make it 1-0.

Midway in the period Gaby Alan and Mathieu Girard broke in on Cecutti with John Casey back alone and Girard had a clean shot on the Blue netminder after Alain had drawn Casey out of the play.

Linseman caught fire in the second period, slipping in a loose puck from the goalmouth, but constant penalties hampered the Blues' attempts to regain the organization lost in the first stanza. Don Cossar had taken 11 stitches after receiving a cut over the left eye in the first frame, and captain Red Stephen moved up to take over his old centre spot on the first line.

Blues came out in the third with a sudden air of determination and it looked like a win when Macdonald finished off the best rush of the night. Brian Anderson slipped between the Carabin defencemen with his usual ease, losing the puck in the scramble, but Macdonald hammered it past Guevremont from fifteen feet out to tie it up at 2-2.

Minutes later Gilles Poirier, playing his second game of the season for the cellar-dwelling Carabins, fired a shot from the wing that deflected to Girard's stick. Cecutti had no chance at point-blank range, and the scoring ended to complete the upset.

Blue notes... In a post-game ceremony U of T Athletic Director Warren Stevens presented the Queen's Cup to Blue captain Red Stephen. It's the second in a row for the Blues, each time with the ageless rethead at the wheel. Congratulations go to coach Jack Kennedy and a very fine group of athletes... Linseman's 18 goals and 13 assists give him 31 points for the season, possibly an all-Varsity high. Cossar stood second for the team with nine and 10 for 25, while Akitt has six and 13 for 19. The big line's total is 75 for the season another Blue high. B. Anderson fired nine goals and set up four more for 13 while Dave Jackson had one and 10 for 11. Sandy Morrison and John Macdonald added another 10 points each to Anderson's total to a rather respectable 33 for the second line... Linseman's stranglehold on the individual scoring title may be in danger as well. McGill's big gun Brian McCann fired a goal and picked up an assist Thursday when the Redmen topped Laval 6-1 to bring us to 1 to 24 points. He added two more Saturday and has one more game to catch up to the Varsity flash... Blue players voted Linseman the team's most valuable player in the voting process.

For the game, Tom Dufre Trophy was passed to Capt. Alan Gaby Jackson who it last season.

Jr. SPS Scores Ice Upset 4-2 Victory Ousts Medics

One of the season's big upsets was recorded at the Arena last Friday as J.F. SPS knocked off Sr. Meds in intramural hockey competition. The win climaxed an inspired game put up by the Skule team who out hustled the Meds team right from the start and ended up on the long end of a 4-2 score. Meds, on the other hand, were expected to be one of the teams figuring in the semi-finals and finals.

John Crowley sent the Skule team out in front while they were playing a man short. A little later, John Patterson tipped in Crowley's long shot to add to the Skule margin.

Meds started out the second period with grim determination. They were forced to take the offensive, and while they were doing this Jim Gray caught the Meds defense flatfooted, and scored on a breakaway.

With little more than two minutes to play, Meds came to life by scoring two quick goals, one by Day and the other by Marshall.

With a little better than a minute to go and with a Skule player in the penalty box, Meds got a faceoff deep in Skule territory. They pulled their goalie but to no avail. The Skule defense held and Joe Bielawski scored the clincher into the vacated net.

German in the Skule nets and Gordon in the Meds nets came up with brilliant stops during the game. Patterson, Adam, Pulfor, Rentis and Bielawski played well for Skule. For the losers, it was Wilkinson, Doray, H. Kerr, Marshall and Paul.

Pots Down UC Marsh Tallies 3

In the opening game of the women's interfaculty hockey championship, best of two game series, last year's champions, POT defeated UC 1,4-2. To win the championship, UC will have to win by three goals on Monday. Whether UC will be able to do this or not will depend on their play at 4 on Monday at the Arena.

The girls from the "huts" outplayed UC throughout the game except for the last half of the second period, when the champions of the second league made the winners of league one look pretty weak. Elaine Sossin, the only goalie who plays on her knees, was a sensation in the UC net.

In the first twenty minutes of play, POT showed its superior skating ability and better organized playing by pumping three goals into the UC net. Flashy Rosalie Marsh was the star as she found the open net twice. Equally fast Betty Payette added one to the POT score, but UC was with its scorer too. This was Val Godsoe.

In the second period, Rosalie Marsh again fired to put another goal on the POT score sheet in a sensational shot from the far corner that had goalie Sossin completely beaten. Ellen Currie notched the lone UC tally of the period.

Going into the third period, the score was 4-2 for Pot and that was the way it remained for the rest of the period. The play although somewhat erratic was fairly even with POT having perhaps a slight edge. Jean Simpson on the UC defensive line played a stalwart game.

Nominations

The girls of the university are reminded to make their nominations for the Women's Athletic Directorate and for the Presidencies of the Sports clubs by noon on Tuesday, March 6. Nomination forms can be picked up in the SAC Building. Voting will take place during the following week.

A nomination for the Directorate must be signed by two girls and the nominee must be in her second or higher year, but not in her final year at the time of the nomination.

Junior Skule Semi Finalists Defeat St. Mike's 63-61

Junior S.P.S. rolled to an easy 63-61 victory over St. Mike's B's in quarter final basketball action Friday. It was the seventh straight victory of Skule without a setback. The Engineers now advance into the semi-finals meeting Senior Victoria on Tuesday. Skule jumped ahead early in the first period and gradually increased their lead throughout the game. The score was 21-15 at the end of the first period, 38-22 at the end of the second and stretched to a 32 point margin at the end of the contest. The two main factors deciding the game were Skules rebounding and accurate shooting. With Hank Galka, curate shooting, With Hank Galka, Al Fraser and Serge Pelligrini controlling the boards and Jerry Wojden and Dick Jaworski scoring on a large percentage of their shots, the Skule men had little difficulty in outclassing the Irish

For the winners Pelligrini scored 11, Wojden 10 and Jaworski nine. For St. Mike's Ed Iglar scored 16 and Auredram, nine. Iglar was a standout on both offence and defence for the losers. Displaying an accurate jump shot he led all scorers.

The Women's Athletic Building — a dream or a reality? For the last thirty years, the women of the University of Toronto have been promised an Athletic Building and last year, in the President's speech, he definitely promised us one, but this year, it seems to be a different story. In the President's 1955-56 speech, there was no mention of a Women's Athletic Building. Is it that the President has forgotten the Women's Athletic Building? I hardly think this is possible, since the new building will be located beside his home and he is in yelling range of the Physical and Health Education Department.

Is it because the University of Toronto has no money? Again the answer is in the negative because building has been put away for several years. What then is it that is holding up construction? A suggestion that has been made which seems to be substantiated, is the inability of the architects to draw plans conducive to the tastes of the Building Committee. If the architects are not capable of doing the job, why keep them on contract? Surely, a firm can be found that can take the contract and not consume 10 years drawing the plans.

If this is the clue to the key of why the women of this university have not the proper facilities, the responsibility clearly lies with the administration of the University. It is high time that the "powers that be" arose to the occasion and do something. How long can they expect the Physical and Health Education department to function with the present antiquated facilities, let alone hope that a sports programme be maintained? Let's have some constructive action, gentlemen—you cannot go along for ever with this go nothing policy.

The Biographer

time to leave

This Wednesday night, the NFCUS question will be resurrected on this campus, as the issue of Toronto's membership in the national student federation comes before the SAC.

Before the usual and oft-repeated debate on the matter begins, it would be well to separate the intrinsic merit which lies in the idea of a national student federation from the oft-lamentable practical workings of NFCUS.

That the idea of a student federation is praiseworthy is beyond question. That the present NFFCUS has many and grievous faults also lies beyond question. The idea favours NFCUS: the facts do not.

The questions that the council must decide are these: is the idea of a national federation worth keeping, when there are many objections to the present organization?

Is the council justified in spending almost $5,000 a year of students' funds on NFCUS membership? Could this money be better applied, both on and off the campus?

It is most important that the SAC's decision be made a definite one. It is unfair both to NFCUS and to the students on this campus to be continuously raising the issue, and clouding all future prospects with uncertainty. There is absolutely not the slightest point in attaching any conditions to Toronto's continued membership: or saying that "we'll wait and see" — these devices have been used too often.

Considering all the facts, the most worth-while course would be to withdraw from the federation, at the same time committing Toronto to some definite program of inter-university relationships.

campus social services

The students of Victoria College connected with the "social service" project reported on page one of this issue have done the university and their community a real service.

We are inclined far too easily to shrug off any efforts to help our fellow man as being either impractical or uninteresting. Yet these students have shown that there can be both practicality and interest in student social services projects.

The participation of students in these projects would add meaning to their everyday activities, and give a purpose to their immediate existence.

There is no reason why the University should become an ivory-towered cloister: students can obtain practical knowledge, and be of practical service, by aiding the community in which we live.

prostitution?

Up until Friday night we had considered some things in a University community sacred.

Some things, we thought, belonged to us and to us alone.

Like our warden, for instance.

Now we find, with a shock of great disillusionment that the friendly grin, the strong handshake, the light and ready word that we always found in that hallowed perpendicular gothic institution, are displayed, nay offered to the unlettered masses as familiarly as one might display say, a new make of automobile.

comment

It has come to our attention that some people on this campus consider the posting of a slate in elections dishonest political methods.

We suppose they would also consider the party system current in democracies dishonest.

Each afternoon last week Hart House Theatre witnessed an interesting example of intellectual tight-rope walking, performed in a most informed and amiable manner by Dr. Leon Edel of New York University. In the twenty-fifth annual series of the Alexander Lectures, Professor Edel, a graduate of McGill University and author of the definitive life of Henry James, spoke on the Biography of Literary Men.

The thesis of Dr. Edel's lectures was that the biographer is as much of a creative artist as the poet or novelist. He defined three types of biography: the documentary, where the biographer assembles every available piece of information about his subject, usually in chronicle order; the pictorial biography, where the biographer reconstructs a portrait of his subject from very little evidence; and the novelistic or imaginative biography, where the biographer, faced with the material of the documentary, tries to mould it into a living portrait of his subject through the use of his imagination. It was the difficulties facing this third type of biographer with which Dr. Edel dealt.

The biographer is in a peculiar relation to his subject. Usually he has chosen the subject because something in that particular life attracted him, had some reference to his own life. The danger here is that he will let his own experiences and conclusions on the problems that faced his subject direct the vision of his subject's life. Occasionally, for instance, in his Life of Johnson, Boswell forgets his subject and speaks of his own feelings on arriving back in London, say, and we have no idea of what Dr. Johnson felt at all.

Few biographers have Boswell's rather unique opportunities of appending themselves to their subject while the subject is still living and even of covertly leading their subject into interesting and revealing situations. Most biographers are confronted with a room containing a desk laden with documents—letters, notes, other biographies, grocery bills, bank stubs. On the walls of the room, for the literary biographer, are the works of the subject and these create new difficulties. Not only are they another source for inferring biographical data, but also, presumably, the biography must illuminate them in some degree. Dr. Edel was careful to distinguish between a critic of the new school and his own ideal of the biographer. The new critics infer facts of an author's experience from his works. By reducing this to the absurd, by envisioning a critic who would consider Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard bad art because Gray did not write it in a graveyard and because it is doubtful if yew trees really cast shadows by moonlight, Dr. Edel attempted to show the superiority of the biographer to the new critic.

Dr. Edel spoke earnestly about the biographer's "as yet uneasy flirtation with psychology," but his conclusion that the biographer's insight was far superior to the psychologist's was arrived at through an extremely unfair misrepresentation of psychology. In his analysis of Willa Cather's The Professor's House, "as a psychologist would do it," Dr. Edel spoke purely from the outmoded point of view of a Freudian psychologist. Thus the house which the Professor would not leave became a symbol of the mother's womb and the old dress maker who shared his attic study a mother substitute. Any self respecting modern psychologist would disdain such an analysis and would give an interpretation similar to the one Dr. Edel set up as the biographer's, that is, relating the house symbol to the events of Miss Cather's life.

The most forward-looking and provoking point Dr. Edel made was in his consideration of Virginia Woolf's Orlando as biography. The subject of Mrs. Woolf's biography lives for over three hundred years and changes sex in the eighteenth century, but the fantasy succeeds in creating an excellent picture of Victoria Sackville-West and her ancestors. This unique, illogical way of handling time, Dr. Edel showed, is followed in some slight degree by the imaginative biographer, but none has achieved the brilliant success of Orlando.

In all, Dr. Edel made no stimulating discoveries and put forth no revolutionary theses. His lectures were a neat summing up of most present biographical practice. The ideal of the biographer would be that of Lytton Strachey in Eminent Victorians where Victorian dignitaries are shown in some of their less dignified moments, but there would be less of the biographer in the biography than beef-aging Strachey has in his book.

One Voice From Ten Thousand

Editor, The Varsity:

What does one man's voice mean? I have no influence, I have no power, I have no authority. My voice is a squeak of a worm amidst the clangour of the battle. It is utterly insignificant.

But I am not alone! There are ten thousand of us Students of the University of Toronto! Ten thousand young men and women whose common voice could shake the walls of Jericho!

Fellow Students! From the depths of my insignificance I cry to you... Hear me! There has been a murder committed, a mass, hysterical murder, springing from ignorance and hatred.

Not a single murder but many thousands of vicious murders have been perpetrated and one more is about to be added to the horrible list. And the murderers are free, protected by the sympathetic public opinion!

From Lincoln's time the Negroes have been terrorized, intimidated, treated as vermin in the Southern parts of the United States. Thousands of individual Negroes who dared to speak up were outright murdered on flimsiest pretenses. Their murderers are still with us. The blood of Emmet Till is a silent witness.

Now is the time to act. Now, before the bruised body of Auberline Lucy is found in an alley and the murderer is called to stand before the jury of his accomplices!

Fellow Students! If we all speak at once we can exert a significant force in this matter. No, not just a single letter of protest and condemnation to the University of Alabama, but a constant, ceaseless pressure of solved.

opinion until the crisis is reached. Fellow Students! If we act together we can and will change the world! Let us act, at least out of the fear of the terrible day of black supremacy. The racial memory is long and some day we may find ourselves the vermin among our black masters.

Only then there will not have been a breach of justice, but its fulfillment.

I've Been Promoted!

Editor, The Varsity:

I was especially gratified to read in Friday's issue of The Varsity that I had been promoted to the lead role in RUR, presented by St. Michael's College and University College last fall.

I had been suffering under the delusion since last November that my part was not quite so important, and, had I known how large my part really was, I would have grown a beard and auditioned for the CBC.

All kidding aside, I should not like to take any credit away from Les Lawrence, who did in fact play the lead in RUR. And I wish to point out that nowhere in my application did I make such a claim.

"No Skis"

Editor, The Varsity:

Last week-end in the Canadian Ski Championships at Collingwood and Midland, the U of T ski team made an impressive showing against Canada's best skiers.

In the Slalom, the skiing Blues placed 3rd, 4th, 10th, 13th, 16th, and 17th. Led by Don Esson and Bill McIntyre respectively.

In the jumping, Dave Palmer and John Hetherington flew 142 and 122 feet respectively during a blinding snowstorm.

Come on boys: Give 'em a hand... they deserve it.

FILMS

An unusually good batch, with two top contenders for Academy Awards currently having their first run here. Anna Magnani, in THE ROSE TATTOO (the University), is vitriolic, volcanic, and very funny. PICNIC (at Shea's) also has something to be said for it. Laurence Olivier's latest, RICHARD III, has opened at the International, and will probably be around for some time. MARTY and HILL 24 DOESN'T ANSWER can still be found if you look.

claudio arrau

Pianist Claudio Arrau's approach to music is at times not unlike that of a phenomenally trained acrobat who has just received his first lessons in ballet.

This virtuoso, whose fingers co-ordinate like the finest precision mechanism, is frequently at a loss when challenged with the subtleties of classical and impressionistic piano playing. Regardless of stylistic consideration, he will force the strait-jacket of romantic bravura playing on any age or composer.

It was my impression last Thursday night at Eaton's Auditorium that Mr. Arrau's interpretative approach depended mainly on an all too literal understanding of the score. Whenever fortes were indicated the pianist took it as the opportunity for a tempestuous release of energy.

The Mozart Sonata in A minor K310, a work of Beethovenesque characteristics was misread because of these excesses. The few refinements to emerge from Mr. Arrau's Mozart, appeared as ornamental appendices rather than functionally determined sentences.

Besides dynamic distortions, Mr. Arrau's artistry suffered also from erratic tempi. These self-imposed temperamental idiosyncracies broke up both the structural and dramatic unity of Beethoven's "Wildstein Sonata" in C major Op.53.

His unusually restrained tempi could not be compensated for by the strangely contrasting break-neck speed and thunderous thuds of fortissimi which followed each other with the agonizing impact of delayed-action bombs.

Mr. Arrau's interpretation of Debussy's Suite pour le Piano revealed his lack of tonal sensitivity. Instead of blending impressionistic colours with frequent dynamic and rhythmic nuances, Mr. Arrau forged the tones with steely, monochromatic plasticity.

Brahms' Variations on a theme of Paganini provided the first glimpse into Mr. Arrau's superb virtuosity. In this work as well as the subsequent Liszt pieces, the brunt of the performance rests on the conquest of technical difficulties. This does not mean, of course, that excellent

RICHARD III

Roses--All The Way

Some interesting speculations on the film's place as art-medium can be raised by a two-and-a-half-hour visit to the International, where Sir Laurence Olivier's production of Richard III is currently showing. Thanks to some judicious camera-work and "interpolations" by David Garrick, Colley Cibber, and others," very little visually or actionwise is left to the audience's imagination. But—considering the nature of the plot—perhaps Shakespeare would have done the same thing if he'd had a set of cameramen working under him.

This seems to me the best of Olivier's Shakespeare-screenings, perhaps because it is the least pretentious. Attempts to heighten mood by camera effects superadded to Shakespearean verse too often look inadequate and a little silly, as Hamlet clearly showed. But a blood-and-thunder melodrama can be immeasurably improved by Technicolor blood oozing over a VistaVision screen, and by thunder with the blessings of a stereophonic sound-track.

The rattling pace of Richard's machinations is speeded by telescoping events even more than Shakespeare did, after a leisurely interpolated start during which the audience can get a rough idea of who's who. And as most of the longer inactive passages are thrown out, the more perceptive members of the House of Lancaster lose their speeches of distrust and invective, and appear a very simple-minded bunch indeed. Also, Richard's plotting is conducted at such a frantic rate that he would have needed a motorcycle parked outside, with an executioner on the pillion, to get away with it all.

All this, of course, is so much gravy for Olivier, who makes Richard a sort of diabolic Cyrano, nimble-witted and itching under imagined scorn. He is at his best in the first half of the film, venting his ambitions straight into the camera with gristy and ironic logic-chopping, his shaming shadow insinuating itself along dull cobblestones as he makes his way to the Tower to console his latest victim.

The rest of the cast are on the sturdy side, most of them, having been robbed of the speeches that made them seem like people. Pamela Brown is an exception as a royal handmaiden, she was present only in spirit in the original, but Olivier brings her on as often and as eye-catching as possible, and even gives her a line. I didn't grudge it to her.

The film's settings leave little to be desired, with pastel colors and dusky reds and browns setting fires smouldering around the screen. The final battle is Olivier (as director and actor) at his best, although I'm still confused by its progress. Anyway, I'm glad the fight was won by the red-headed Paul Bunyan with the Welsh accent. GRAPHIC Action

With the start of a new CBC television show Friday, came the debut of a new television showman in whom anyone who ever visits the Arbor Room must have an interest. From now on, Warden Joseph McCulley of Hart House will be doing for a well-known automobile manufacturer in Canada what Ed Sullivan does for the company in the United States.

At least Worden McCulley made Graphic look comparatively -pontaneous.

The idea behind Graphic is quite exciting. Every week, cameras scattered hither and yon will pick up famous and even unusual people or interesting events, with the warden acting as master of ceremonies in a Toronto studio. The possibilities are immense, especially if the publicity blubs on possible expenses can be believed. But last Friday, Graphic was still exploring.

A half-hour television program can be expected to cast its net more wide than deep, but presenting four different sections (plus commercials) is too bitsy for any sort of semi-serious program. The last section, for example, where the camera looked in on a pilot undergoing a stress test in a walled-in whirlygig, was over almost as soon as it began, without real explanation or exploitation.

Other items included a hasty "photo of Karski," overtly spontaneous-and-unrehearsed, and a languid trip around some models limbering up. ("But Joe," says one, wide-eyed, "I think it takes practice to do anything really well.") Neil Ralston digital dexterity is the most important pre-requisite for a good Liszt player. Without the support of a specific sort of sensitivity compounded of grandeur, passion and emotional control as well, the ten powerful fingers would merely race meaninglessly across the keyboard.

Mr. Arrau does indeed possess the utmost of these requirements. His readings of Liszt's Gnomenreigen and the Mephisto-waltz were insuperable achievements of virtuosity in which both the fingers and the heart became equals for a common end. Erwin Biener.

vice at a rate equivalent to 40 cents per year while resident students will pay $1.20.

Poor students will be offered the services of the two attendant doctors, two assistants and two nurses without charge.

Presiding over the function was Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, India's health minister.

She congratulated WUS for completing the project in less than 14 months and said she was pleased to learn that Delhi University plans to promote further health services during the second five-year plan period.

Canadian contributions to the center were nearly half the total contribution allocated from the WUS International budget. Another $20,000 was donated by the Indian government departments.

Maintenance of the health center will be undertaken by the university, the government and the Indian WUS committee.

Dr. G. S. Mahajani, vice-chancellor of the university expressed the hope that the health center would be an integral part of the institution.

He said WUS stood for the constructive promotion of understanding among students of many nations.

Canadian students and professors now have contributed to two health centers in India, the first at Delhi and the second at Patna.

World University Service in Canada, part of an international student exchange and relief organization, now is raising funds for four major projects.

One of these is a health center in Japan, two others are student hostels in Indonesia and Pakistan and the fourth is a student hostel in Israel.

The projects are supported by WUS committees with the approval of the international office in Geneva.

Roses--Tattooed

Anna Magnani's superb acting makes The Rose Tattoo (at the University) worth seeing, despite the fact that the film does not quite measure up to one's expectations in other respects.

She plays the widow of a truck driver (with a rose tattooed on his chest) who is killed while trying to smuggle a mysterious piece of contraband into another state at the beginning of the film. She shuts herself in her house for three years. Then her fifteen-year-old daughter falls in love with a sailor and Magnani discovers that her own husband was in love with another woman. In reacting to these discoveries, made simultaneously, she meets another truck driver—a clumsy clown who resembles her husband in almost every way and after a few farcical happenings they live happily ever after.

This is a simple plot which seems superficially to serve merely as a vehicle for Anna Magnani. But there are several things in this film which do not fit into this category. All the characters are overdrawn. The sailor is an incredibly innocent all-American. The widow is a tempestuous Sicilian. The daughter is a tempestuous adolescent. Not one of them is realistic.

In addition, Tennessee William's play script is heavily laden with symbolism, and seems to make a deliberate attempt at artificiality. All this tempts one to look anything there.

I must confess that I was unable to find anything there. Neither, it appears, was director Daniel Mann, who adopts a naturalistic setting (enhanced by some excellent photography) which is out of keeping with the deliberately un-naturalistic script.

But the acting, which is uniformly good, makes up for all these deficiencies. They all succeed in making their parts almost believable. And Anna Magnani is over-whelming. She can move one without even speaking, as when the neighbors and the priest come to tell her that her husband has died.

On the whole, it is a very good film to see on a springlike afternoon when one is in a good mood. Then one's critical faculties are suspended and the film is thoroughly enjoyable.

Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, vice-president of India, turns the key in the lock, officially opening the University of Delhi's health center. Canadian students and professors contributed $5,000 to building costs.

If the building had been contaminated, it might have been quarantined for thirty-eight days, the half life period of one of the more active isotopes in the lab.
Post-graduate students had been doing research in the gutted laboratory until 6:30 Sunday evening. A watchman had checked the lab again at 7:30, finding nothing. The alarm was turned in by another worker in the building, and by a passer-by on College Street.

Student Social Work Proposed By Vic

All faculties that did not send statements expressed "whole-hearted approval" according to the committee.

Only dissenters, the UC Lit and WUA, felt that student government was already "overextending itself" and that they should not endorse the program without guaranteed support.

The program began when the Vic College Union appointed the committee to study extra-curricular activities.

A letter from Don Hansford, Emmanuel student, ridiculed selfish activities when New Canadians and the poor needed assistance and education.

On the committee are: Ann Lindsay (IV Anthrop, Associate President of VOU) Gerry Hell-einer (Second Year President) Hugh Hanson (III Poll, Sci, and Ec.) Joan Fidler (II Mod, Lang.) and Barry Willis (II Gen.).

They approached a number of social work organizations and their suggestions were overwhelmingly endorsed.

"We hope the whole student body will participate in this challenging program," said the New Canadians' Service Association.

All student groups in Victoria will be approached by the committee early next year to generate specific activities, said the committee's spokesman. The committee will direct social-work by the students from a college-wide viewpoint.

Ann Lindsay, committee chairman, said she would like to see all colleges and faculties who have indicated their support follow Vic's "concrete example."

Student Health Center To Serve Delhi Youth Built By WUS Grant

The University of Delhi's health center, to which Canadian students and professors contributed nearly $5,000, was opened recently by Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, vice-president of India.

Built to provide health and medical services for more than 9,000 students, the center was financed by grants from World University Service, the Indian ministries of education and health. The land was donated by the university.

Speaking at the opening, Dr. Radhakrishnan said WUS is "a small but significant expression of the growing unity of mankind."

He cited WUS as one of the organizations which, together with the United Nations, the International Court of Justice, and others, is contributing to the development of a world community.

He added, "University education helps students develop an international outlook, understand the desires and aspirations of other peoples."

The center will offer complete physical examination, including tests, screenings and X-Ray facilities. It is planned to provide non-resident students with ser-

SAC Meeting On Wednesday To Discuss NFCUS, Library

One of the busiest SAC meetings of the year is coming up this Wednesday, as the students' council meets to decide, among other things:

—whether or not to stay in NFCUS, the national student federation.

—the feasibility of the SAC's sponsoring an All-Varsity Revue, a campus-wide show.

—what action should be taken on the question of Library closing hours.

The meeting will be addressed by Lewis Perinbam, executive secretary of World University Service of Canada. Mr. F. R. Stone, administration vice-president of the university, will also address the SAC on the university's administration.

The hottest item, said Michael Shoemaker, SAC president, will probably be the NFCUS issue. Several SAC members, he said may bring before the council a proposal to secede from the national federation, to which Toronto pays $4,500 a year in membership fees.

Toronto's membership in NFCUS will also be discussed at an executive meeting of the External Affairs Commission, to be held today. Their report will go before the SAC at its Wednesday meeting, to be held at 7:00 p.m. in Falconer Hall. The meeting is open to students.

U of T SEVERES ALL TIES AS SAC DIVIDES 10-8

A Tense Meeting

No Campus Vote; Seven Are Away

Peter Martin, President of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, here speaks to 18 SAC members and an estimated 40 student visitors in an unsuccessful attempt to convince the SAC that they should not withdraw from NFCUS. Seven of the SAC's 25 members were not represented at the meeting.

—VSP by Jim Feeley

The University of Toronto withdrew last night from the National Student Federation.

The vote — 10-8 in favor of secession — came at the end of a heated two-hour discussion by the Students' Administrative Council. Seven SAC representatives were absent when the vote was taken.

Withdrawal by Toronto takes almost 10,000 students of approximately 40,000 Canadian students out of the federation.

The loss of the 50 cent per student charge will mean NFCUS will lose about 25 percent — $4,500 — of its annual $20,000 budget.

The long debate followed the report of five hours of meetings by the External Affairs Commission on Tuesday and Wednesday. The EAC recommended that Toronto stay in NFCUS, but with the following conditions:

1. That 2 members of this year's EAC be sent to the NFCUS conference as observers.
2. That next year's council withhold its NFCUS fees until after a report was received from them.

The criteria by which they were to evaluate NFCUS were: the re-entrance of the major universities now out of the Federation; More money to local and regional organizations out of the budget; that Canadian Campus, a magazine presenting Canadian student life and writing cease; that the Toronto plan for Canadian unity — through projects such as work camps and seminars, be carried out; and that a fee reduction be planned for 1958.

Ed Schofield, NFCUS co-chairman on campus this year, presented his amendment immediately after the EAC report. He moved "that Toronto sever relations to NFCUS and that no money be placed budgeted for NFCUS in 1956-57."

The vote was taken after an hour and 55 minutes debating and was carried 10-8, with the SAC Reps from Graduate Studies, OCE, Emmanuel, Social Work, Dentistry, Forestry and Wycliffe missing.

A move to have the motion reconsidered, by Miss Jo Flaherty (Nursing), at the end of the debate, failed to achieve the necessary two-thirds majority. Seven voted for, six against.

One of the Engineering reps, and the reps from Pharmacy, Nursing and Victoria (men) abstained on the reconsideration motion.

After the meeting, NFCUS President Peter Martin, who spoke to the meeting, said:

"It is an act of irresponsibility for members of the outgoing council to vote on the fate of the national Federation for the next academic year.

"I am perfectly confident that if other schools do not give up the ghost, Toronto will be back in before the next national conference. I am not so sure students are as unaware of their interests as this vote indicates."

"For the largest university in Canada to withdraw is a complete disgrace," said President Michael Shoemaker (IV Trin.) afterwards. "It is also a disgrace for a university this size not to be able to assume some responsibility for leadership and knowledge of how Canada is constructed.

"Personally, it is very disappointing and very disillusioning."

"We should sever our relations with NFCUS right now and make sure no money is in our budget for next year," said Schofield in making his amendment.

"We cannot afford to consider what will happen if Toronto pulls out, we should clear the way for next year's Council to act on a new plan," he said.

Murray Mogan (II Law) said that almost 70% of the SAC budget went into administration. He compared the NFCUS office, with three and a half employees, to the SAC office, with six full-time employees. He said that the SAC could handle a lot of the NFCUS office work.

SAC President Shoemaker said the SAC had "twice reaffirmed NFCUS policy and now at the close of the year, members find it advantageous an spectacular to withdraw."

Jill Wallace (P&OT) supported Schofield. She called the NFCUS supporters "idealistic dreamers" and said it would be "1980 before we get the regional seminars they are talking about."

Commons' Sway Shaken, Drew Tells Campus PC's

The foundations of parliamentary supremacy are being shaken by the Liberal government in Ottawa, the Hon. George Drew said Monday night. "The time has come to bring the business of Canada under the control of parliament itself," he said.

The largest political meeting on campus in several years, estimated at 325 students, heard the federal Opposition leader speak to the Progressive Conservative club at Victoria.

He spoke at the Union after appearing as the guest speaker at the annual dinner of the Trinity College Literary Institute.

For reasonable, well-informed debates, Parliament must be able to rely on the statements of its ministers, Mr. Drew said.

"We believe in the supremacy of Parliament," he said. "If you lose that, you lose democracy itself. He said reality was needed, not just the name of reality.

In his exposition of "the right of parliament to know and govern on the basis of knowledge," Drew cited the case of fifteen Harvard airplanes sent to Egypt. "It is not the lethal power of fifteen Harvards I dispute," he said, but the fooling of Parliament by its ministers."

The Minister for External Affairs at first didn't know, and then denied, any shipment of these planes to Egypt, the Opposition Leader said. When the RCAF confirmed a press report that

University Student Aid Asked

A renewed demand for increased aid to university students has been made by the NFCUS Scholarship Committee to the Gordon Commission.

by Toronto students Harry Arthurs and Tom Hammond, it was recommended that the Government begin a program on a national level of increased and more numerous scholarships and bursaries. As a minimum it suggested a program benefiting 10,000 students and costing $5,500,000 a year.

NFCUS surveys have shown that a student can earn only about half of his financial requirements through summer employment leaving a gap of from five to six hundred dollars, the brief said. Existing scholarships and bursary aid have only partially filled this gap, it said.

There are two criticisms of the present government aid, the brief said. First, there is not enough and secondly, it is generally inadequate and not uniform. In particular these criticisms apply to the Dominion-Provincial Bursary System.

Dents Win Squash Tourney Beat Meds For Championship

Tuesday night, Dentistry won their first interfaculty championship in many years as their A squash team downed the defending champs, Sr. Meds 2-1.

Kruzel and Witchel won for the Dentists while Hamilton was the lone Meds winner. The first match completed saw Witchel down Fiedlen 15-11, 15-7 and 15-9. In the second match Hamilton defeated Hoppe 15-12, 15-9 and 15-11. The most interesting match saw Kruzel outclass Charendoff 15-12, 15-12, 10-15, and 15-8, a dramatic climax to the best squash season yet.

DERBY FOR GROUND NUTS

There will be a prize of $100.00 in "The Ground Nut Derby" to be held from May through August.

It can be fun. With the work shared it will be light. It will supplement rather than interfere with your regular summer employment.

The reward, the actual as well as the potential (constituent on the disposal of a specific number within the agreed time) is more than fair. I am more concerned with the success of the venture than with the relative profit.

Panthers Upset Irish Chalking Up 4-1 Win

By JOHN VOJTECH

It all started with Russia defeating Canada in Olympic competition. Since then, the Canadian hockey scene has seen one upset after another. Jr. SPS defeated Sr. Meds for the first intramural hockey upset and everyone thought that it would be the last. Not so. Monday, March 5, 1956, will go into the record books at Trinity College as the day of great reckoning as on that day they pulled one of the biggest upsets of past years as they literally cleaned St. Mike's A's clock with a 4-1 scrubbing. Bill Lovering, playing his best game of the season, scored two goals for the Black Panthers.

What happened to St. Mike's? Their attack bogged down under the Trinity checking and when they got a chance on Trinity goalie, John Goodwin, they were unable to dent his armour. The latter was the tangible reason why the Irish lost. They tried hard to score but Goodwin came up with dazzling saves.

The first period was a fast skating affair with St. Mike's holding the edge. The Irish struck first as Paul Finlay, easily one of the best men on the ice, broke through the Trinity defence and scored. Both goalies were called upon to make good saves, Goodwin on Guy Drolet's shot and Jack Andrews, at the other end of the ice, with a nice save on Pete Giffen's hard drive.

In the second period, the Irish seemed to let down. They suffered a relapse from which they never recovered. After a myriad number of chances to score, Trinity finally tied the score as Bill Lovering was able to slide the puck past Andrews for the goal.

Five minutes later, Mike Depenier broke through with a quick shot which missed the net. The rebound came out to Lovering who smacked at the puck twice before it went in. From there on in, Trinity just coasted while the Irish were forced to take the offensive.

Being back one goal didn't seem to bother the Irish too much at the beginning of the third period. Their attitude was rudely shocked as Ross Mason scored on a long shot from the blue line. Still no response from the Irish. Everyone sat on the edge of their seats waiting for the sudden outbreak of goals so typical of the Irish with last minute comebacks. It was not to be so. They were physically spent.

Chris Johnson started a melee when he molested Andrews who had wandered out of his goal crease. A few moments later, Osler knocked Andrews into the back of the net, but this time he got Andrews' dander up, for he went after Johnson. Both ended up in the penalty box with Joe Horvat serving Andrews' penalty. A few minutes later Jim Brown put the game on ice as he caught the Irish defence AWOL and scored on a breakaway.

After the first period, the Irish were never quite in the game. They seemed to take it easy and when the time came for them to wake up to the fact that they were behind, it was too late. The checking and rushing of Dave Osler was another factor in Trinity's victory. Their win was an all round team victory. No person dogged it and everyone skated fast right from the opening whistle. Other Panther stars were Chuck Scott, John Seagram, and of course, Bill Lovering, going both ways. They were full value for their win.

Despite St. Mike's poor showing, they did have moments when it seemed as though they could have had the turning point of the game within reach. Bob O'Neal played his heart out and practically collapsed everytime he came off of the ice. Norm Frenette and Bill Reddall did well on the Irish defense. Frank Glionna, Joe Horvat and Guy Drolet were outlucked by Goodwin.

For the second consecutive year, St. Mike's A and Junior Skule will meet for the Sifton Cup, synonymous with interfaculty basketball honours. Skule will attempt to take revenge for last year's setback and also for the trouncing that their brethren received from the Irish.

The championship will be a best two out of three affair, with games being played Monday, Wednesday and Friday, if necessary. All games will start at 1:00 p.m. in Hart House.

This will be a battle of the undefeated and close contests will not be unexpected. Junior Skule will match their high scoring guard combination of Hank Galka and Jerry Wojdon against the Double Blues' flashy driving guard Dan Regan. Regan possesses a fine one-handed push and frequently attracts fouls with his driving style of play. SMC's other guard, Joe Girdlestone, is a fine rebounder. Fans can expect a rebounding battle between Girdlestone, "Spook" Robinson and Ed Callaghan of the Irish and Bill Fraser and the other top Engineer rebounders. Don't miss these games!

Skulemen Grab Berth Down Redmen 5-2

By AL TONON

Jr. SPS continued in the pattern set by the underdog teams in previous playoff activity as they pulled a major upset by trouncing the highly rated Sr. UC 5-2. Skule came up with another of their great team efforts as they completely outskated and even outbumped the bigger UC squad.

The pattern for the upset was set before a minute of the game had elapsed. Libro DeCarlo, the steady force on the SPS defence, picked up the puck at the center red line and let go with a tremendous drive to the top left hand corner of UC goalie Tom Lepoidevin's citadel. This goal seemed to put the Artsmen off balance and the Engineers kept them constantly on the defensive. This sustained drive paid off for the Skuleboys at the midway mark of the stanza when John Patterson squeezed a low drive between the post and the goalie's pads. There was no more scoring in the period but UC came up with a few offensive thrusts which were thwarted by SPS goalie George German.

In the second frame the fans sat expectantly awaiting the outburst of UC's scoring punch, however, they were rewarded only by a more determined onslaught by the Engineers. Bill Adams scored what proved to be the winning tally as he cashed in John Crawley's passout from behind the UC net. At this point in the game the belligerent tendencies of the two teams came to the fore. Bill Naylor of UC caught SPS'er Don Pulvor with a hard check against the boards and the crash was sufficiently loud to earn Naylor a boarding penalty for his efforts. He had barely finished serving his time when fights broke out at the two blue-lines. Taerk and Green of UC and Skuleboys Patterson and Bielawski were each sentenced to two minutes for roughing. These four were hardly settled when Scott and Worthy skated over to the box to add to its already congested state. When the teams were finally restored to full strength SPS came up with two goals within a minute of each other. Don McHardy potted the fourth Skule goal as he picked up the puck, which had come free from a scramble on the boards, and lifted it into the top left hand corner from close range. Patterson scored his second goal when Crawley drew the UC defence and passed out to Patterson who picked the same target as McHardy.

In the final period the SPS squad contented itself with rushing only when presented with a good opportunity which was very frequent as the Artsmen were forced to throw caution to the wind. Larry Scott ruined German's bid for a shutout at the two minute mark by banging in his own rebound with German out of the crease and flat on his back. Scott scored his second of the day to round out the scoring. He broke out of his own end, deked the lone SPS defender and bounced a shot in off German's pads. DeCarlo of SPS was doing penance at the time for holding.

For the losers Martini, Pezack, Jeans, Dysart, and Scott stood out; although beaten badly UC refused to let up until the bell rang to end their activity for this year.

Druggists Enter Basketball Final

It will be Pharmacy A against Architecture in the Division II Major League Basketball finals. Pharmacy moved into the playoffs with a 57-46 victory over Wycliffe yesterday evening.

Sam Hirsch led the Pharmacy attack hooping 20 points while teammate Norm Reynolds tallied 15. Wycliffe was paced by Al MacLeod's 15 point total.

"Upset" Teams Meeting In Interfac Hockey Finals

It's getting so that you can't pick the winners as you used to. The Intramural Hockey finals have provided some upsets this year which have tossed pre-season predictions into utter chaos. Take Trinity A's for instance. They had tough enough of a time in getting into the final playoff spot this year, and yet they knocked off the highly favored St. Mike's A's who lost only one game this season. Jr. SPS was in a more favored position as they were in a not-so-underdog of a position as they were able to end up in first place in Group 2. Yet this team in two successive games, by playing inspired hockey, topped two of the best teams in Group 1. They defeated Sr. Meds and disposed of last year's champions, Sr. UC, quite handily on Tuesday last.

The final series, which starts on Friday, should be a thrilling one. Both teams have played inspired hockey to come down the playoff trail so far. Jr. SPS is favored on account of their season record, but the Black Panthers have pulled upsets before. It should be a battle of the goalies as both have been outstanding in their teams' wins thus far. John Goodwin in the Trinity nets has pulled off some nifty saves in the playoffs to keep the Panther team in the running. George German for Skule, has come through time and time again to keep the Skule ship on an even keel.

Another question to be answered in the finals will be whether Skule can outlast Trinity. Can they outlast top notch skaters like Bill Lovering, Chris Johnson, Dave Osler and Mike Depenier?

These and many other questions will be answered when lunch-time rolls around on Friday. Other individuals who want to take in these games between the two surprise teams are men from other faculties who have been stunned by the victories pulled off by Trinity and Skule. There is no doubt about it, the team that wins will be the better team.

JR. SPS, IRISH IN FINALS

SMC: 71-41

By ARNIE ENGLANDER

Only one point separated St. Mike's A and Senior Skule in two league basketball tilts this season, as the Irish downed SPS by one point in the second contest after tying them in the first. Yesterday's third tilt between the two arch rivals was the semi-final for the Sifton Cup and instead of the expected close thriller, St. Mike's won by 30 points, 71-41.

A capacity Hart House audience watched both teams fight on close terms in the early moments of the first half, with SPS moving into a short-lived four point lead towards the end of the period. The rebounding Roy Webb and Ed Skrzypek played an important role in Skule holding a 31-27 lead with five minutes remaining in the first half. Skrzypek also hooped 11 points, as he battled his way in for close shots. For the Irish, Ed Callaghan was doing a great job on the boards and Dan Regan and Bill Foran were doing the scoring. Then disaster struck the Engineers, with St. Mike's scoring 11 points in succession to end the half with a 38-31 lead. Foran, exhibiting a deadly jump shot, collected 15 points for the Irish in the first half to top all scorers. Regan fired nine for the winners.

The second half was no contest as Skule scored only three baskets. Skule missed their big opportunity to get in the game when they missed five of six foul shots to open the half. St. Mike's then scored 17 consecutive points to break up the game. "Spook" Robinson was the big man for the Double Blue in the last half, scoring ten points. In addition, he did some terrific rebounding and completely handcuffed Skule's Webb. Webb missed shot after shot and his rebounding effectiveness was impaired by Robinson's pestiferous checking.

Foran topped all scorers with 17 points. He was followed on the Irish by Regan's 11, 12 by Robinson and 11 by Callaghan. Robinson and Larsen were high Skrzypek and Larsen were high for Skule with 11 and nine respectively.

In Major league semi-final basketball action Tuesday, Jr. S.P.S. downed Sr. Vic. 59-43. It was an easy victory for Skule and the win extends their undefeated streak to 8 games.

The most that can be said for the Vic team is that they tried hard but they just didn't have the experience nor the depth possessed by the S.P.S. squad.

During the first half the smooth-working Skule team used their fast break to perfection in creating two-on-one situations with the result that a large percentage of their scoring came on easy lay-up shots. As well as this Skule's ball-hawking constantly broke up Vic's offense before the shots could be taken. For this reason Vic could not score a field goal during the first twelve minutes of play with Wojdon hitting on jump shots from the head of the key, Jaworski scoring on push shots, and Fraser cleaning the backboards Skule built up a 23-4 lead early in the game.

SPS: 59-43

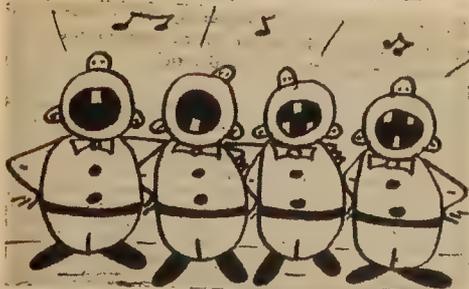

By STAN WEISMAN

Then Victoria's marksmen started to find the range. Lars Thompson's jump shot started to hit and MacIntyre scored five straight foul shots. Dick Risk helped in the rebound department. Despite all this by half time Skule still maintained a comfortable 43-21 margin.

In the second half Vic was suddenly a rejuvenated ball club. Displaying a more aggressive type of basketball and outshooting their opponents they narrowed the gap to twelve points. But the lead built up in the first half by Skule was too great to overcome and when time ran out SPS was ahead by a score of 59-43.

As usual scoring was well spread out for Skule showing their great depth. Jaworski scored 13 points, Galka 11, Fraser and Wojdon eight apiece and Karpinski six. H.25 man for Victoria and also high in the game was Lars Thompson with 14 points. MacIntyre hooped seven and Aubrey five.

U of T Choralizing -With Orchestra

To-night's concert of the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and Chorus marks the close of the 21st consecutive season in which the group has appeared under the official auspices of the SAC. Representatives of nearly every college and faculty on the campus will take part in the performance. Weekly rehearsals since Christmas have been directed towards this final concert of the year by the 50-piece orchestra under Professor Robert Rosevear and OCE student conductor Hans Gasteiger.

Their featured works will be the Purcelliana Suite of Henry Purcell, and Three Dances from Rodeo by Aaron Copland. The 90-voice choir under Professor Richard Johnston and assistant conductor Miss Betty Labash will include Bach's Motet No. 6 and Samuel Barber's Reincarnations, based on the Irish poems of James Stephens.

The event takes place in Convocation Hall at 8:30 p.m. and everyone is welcome. Admission is free.

"We are in desperate need of entries for the Senior Art Exhibition." Said Mike McCormick of the Hart House Art Committee. The exhibition will be held in the Art Gallery from Monday, March 12th until March 26th.

Author! Author!

More than 500 people packed Hart House Theatre Wednesday night to take advantage of the Graduate English Club's capture of W. H. Auden to give a reading of his own poetry.

Mr. Auden, whose appearance here follows closely on the announcement of his election to the Chair of Poetry at Oxford, has a bluff diffident manner that belies his position as a trend-maker in contemporary literature.

The almost conversational character of his poetry, in a style that the parodists have long since given up as firmly established, showed itself in the reading to be eminently suitable for a bland indictment of modern hurry-scurry. In the "Lyrics," on the other hand, the audience heard a careful selection of close-knit, witty, epigrammatic rhyme. The program was topped off by a sardonic set of comments on attitudes to art, written this year to commemorate Mozart's bi-centenary. —N.R.

AISLE SEAT

Sheba Back -- At Crest

Come Back Little Sheba is a fine play and the Crest Theatre showed good taste in choosing it for their first March production. They showed skill and ingenuity, as well, in the design of sets, the lighting, and most of the technical aspects of the show. Unfortunately, however, cast and director failed to meet the standard of the play and of their own technicians.

The plot of Sheba is not terribly complicated and so presentation of the play requires no intricate maneuvering or exaggerated dramatic playing. There is enough harsh realism in story and script to give power without extra embellishments. "Doc" Delaney, now an Alcoholics Anonymous member in good standing after twenty years of trying to soak away the reality of a life ruined by a boyhood indiscretion, suddenly relapses as he sees in his own home a young girl seemingly following in his unhappy way. Sex is clearly an essential element of the plot, but not the primary focus. Herbert Whittaker's Sheba concerns itself with Sex excessively, making it almost the outstanding factor in the play.

The first act ends on a particularly suggestive note as the two lovers plan a tryst after Doc and Lola are asleep. With this aspect of the story being given such heavy emphasis in the first act, it would have been consistent and logical to carry it into the rest of the play, but, after the big build-up, it is left to hover in the audience's mind while the emphasis easily switches to Doc and his troubles, on which it had ought to have centred in the first place.

The set design, far above the quality of the presentation itself, was a masterful bit of work. Stairways led up and down at each side of the stage while the stage, cleverly set with props, was made to represent a complete house. This was well-used, but one flaw showed up when I switched to the other side of the house after intermission. From the right aisle there was a full view of the set, a three-dimensional effect that gave the feeling of sitting at the far end of the living room on stage, in a sense right in the play. From the left, though, most of the sets seemed to be crowded and there was not a clear view of the whole stage. Part of it was blocked from view and the ability to see around corners would have been a help.

What hurt the Crest's Sheba most was the cast, and this could have been so easily corrected that the waste of such a good play seemed a pity. The players weren't bad, they just weren't right for their parts. Amelia Hall, in a very energetic performance as Lola, was far better than the rest in attaining the mood of Sheba. The others tried but fell wide of their parts. Donald Davis ("Doc") couldn't quite conceal his cultured accents, letting them break through in sections of his "folksy" American manner. He also had difficulty keeping the audience with him in the over-long and overdramatic "pregnant" pauses which happened often through Whittaker's Sheba. It was impossible to fall in with the mood of the play so long as the people on stage were obviously straining to play their roles.

The most natural and thus the most effective people on stage were the bit players, Milkman John Vernon brought real life to the play and his was easily the most convincing performance, though he was around for too short a time really to help things. After Vernon came Deborah Cass, another small part, the woman next door. Miss Cass had very little to say but she made a strong character of Mrs. Coffman, the industrious matron against whom Lola Delaney was set in perpetual contrast.

Perhaps fresh talent would have been useful in carrying the production of Sheba. The obvious roles certainly missed in their attempt.

Coulter Favours Culture Program With U of T Extension In Charge

A plan to make Canada known and understood to New Canadians and to foreign visitors to Canada will probably go into effect next year here at the University.

Mr. J. R. Coulter, Director of University Extension, said this week that the program proposed by two Toronto students, J. Keith Spicer (IV Vic), and Henri le Sueur (IV Vic) could be handled by his department. He said there are "merely details" to deal with before the program can start.

Last night, the Students' Administrative Council heard le Sueur's and Spicer's proposition. Without discussion, they unanimously decided to turn down the students' request for SAC support. In a letter, it was suggested that the International Students' Organizations on campus could deal with Toronto's present foreign student population; that they might, in fact, combine to sponsor lectures on Canada.

The Toronto scheme would be designed for both New Canadians and foreign students planning to return to their native land from Canada. It would be modelled after the "Cours de Civilisation française" given at the Sorbonne in Paris, France.

The two students propose an "Institute of Canadian Civilization" at the University. A special university teaching body would offer a program "designed to explain the formation of the present Canadian mentality, and to interpret Canadian political, economic, and social problems."

Spicer and le Sueur sent letters to the Governor-General, the Prime Minister, the Hon. George Drew, the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, Premier Leslie Frost, and the leaders of ethnic groups in Toronto.

Their response has been overwhelmingly favourable. "... the idea is very appealing..." said Pickersgill, "... excellent project..." said George Drew.

Father Shook from St. Michael's College had mixed but favourable feelings toward the plan. He questioned the reality of the demand, saying that most foreign students preferred regular University courses to courses designed for their specific needs. He did not believe that the University could relieve top men for lecturing of this kind without serious injury to regular students and without finding funds for suitable professors.

Professor G. W. Bladen, Head of the Department of Political Economy suggested the appointment of a Dean of, or a Counselor to foreign students,

Symphony No. 9 for Strings	—	Mendelssohn

General opinion indicates that the high standard of performances have justified the support the Orchestra received this year.

Chris Wilson, next year's Chairman of the Associates, hopes to increase membership in the group, with a view to enlarging the Orchestra and increasing the scope of its activities.

U OF T WILL HAVE AVR!

SAC Chooses Curt Reis As Director Suggests Broadway Musical Next Year For First Varsity Show Since 1953

For the first time since 1953 the University will have an All Varsity Review.

SAC members at last night's meeting accepted the application of Curt Reis as director, to present an AVR next year, by a vote of 14-3. This Review will be in the form of a book show, such as Brigadoon and Kiss Me Kate have been. A review-type show was considered "impossible" by the SAC.

The Broadway shows Finigan's Rainbow, Carousel, or Fanny were suggested as possibilities for next year's show.

Chairman of the AVR Committee, Donna Heineman (III SMC) felt that "a review show is the ideal of the AVR, but the Committee decided it would not be practical this year." Curt Reis told the SAC "There is not adequate talent on campus to write a show; nor is there time."

Diana Haas (IV UC) backed the decision for a book show. "The excellent AVR's we saw in previous years were done by returned Service men, who were almost professional because of their experience doing War shows."

The budget presented by Reis allowed $2500 for the production of this show. He has already lined up a producer with professional experience and a skeleton production staff for next year.

During the past two years, UC, working with St. Mike's, and using talent from all faculties, have produced the equivalent of an AVR with Brigadoon and Kiss Me Kate, Reis said.

The problem for many other AVR's and college shows has been to assemble an adequate orchestra, Reis said. Milton Barnes, musical director for next year's AVR, attends the Conservatory and is confident he can draw talent from here.

Perhaps in the following year it might be possible to conduct an AVR along the traditional lines of a review show, it was suggested. On this note the SAC voted 14-3 for an AVR next year.

three Harvards were on their way planes to Egypt, the Opposition leader changed his mind, and said an order-in-council had been passed in July 1955 to authorize the shipment of the planes, Drew said. No order-in-council was found, he said.

"We don't know yet what was done," the PC leader said. "It's going on all the time."

He said the government was daily trying to get more power under its arm, such as the unlimited "emergency" powers asked for in the Defense Production Act last year.

Drew compared Canada's ministerial situation with Britain's, where one minister had replied wrongly through lack of knowledge on a small plot of land owned by the government, and had resigned when he realized his mistake.

"If that principle applied in Canada, half the ministers of the government would resign tomorrow," he said.

Drew has spoken to students in nearly every university across the country during the past few months.

He said Socialist and Social Credit supporters should consider how important a change of government is to them. There is not the slightest chance that any party except the Progressive Conservative provides any alternative for the government today, he said.

Drew outlined the enduring principles of the Progressive Conservative Party:

- Loyalty to the Crown and what it stands for, "This means adherence to freedom," he said.
- The furtherance of the commonwealth.
- Adherence to the Canadian Constitution. The Conservatives formulated that constitution, he said. It is "Liberal mythology" that "all things good and beautiful came from the Liberal party."
- The free enterprise system.
- Development and conservation.
- The supremacy of Parliament.

Luckiest Youths Live In Canada

"The luckiest youth in the world" live in Canada, said the Hon. George Drew, Monday night. He said that Canada, with all its resources, can become a "truly great world power."

A necessary adjunct to this, he said, is an optimistic attitude for Canada's future on the part of its citizens.

Mr. Drew, Opposition Leader in the House of Commons, was the guest speaker at the annual dinner of the Trinity College Literary Institute.

"Our resources are unequalled anywhere else," Mr. Drew said. He cited Canada's energy resources, her mineral resources, and her "precious possession" of vast quantities of iron ore.

EXAMS PUT OFF FOR TWO WEEKS

Two Extra Weeks For This!

Copies of Examinations Stolen at U of T Press

Two extra weeks to study for exams!
Theft of copies of this spring's examination papers has forced Simcoe Hall officials "regretfully" to announce a 14-day postponement of final examinations in all faculties and colleges of the university.

It is believed to be the first time in U of T history that examinations have been put off for any reason.

The two week period will allow professors to set new tests and have new copies of the exam papers printed.

Theft was discovered late yesterday when a Victoria College professor requested proofs of his tests from the University Press, where all exam papers are printed.

Officials discovered the office had been broken into. Copies of the papers for almost every examination already set had been taken from their wire-bound bundles. Several typed manuscripts were also missing.

City police have been called in to aid in investigating the theft.

"If the culprit is caught he will be summarily dismissed," announced Simcoe Hall official said. "He may be prosecuted in a criminal court."

No one at Simcoe Hall is anxious to comment on the theft. Talk of an engineering "prank" was hushed immediately.

J. C. Evans, university registrar, told The Varsity last night that plans for the new exams were not yet complete.

"We will be postponing all examination times 14 days," he said. "Although we haven't nearly prepared the new schedule, students can count on writing all their exams exactly two weeks later than they had planned."

The registrar expressed the University's sincere apologies that students — especially those with summer jobs — will be inconvenienced.

"But there is no alternative," he said.

Mr. Evans explained that even those exams of which copies had not been stolen would be postponed as part of the University's policy of "keeping everything equal."

"We can't be sure how much the thieves saw when they were in the press offices and we can't take a chance. Examinations when some of the candidates had Medicine decided today by a vote 9 to 1 to secede from the SAC.

"A disgrace," commented Medical Society President Will Bunter. "It merely shows the irresponsibility and lack of intelligence of our elected representatives. They don't seem to do what I say anymore."

SAC president, Ike Cobbler, spoke at the meeting and described the "myriad advantages" of membership. "Any slur on the organization is a slur on myself," he stated.

After twenty-two hours of debate, largely by guests of the Society, the members voted for secession with ten members absent. A motion to reconsider and a motion to reconsider the motion to reconsider introduced by Mr. Bunter were both defeated.

Here students study in the U of T's library last night, unaware that they had two extra weeks to prepare for exams. University officials refused to let The Varsity tell any students of the exam postponement last night, so that all students would get the news at the same time.

Ubyssesey Was Indiscreet Cut Publication of Paper

Vancouver: (CUP) — There will be no more Ubyssesey's this year. This decision came after a stormy meeting of the University of British Columbia's Student Council, last night.

Events as far as can be ascertained are as follows:

The Ubyssesey, the campus paper of the University of British Columbia, published an editorial about women's dressing problems.

There was an immediate derisive reaction from the less intelligent students on the campus.

The following day the paper published an article explaining its action.

The president of the University, L. G. MacKenzie, received the same day several phone calls and letters from women complaining that they did not want men to understand this problem.

Immediately the president phoned the university comptroller and ordered the final sixteen issues of the paper be cancelled.

"It will make sure that I am not bothered by any more complaints about this paper," he said.

The Permanent Secretary of the students' council warned the president that this action might be taken amiss, as technically the running of the student paper was in the hands of the students.

The president agreed that it might be wiser to have the decision to cut off the papers come from the student council. The following day he summoned to his office the president of the students' council.

"It is your responsibility as the leader of the students on this campus to prove that you have a sense of responsibility, and to take the responsibility on your shoulders of curtailing this student paper," he said.

"I will do it," replied the student president. "It is my responsibility."

"And if 'twere done, 'twere best 'twere done quickly," said MacKenzie.

That night, as far as could be ascertained, the president Mac-Kenzie wrote in his diary, "This night have I squelched the vile rag, and set the students squabbling among themselves. I shall have no more trouble from them this year."

The following day the student council president called a private session of his boys on the students' council, without consulting the editors, the rest of the students' council, or general public opinion."

Chinese Student Refused Meal In Restaurant

An exclusive Elizabeth Street Restaurant, The Clichee Gardens, has refused to serve a Chinese student. It was reported today.

Thomas Wolfe, well-known Varsity reporter and Campus Hui-chuist, was enjoying an order of Ong Soo pickled fish at the restaurant recently, when he observed Suzie-Lou Yeng, an attractive U of T coed (III Oriental Pottery) at a nearby table.

In jocular mood, Thomas remarked to the waiter, "Bring me a great, steaming platter of Suzie-Lou Yeng."

The waiter, in equally good form, reminded Wolfe that Miss Yeng was not on the menu, and refused to serve her.

Student Used To Be Cleopatra

Di Horse, puckish U of T blonde coed, has revealed under hypnosis that she was once Cleopatra. As well-authenticated reports indicate that Miss Horse was not born before 1903, and that Cleopatra died considerably before that time, the revelations caused no little concern in psychoanalytic circles. Placed under an hypnotic trance by Sven Gall, Miss Horse recalled her childhood, infancy and prenatal life as an embryo.

"I was round and wiggly, and I swam around all day in amniotic fluid," Miss Horse recalled. "Gee it was fun."

Intrigued, hypnotist Gall decided to ask if Miss Horse could remember anything before her birth. Her answer was unintelligible. This, several hypnotologists who had stopped by when the pub closed, explained, was because she was speaking bad Egyptian. (Cleopatra was notorious for speaking bad Egyptian.)

Further questions were put to Miss Horse.

"What is your name?" "Cleopatra." (All translations from The Egyptian and professor K. Farouk, Dept. of Egyptology.)

"Do you remember Mark Antony?" "Uh-huh."

"What do you remember about him?" "None of your (Heiroglyphics) business."

"I see. Do you remember anything about Julius Caesar?" "He was a Roman emperor."

(In real life, Miss Horse knows almost no history, and often has difficulty remembering things that happened the night before.) "Did you like Julius Caesar?" "All except Brando. He over-acted."

"How did you spend your time?" "Barging."

"Barging?" "Just barging around on the Nile."

"I see. Did you ever build a pyramid?" "No."

(Investigations have shown that Cleopatra never built a pyramid.) "How did you die?" "A snake bit me."

"Asp?" "No. Elbow."

(At this point Miss Horse began screaming for snake-bite medicine, and had to be chloroformed.)

possible fellow students. That night, which is last night, at a special meeting of the Students' Administrative Council, it was voted with only one dissenting voice, to stop publication of the Ubysey. It was agreed by all present that the dissenter, a certain Angus McRadden, representative from Architecture, was an irresponsible student.

Several guests to the meeting objected to the decision on the grounds that none of the elections results for the coming year could be announced, and that the constitutional changes for the Student Council could not be passed because they were required to be published in The Ubysey.

But all these objections were overruled on the grounds of responsibility and maintenance of the principles of a liberal institution.

There will be no more Ubysey's this year.

Commented Murray Goetvan, representative from Law at the University of Toronto, "Thank God, this could not happen here, where the students truly run their own government."

Grab Blonde, ... And Run

- As soon as bombs start dropping, run like hell, it doesn't matter where, as long as you run. If you are inside of a building, run outside; if you are outside, run inside.
- Take advantage of opportunities afforded you when an air-raid sirens go. For example:
 - If in a bakery grab some pie or cake.
 - If in a tavern, grab a bottle.
 - If in a movie, grab a blonde.
- If you find an unexploded bomb, always pick it up and shake it, the firing pin may be stuck.

- If this doesn't work, place it in a furnace. The fire department will come later and take care of things.
- If an incendiary bomb is found burning in a building, throw some gasoline on it. You can't put it out anyway so you might as well have some fun.
- If no gas is available, throw a bucket of water on it and lie down, you are as good as dead. The properties of the bomb free the Hydrogen from the water with rather

- a rapid concussion — in fact, a Helluva bang.
- Always get excited and hold your bloody murder. It will add to the fun and confusion, and scare hell out of the kids.
- Drink heavily, eat onions, and limburger cheese etc. before entering a crowded air raid station or shelter. This will make you unpopular with the crowd in your immediate vicinity, eliminating any unnecessary crowding.
- If you should be the victim of a direct bomb hit, don't go to pieces. Lie still and you probably won't be noticed.
- Knock air raid wardens down if they start to tell you what to do. They always save the best seats for themselves and their friends anyway.

Ballade Of Dieting

Where are the days with sugar crowned?
When, carefree, we would sit and eat
The scented sausage and the mound
Of mashed, until we felt replete;
And after stagger to our feet
In gastronomic bliss embraced
Nor did our consciences repeat
"Another inch around the waist."

But now the eager waiting hound
Who licks the platters after meat
Grows sleek as silk, his belly round
With all the food we must not eat.
Convention cows us, so the sweet
Goes kitchenward before we taste.
For we may lose if we're discreet
Another inch around the waist.

Our thoughts in calories abound
As did our meals. The learned seat,
Thoughtful and solid, pound by pound,
Narrows its field till buttons meet.
Our guide to life's a diet sheet.
Our resolution, tightly laced,
Has brought us where we may delete
Another inch around the waist.

Prince, when our narrowing way's complete
And we with pie-in-sky are graced
Let us gain guiltless, we entreat,
Another inch around the waist.

Kampus Kate.

VARSIITY ACCEPTS NEW RULES

Directors Approve CRU Rulings Agree To Six-Point Touchdown

At an emergency meeting of the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate called last night in Hart House, the Directors voted unanimously to accept the rule changes made by the Canadian Rugby Union last weekend.

In order to present to our readers the full details of the meeting, we are printing a word-by-word conversation between Varsity Athletic Director Starrin Weaven and Globe and Mail reported Gard Wokker.

Wokker: Starrin, I understand that your Directorate has voted to accept the rule changes made by the CRU.

Weaven: That's right, Gard.

Wokker: The return to Toronto of the Grey Cup game should change Varsity football a lot.

Weaven: Yes, Gard, we feel that it should. We're thinking at present of buying the Cup from the CRU Directors and presenting it to Dolt Wit as a token of our appreciation if he wins the Inter-collegiate Championship next year. You know, Gard, it's a lot easier on our budget to buy the Cup when it's here in Toronto than to pay shipping charges all the way from Vancouver.

Wokker: Very good, Starrin. If Wit can get a team together that's good enough to win the championship next year, he'll deserve the Grey Cup. Now, how about the fact that the ORFU is out of Grey Cup competition again?

Weaven: Well, Gard, to tell the truth, I don't quite give a damn. The last time Varsity played in the ORFU, we won all our games and didn't even use a quarterback. Of course that was back in the days when teams used the single wing, and a quarterback was non-existent. We would have taken the Grey Cup, too, except that Edmonton imported Knute Rockner for the final and we were out of luck. So you see, the ORFU is really not worthy of Grey Cup competition as yet. Maybe in a couple of years, when the St. Lawrence Seaway is finished and Sarnia economy booms, they'll sign Harry Moonshiner and raid the NFL for players. That should start a merry old rhybarb, you know, but it would be a great boost to the ORFU. It should start a trend towards importing American players. (Confidentially, Gard, I don't see why Burt Ball and Ralf Copper had that conference — the only result was that Copper's wife found out about his wild antics in Philadelphia and divorced him. Too bad, he was a good man).

Wokker: You must be nearly out of breath, Starrin. I'll keep that confidential tip out of the papers. Now on to the major change. What made your Directors accept the six-point touchdown?

Weaven: It's this way, Gard. Although we don't agree with the policy of Canadian Universities importing players from the States, we did receive a very tasty proposition from Ohio State the other day. They want Peter Malk, Rich Bethune, Harry Wilson and a scouting office in Hart House in exchange for Hopalong Cassidy (he was their big star last year and wants to keep on playing College ball for the weekends involved, you know). We feel that since Queen's can produce something along the same shady line, the rules as they now stand certainly permit us to complete the deal legally. We understand that Cassidy was...

Wokker: Pardon me for interrupting, Starrin, but what has this to do with the six-point touchdown

Weaven: Hang on, Gard, I'm coming to that. We understand that Cassidy has spent the winter months climbing goalposts, and he can now get up on the crossbar and block placement kicks in two seconds flat. Once we get him, we trade him to the Argos for Al Fifer. Since we will have traded away Cassidy, we won't have anyone to block placement kicks, and so will likely have several scored on us each game. To counteract that, we will have Fifer, who can produce a touchdown anytime we want one. So you see, Gard, we need the six-point touchdown so that we won't suffer from all the placements we will have scored upon us.

The rest of the conversation was devoted to unimportant details. It looks as though Varsity football will be interesting next year.

(Ed: A special word of thanks to our bat reporter, Jon Rivers, who secretly suspended himself upside down from a hidden rafter in the Athletic Office to gather in this little interview.

Waugh Chooses Wrestling Eskies Reported Downcast

By ARNIE SCOTLANDER

Toronto wrestling impresario Frank Tunyfish announced last night that Varsity's Bobby Waugh, primarily known for his football prowess, has signed a ten year wrestling contract with the Queensbury Athletic Club. Waugh will be under the tutelage of Canadian champ Whipper Willy Batson.

When asked why he was giving up football in favor of a wrestling career, Waugh replied that the grunt-and-droan-games offered more lucrative rewards than the pig-skin pastime. "Such wrestling luminaries as Loo Thez and Gruesome Gertie make upwards of $100,000 a year. Even if I make only 75Gs, I'll be doing better than if I accept the paltry 4,000 that the Eskies are offering me," said our budding wrestling great.

This reporter ventured to ask Tunyfish how a 177 pounder like Waugh hoped to stand up to such big boys as Dick Puffman and the Van Slobber Buff. "Look here, pip-squeak," piped up Whipper Batson, "Waugh has the type of build that can easily be developed into further weight. Why I wouldn't be surprised if he tipped the scales at 210 lbs. within two months. I'll build that guy up so that no one will recognize him."

Tunyfish then pointed out that Batson was a mere 180 lb. strippling before he embarked on a serious training program to get him in shape for a wrestling career. We looked and shuddered at the massive 240 lb. beast that was staring at us and decided that Waugh could also become a roll-fledged heavy-weight.

Mom Poison By, the Esky football mentor was downcast when informed of Waugh's decision. "We'll raise his salary to $75,000 if necessary. That boy is a top-notch'er."

Tentative plans have Waugh making his pro debut in July against Houg Depburn, the former British Empire weight-lifting champ. Depburn currently outweighs Waugh by 150 lbs. Shall we all go into mourning for the departure from life of another clean-cut University student?

Has Anybody Seen Niky?

Sept. 27, 1945

SO THERE YOU ARE . . . !

Reporter John Votcheck . . . On September 27th, 1945, Nikolay Bulgainin, in his freshman year at the University of Toronto attempted to cross the two lengths of the perilous waters of the Mart Mouse Pool. The Pool has been noted for its vicious current and high waves. All things are as they were then except . . . So There You Are!

W.M.: "This is Windy Matchmore reporting in the Mart Mouse dressing room. I see two gentlemen before me — pardon me, sirs — what do you think of Nikolay's attempt?"

S.S.: "He will do it or else to Siberia he goes — ve athletes of great super sappy — er, ah — Sooviet race are better than former Canutskies who tried this pool. He will succeed or my name is not Sydney Smith."

W.M.: "Do you care to comment sir?"
Other Companion: "Ach — nie, I am his bodyguard, first chancellor of Rooskie Church, I will accompany him on epic swim."

W.M.: "There you have the picture from here. (I think that bodyguard looks like a former SAC member.) I see that Nikolay has just now entered the pool where Bubert Brun will interview him. Come in, Bubert."

B.B.: "From my vantage point here at the edge of this beautiful and treacherous pool, I look out on the still waters into which this brave man will soon jump. Oh, Mr. Bulgainin, would you come over here and care to comment?"

N.B.: "I do not wish to make a statement, but here is a new thought recorder which was found to be useless in my own homeland since no one thinks there any more. You will be able to get a picture of what I have to go through." (Gives set to Bubert; set turned on.) ". . . awrk . . . awrk . . . (rusty Rooshan mind) . . . gee but that pool looks long . . . let's see, I'll just walk down the side here and ease myself into the water, its too cold to jump in right away . . . oh, oh, here comes that fiendish instructor . . . yes, sir, I wish to take the test . . . what's this, I have to sign away my property to the University . . . My ATL card is in my towel . . . dive in from here sir . . . but its so high . . . three feet? . . . are you sure? . . . yes sir, I'm on my way."

B.B.: "Nik is ready, he gets into a crouched position and waves his arms and starts running for the water edge of the pool. Suddenly he looks down and sees water immediately before him. He stops. Changes his mind and goes back to his former position. The Instructor looks his way and so our boy begins his final run. He dives in, that was no atomic explosion, it was the sound of his belly hitting the water. From here I saw him enter, but I can't see him come up from his dive . . . he's been down an awful long time . . . the spectators are straining their necks from the upper balcony in an effort to see him. There goes one spectator into the pool, and another. It's not raining, you know, it's raining engineers."

N. B.: "Well, I'm around the middle, only thirteen yards to go . . . where is the other end . . . I can't see it . . . maybe I'm lost . . . Where's my navigator? . . . oh, there it is . . . I can see it above the waves ahead of me. I'm going to have to quit . . . my arms, so tired . . . like lead . . .

what's this, the end? ah only one lap to go . . . I'm out of breath . . . my arms are tired . . . my legs are sinking . . . there is a descent on my ascend . . . I'm going to touch bottom . . . YIKES, there is NO bottom . . . Oh, these waves, I can't hold out any longer . . . I'm finished . . ."

J.V.: "We now switch you to The Varsity hiding place on the balcony of the pool where John Brookstream and Holy Howdy Medallion have corralled One-Eyed Benny." "John speaking here folks . . . we're seeing a game laid out there today . . . at present he's making one eighth knots per two hours, but he's still going strong . . . Man what reserve energy. He must have had his Vodka Veeties today. Fourteen yards to go, that's what has been just flashed up here, I see Howdy is ready with the interview so go ahead Howdy."

H.M.: "Thanks John, if I can tear this person away from his betting, I'll be able to interview the one and only One-Eyed Benny."

O.E.B.: "Did I hear my name mentioned? It its a cop, I'm not in, I'm out. Say what you got for the fifth buddy? . . . Varsity . . . never heard of that nag . . . what's that, its a rag, not a nag. Oh you want me to give my opinion. Five to one he don't make it. Look at him. His arms are weak from use. He's just flailing in the water. That'll teach Rooshes not to swim OUR POOL."

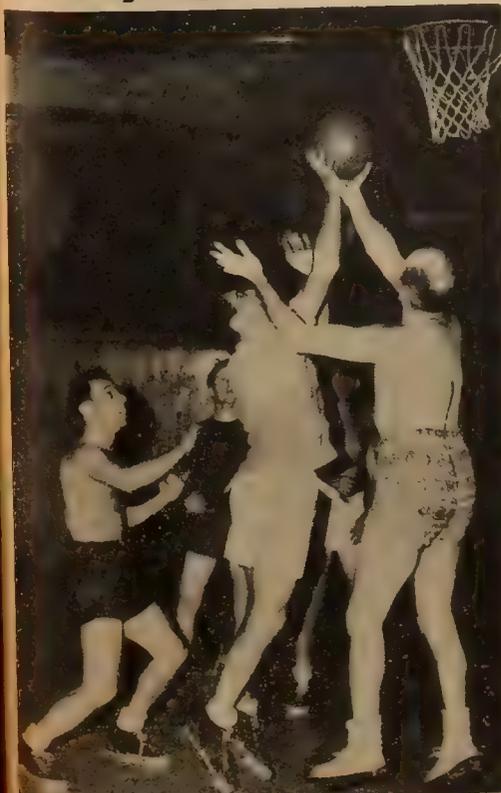

N.B.: "What's that guy doing on the edge of the pool? . . . swim up to him . . . then why is he moving farther away? . . . I do wish those other swimmers would get out of the pool, they're congesting my path and making the waves . . . oh, so high . . . all of three inches . . . I'm through . . . Who said that this pool was heated . . . I'm numb . . . What did Jim Tuck say, tea and donuts waiting for me if I finish . . . by golly I must do it now, for the sake of the tea and crumpets, you know . . ."

J.B.: "We have seen a terrific exhibition of grit and stamina at the Pool here today. He's just about made it, only a few yards to go. Just look at that awkward stroke. His left arm is going over his head by the way of his right ear . . . it's amazing . . . one yard to go . . . other swimmers have left the pool . . . we thought for a while that the three inch waves might cause Nik to give up, but he hasn't . . . the officials are giving him every break . . . everything is quiet now . . . only half a yard to go . . . he's a very tired lad, and the pool is seven feet deep at this end . . . he's reaching, reaching, reaching, a little more to go . . . you can feel everybody just mentally helping the lad along . . . he's reaching, he's . . . he's . . . no, he just isn't there yet . . . he's . . . he's . . . he's . . . made it, and as he touches the sea wall pandemonium breaks out . . ."

J.V.: "That was the scene on September 27th, 1945. Nikolay Bulgainin became a fully qualified member of the University of Toronto because of his great triumph. Later on, feeling quite confident that he could do it, he challenged the waters again, this time, the width. He began last December and hasn't been since. Some think that he has lost his way and is waiting the arrival of Spring Thaw . . . September 27th, 1945, the day that Nikolay Bulgainin passed his swim test. All things are how as they were then except . . .

We just can't take it

we stand on guard

This is Canada's century. Within fifty years, our great dominion, from sea to sea will be the real land of milk and honey in God's green wide world. And today's university students are tomorrow's leaders.

So now is the time — it's never too late — to hitch your wagon to a star and pull up your socks. Because as sure as you're born, beyond a shadow of a doubt, without your leadership, this great country of ours will be a ship without a rudder: but any port in a storm. There is nothing new under the sun, because money is the root of all evil (all that glitters, however, is not gold) so play up, play up and play the game, God willing, the sun will never set on the British Empire.

Talkers are a dime a dozen — as cheap as dirt, a penny a carload. But you, you must be the hewers of wood, the carriers of water, as busy as beavers, quiet as mice, sober as judges, strong as oxen, drunk as lords, straight as dies, wise as owls, bold as lions, cocky as roosters, crazy as loons, silly as nanny-goats, wily as foxes, deep as the sea, high as the sky, honest as the day is long and as steady as the Rock of Gibraltar.

When all is said and done, the early bird in the hand is worth two behind the bushes, and there's no wick for the rested. But cross those chickens before you throw rolling stones and don't goose the man with the golden egg because a stretch with Time saves wine and too many gooks spoil the brothel.

So keep Canada strong. Keep your nose to the grindstone, your back to the wall, your eye on the future, your shoulder to the wheel, your tongue in your cheek, your foot in your mouth, your hand on the tiller, and with your feet on the ground and your head in the clouds, you too can be a philosopher.

a promise not kept

Isn't this hellish weather?

What do we get nowadays, but snow, sleet, slush, rain and hail?

Both the SAC and NFCUS promised us better weather for the month of March.

We placed our trust in them, and left our galoshes at home.

And now we all have cold feet because they have broken their promises.

You may not think this is suitable material for an editorial, but the weather is the only topic that is guaranteed non-controversial these days.

The problem to be considered is a rather complex one, but as it occupies an important place in the development of the subject, it is deserving of careful attention. However, care must be taken in the presentation of this matter to avoid the extremes of considering the problem either the basic one in the entire subject, or of merely minor importance whatsoever. A middle way is the only logical one that can be taken in this field, and the writings of some of the previous writers on this subject must be therefore considered sceptically, and referred to only in moderation.

The core of the problem now facing us lies in the relationships existing between the various inter-related terms described in the question. At first glance, the task of accurately measuring, defining and qualitatively analysing these terms must seem an extraordinarily difficult one, but if we understand the full implications that are to be met with in the relating of one subject or idea to another, our difficulties will be lessened considerably thereby. The theory of relativity, as developed to its fullest extent by Einstein, does not have its sole application to the field of physics, but is something which can be applied to this subject also, and particularly to the topic now before us. For instance, it is not generally known that Einstein had this to say about the matter:

(Here insert about two pages out of any of Einstein's books. Any pages will do. You won't understand it, but neither will your professor, and he will be highly impressed with the breadth of your knowledge. Caution: if the subject is physics, this particular play must be used with care.)

But to return to the main thought of this essay, the next aspect of the question to be considered is the views of some of the earlier writers in this field. Schlumslinger, writing in Germany before the end of the century, had this to say about the subject:

"This (problem of relationships) . . . is among the most difficult in our field. However, if the way in which inter-related variable factors fit together is fully understood and particularly if a full comprehension of the extent — qualitatively speaking — of these inter-relationships, we have at once achieved half of our goal."

(Caution: If there actually was a writer by the name of Schlumslinger in your subject, be sure to insert a new name to replace Schlumslinger.)

But even though we may consider Schlumslinger to be vehement on this subject, his feeling are as nothing to those of Wallacierski, a later writer on the subject.

"Inter-relationships are all important", states Wallacierski emphatically. Indeed, he carries on this conception throughout his work, and this one-sidedness is no doubt one of the main reasons why his works have passed from general favour. However, there is much of value in what he had to say, if we allow for the undue emphasis which he placed on this one section of the subject, and it is unfortunate that he is not more widely read nowadays. Another possible reason for his eclipse is the fact that few authorities on the subject can read Aramaic, in which all of his works are written.

While the view of inter-relationships is important in this field, we must not overlook the broad conception of the field, the sweeping view that is in reality possessed only by those few masters in the field. It would be futile to quote at length from these well known masters, but one small quotation cannot be resisted.

(Here get a copy of the book most recommended by the professor for the course, and copy out any four pages that seem to have anything to do with the topic. If the essay is supposed to be a long one, copy out any eight pages.)

In summary we may say that the problems that confront us whenever we subject this subject to a careful scrutiny are indeed complex. But nevertheless, we must attempt an approximation to the solution to this still-largely unexplored problem, due to its importance, and this, I hope, has been accomplished above. While the essential nature of the problem remains, as it is now, largely unmapped, this is all that may be accomplished.

For A Foul Murder, 10,000 Protests

Editor, The Varsity:

What is one man's voice among so many, and especially the voice of a worm like me, I have no influence, no power, no authority. In fact, I'm stupid.

But I am not alone! There are ten thousand of us at the University of Toronto!

Fellow Students! From the depths of my insignificance I cry to you . . . Hear me. There has been a murder committed, a mass, hysterical murder, by a ten to eight vote.

And the murderers go free. Protected by democratic rights. This should not be allowed to happen. They should be lynched.

Now is the time to act. Now. Immediately. At once. Before the bruised body of Canada's own Lucy Nifeus is found bruised in some waste basket, without even a decent burial.

Fellow Students! If we act together we can change the world. Let us arise with one common voice and each write a letter to the editor of The Varsity, lest the ghost of Lucy Nifeus rise to confront us.

I see it has been forced upon me to perform a sad but indubitably necessary duty; namely to present to your attention the inescapable fact that you have completely, carefully, and calculatedly ignored with the utmost diabolical determination one of the most notable, noble, and necessary organizations on the campus.

Decide To Demolish Ontario Museum As Psychologist Taboos Two Totems

THIS STARTED IT — This engraving by Ted Kramole started the trouble, and everything came tumbling after, as headstones began to roll at the Royal Ontario Mausoleum. Phallic symbols thrusting from floor to roof will be removed at enormous expense. Fear for innocent libidos motivated the pubic-spirited demolition.

The dismantling of the Royal Ontario Museum, brick by brick, starts Monday. The decision was made by museum authorities after an emergency meeting in which an examining psychologist said the museum's two famous totems "had to go."

The two totems, which soar from the basement to the roof of the four-storey building, were condemned by Karen Hornbill, M.D., as being "overtly phallic."

"Think of the children," said the famous psychologist. "The first thing they do on entering the building is look up at these erect columns bristling to the skylight. What it must do to their little libidos."

Unfortunately, authorities explained, the totems cannot be removed without removing the museum walls. The totems were assembled in sections, they said, but the sections had since been permanently fastened together.

The removal of the totems is only one part of a widespread move to purge the museum of all works of art that might be held to have inflammatory sexual connotations. The crusade began Saturday, when an engraving of two nude models by Ted Kramole was considered unsuitable for showing in the Canadian Painter-Etchers Exhibition.

"The museum," one official was quoted as saying, "just doesn't hang pictures of that kind. It is one of the unwritten laws we have here. We must think of the children."

"Now we've decided to be consistent," said another official. "No nudes is good nudes," he added with an apologetic cough. After making the last statement, he asked that his name be withheld.

All nudes have been removed from the museum and sold to childless horse-fanciers and taverns with vigilant doormen, where "the eye of the young will never light upon them."

Today, workmen were engaged in removing Belgian Congo fertility fetishes from the museum's basement, stripping off murals depicting the everyday life of Neanderthal Man, and returning all abstract paintings that employ flesh-tints.

Officials were closeted today, reportedly discussing whether the museum's coin-collections should remain on view intact, or whether all the round ones should be disposed of.

It is hoped that both totems will be removed by 1958, and the museum rebuilt in time for anthropology classes to be given to the graduating class of 1964. The totems fate? Say officials. "We're giving them back to the Indians."

Tambourine The Greatest

By David Dungsmeare

New York, March 8 (Special) — Even the Angst-laden cognoscent of this great metropolis were momentarily titillated Thursday night, on the gala opening of that vast neurosthetic stage-splurge, the all-Canadian musical extravaganza-spectacular, Tambourine The Great.

Here was a show that had everything—real laughter, real tears, and real blood, the latter evoking excited screams from the front-row dowagers, as it lapped over the outside edge of the vast stage specially constructed in Madison Square Gardens. (Incidentally, the all-Canadian character of the production was maintained even here, by the Canadian Red Cross's donation of 12,000 gallons of whole blood each night.)

As I watched this gigantic, all-Canadian panorama unfold before my eyes, I could not help feeling a respect akin to awe for the perfect planning behind it. Hon. J. W. Picklesdill, Minister of Immigration, deserves the main praise, for securing temporary citizenship papers for the entire 217-member cast. It might be worth noting in passing that we now have our first all-Canadian Indian elephant, and thirteen all-Canadian echelots.

And what a cast! Anthony

Teale, as the musical Mexican gypsy, hell-bent on winning a world and the love of a woman (any woman), was magnificent. What more can be said? Nothing.

Eatyon Pizza, as Tambourine's base bass lieutenant, Thrasymacumcasane, played his role with complete musical aplomb and a fine sense of dramatic bearing. He was especially at home in his solo numbers, booming over a terror-stricken village caught in mid-massacre. Of these, I preferred Some Enchanted Evening.

Straight from her smash-opening in The Brothers Karamazov, Marilyn Munroe seemed a little uncertain of her lines as Zeno, the paradoxical creature for whom Tambourine gambled two continents, an archipelago, and the monarchy of Monaco. However, she spent most of her time in a howdah, so her inability to attend any rehearsals did not entirely cripple the production's genuine artistic merit.

Director Tryone Guthrie has surpassed himself in the crowd scenes, which include a bull-fight (real, all-Canadian bulls) that none of the audience will ever forget. All things considered, I think this magnificent, soul-stirring production will run as long as there is a picador alive in New York.

ED. NOTE — We hear with regret that notice of closing was posted backstage at Madison Square Gardens this morning. Union squabbles and financial difficulties arose when the Boston Philharmonic demanded that, instead of being carried onstage on a gigantic litter, they be carried onstage on individual litters. The Canadians (real Canadians) carrying the litters felt that this would be "an imposition."

MORE MUCK MAKES MOCK OF MUMPS

Sir Deadly earnestly attacked Loose Facials with a tuning fork as he hit her podium in Hashup Hall last week. A drooling crowd overflowed from the waste pipe to the rafters to rock and roll to the rag time beat of the Memento Sympathy Orchestra in their last concert under a baton. The lily-livered dowagers simpered in their seats as they sat suspended in breathless animation by two tame crocodiles.

At 8:20 sharp a TTC street-car swung into the terminal and deposited a load of would-have-been late-comers on Sir Deadly's lap. Some were dressed for the occasion in Turkish Bath Robes, but were hastily escorted to the second balcony to dangle from the ceiling with the other baubles.

The first work was Brahms's Academic Festival Overhaul, which was greeted with shrill twittering from the faculty members. Mozart's Divertimento in 7 was blown by the winds, to the winds and for the winds and wound up the first half of the City Hall Clock Bartok's Flutulations in B flat for Repercussion were repeated by a base strumpet, flukes and spittoons.

art and abstract

"You think abstract painting looks easy, hah?" was the topic of a discussion by eleven young Toronto artists on their work, now hung in the Art House gallery.

Tom Hogfat, spokesman of the group, told an enormous crowd of student art lovers; "People come in here and look at our paintings and they say; 'What the hell is this?' and 'a three year old kid could do better,' or 'I could paint things like that myself. Anybody could. Well, me and my ten colleagues have news for people like that. They're right.'"

"Many people," Hogfat went on, "think we modern abstractionists paint as we do in order to bring out transcendental values, and express deeper emotions impossible to communicate by means of mere photographic representationalism. Actually we use these techniques because none of us have either the energy or the talent to learn how to draw."

Ronald Blismith, another of the group, explained his technique of creating abstract art. "I take a canvas," he said, "and I look at it. Then I go out to the kitchen and have a beer. Then I come back and look at the canvas and go out and have another beer. I repeat this until the beer runs out. Then I climb up to the topmost kitchen cupboard where we keep the extras, and knock over a large pile of my paint cans onto the floor. The next morning, I take the kitchen floor out and sell it."

A different, but equally novel approach was outlined by Oscar Ashcan. Oscar confided; "I am very amused when I overhear gallerygoers saying that my paintings look as if they were done by a three-year old child. My little boy, Oscar Junior, who does all my best work, won't be two till next August."

Exams Put Off

There is no change contemplated in the fall calendar to balance the extra two weeks of school this spring.

No lectures will be given during the extra two weeks. Faculty members will need the time to prepare new exam papers, officials said.

Simcoe Hall officials felt, however, that some professors would employ the 14 days grace to complete regular courses.

No student comment could be obtained before The Varsity went to press as university officials wished the news announced to all simultaneously.

Officials are preparing for a campus-wide student demonstration this morning. One official said he felt the announcement will bring a universal feeling of relief from tension.

Students are advised to proceed normally until further important announcements can be made. Watch for these notices before taking any action!

Student Religious Groups Review Easter Festival

As Easter approaches, a movement is afoot to reawaken students to the true and original meaning of the ancient festival. Two religious students organizations, the VDG (Varsity Druidical Group) and the VDS (Varsity Druid Society) usually bitterly antagonistic to one another, have joined forces in a campaign to "Bring Ishtar back to Easter." (Last year's campaign slogan; "Easter belongs to Ishtar" has been abandoned as too possessive.)

"Ishtar," explained Mary Mixup, II Meds, chairman of the campaign, "is the Goddess of fertility, known throughout the ancient world as 'Astarte,' 'Astoreth' and by the druids, as 'Eastre.' The feast which still bears her name was originally a celebration of the Spring equinox, at which the re-awakening of nature was recognized with fertility rituals, humansacrifice, and general merry making.

"Today" Miss Mixup said; "Children, and even many adults, are unaware of the true significance of Easter. The name of Ishtar is rarely mentioned. Rabbits, eggs, and other fertility symbols whose meaning has been obscured, have come to replace the ancient Goddess herself. Commercialism has been allowed to take the place of sex."

To correct this situation, the VDS and VDG are holding a real, old fashioned fertility ritual on the front campus, this coming Easter morning. Members and nonmembers are invited to attend. The committee is confident that the program will make most present day Easter celebrations seem dull by comparison.

Public opinion toward the campaign has been varied. Jack Pickledill, Minister of Immigration, grumped; "These people are Canadians, they don't need civil rites."

Gag Issue Rolls On

This is The Varsity's annual gag issue.

It follows a thirty-five year, sometimes broken tradition of "Jazz" and "Gag" issues. Yearly, around this time, the newspaper staff, frustrated by the SAC, tired of student apathy, worried about exams, sick of journalism, fearing failure, and suffering other nervous complaints, have let loose with their spoofing.

Of course, these issues sometimes got banned, so the staff's frustrations are kept bottled until late in the year.

The edition got started one night in the early twenties when the editor didn't show up, and the staff set to work to enjoy themselves. It was permanently banned in 1937, after a "filthy" issue, but then started again in 1941.

Only a few hundred of the 1952 Gag issue got on the stands before university authorities grabbed the rest, to suppress the issue for "libeling" President Smith.

This page, page seven, contains legitimate campus news. The rest of the paper is illegitimate. Strictly so.

NFCUS Given Unfavourable Publicity All Across Canada, Martin's Charge

Charges that campus papers across Canada were giving unfavourable publicity to NFCUS were made by the national federation's President, Peter Martin.

Writing in the last issue of Items, a NFCUS publication, Martin stated:

"The campus papers (not all of them) continue to perpetuate the fiction that the students of Canada do not want a national organization. . . .

"Perhaps the fault lies with the campus editors who have learned only half of their trade. Perhaps they have learned that bad, sensational news is interesting . . . but they have not learned that they have a responsibility to their publishers, the students' councils, and to . . . their readers, the students . . ."

Martin stated that the CUP wires "trickled with announcements of the impending dissolution of the National Federation . . . Mr. Student is left with the impression that NFCUS is a near-defunct organization."

Martin stated that when the University of New Brunswick had decided to hold a vote on remaining in NFCUS, the CUP editor had sent out a wire on it, thus giving the impression that UNB was "virtually out". But, said Martin, when UNB voted overwhelmingly to stay in NFCUS, "the CUP wires remained silent. This news (of the vote) is surely interesting, but to this writing (the Items is dated March 5) 'The Brunswickian' has not passed it on to the rest of the country."

Varsity Editor Bob Brown, reading the NFCUS President's report, said "Mr. Martin is rather mistaken as to his facts. The Brunswickian, at the special request of The Varsity, wired us the results of the vote as soon as they were available. The telegram was received on March 1, and appeared on the front page of The Varsity of March 2."

Martin, in an article headed

Campus Wheels Are Hopping As NFCUS End Stirs Fuss

The University of Toronto's withdrawal from NFCUS has touched a campus-wide reaction.

A specially-prepared NFCUS bulletin, threats of impeachment of SAC members, and an unconfirmed rumour of a special SAC meeting to be held next week to re-consider the SAC's decision, all appeared to be the results of the SAC's decision — by a 10-8 vote — to get out of the national federation.

Bill Smyth, formerly NFCUS Co-Chairman, said that he had prepared 2,000 copies of a special bulletin that would be distributed throughout major campus buildings this morning. The bulletin, mimeographed in red ink on white paper, has two purposes, said Smyth:

UBC May Cut NFCUS Cords

Vancouver: (CUP)—Students at the University of British Columbia are "overwhelmingly" in favor of withdrawing from NFCUS, reported The Ubyesey, student paper on the campus.

A vote on whether UBC's membership in NFCUS is to be retained will be taken on this campus on March 15.

The Ubyesey reported that "students seem to be at a loss as to what NFCUS actually does for UBC." The paper was conducting a campus poll to determine students' feelings.

"The first is to find out whether or not students agree with the SAC's decision to withdraw from NFCUS.

"The second is to convince students that the withdrawal decision is wrong."

Smyth stated that he had no knowledge of any plan to call a special SAC meeting to reconsider the decision of the SAC. Such a meeting could be called by Michael Shoemaker, SAC President, who voted and spoke against the resolution that Toronto leave the national federation.

Shoemaker could not be reached for comment late last night.

An SAC member, who did not wish to be quoted, said that there had been threats to impeach her made by some members of her society.

Faculty On Canada Affairs May Soon Be Reality Here

The Institute of Canadian Civilization may be closer to reality next week. The plan was outlined in yesterday's Varsity.

Representatives of the departments of Geography, History, Economics and English will meet with Dr. J. R. Coulter, head of University Extension, to consider the proposal. If they decide it is feasible, they will plan how the courses, to acquaint foreign students and New Canadians with Canada, can be arranged. The meeting's recommendations will go to Simcoe Hall.

Henri Le Sœur, an originator of the plan said last night the plan needed approval by all the departments whose staff would be involved. The night courses are still just a "possibility", he said.

That's Us

In the recent issue of NFCUS Items, The Varsity was referred to as an "influential" paper.

"Sound and Fury", stated that many universities were actually thinking of entering NFCUS, instead of withdrawing. He cited three.

Although Manitoba has left the federation, Martin stated, McGill and Acadia universities are thinking of rejoining, and two other new universities have been admitted this year to NFCUS.

STUDENT UNION COMING

U of T Offered Three Million To Build Union In Two Years

Chances for a student union at Toronto brightened yesterday. But to get it, the University may have to allow a beverage room in its basement. President Smith announced a "leading Toronto figure" was planning a $3,000,000 donation to the university for an all-campus students' union. He said negotiations had not been completed but he was extremely hopeful the union would be up in two years. Construction would start this summer if the money is forthcoming, he said. The union would be built just south of Hart House.

Director Fears 80% Increase At Penitentiary

Kingston (CUP) — Large, affable Crudney Sniff, Head Warden of Kingston Pen, is worried. The cause, an unprecedented increase in convictions, with a predicted increase of 80% within the next three years. "The problem", Sniff tells anyone who will listen, "is more than that of mechanical expansion. It involves the whole question of the aims and functions of a penitentiary."

Carling's Sundae

This is a picture of a new Sundae — the Carling Special — that will be served in the new students' union. Originated by Mr. Carling himself, the Sundae contains whiskey-flavored ice cream with rum sauce, whipped beer foam frosting, and lager seasoning. Yum — It's good!

An unidentified Queen's Park official said yesterday an application for a beverage room on "Hart House Crescent, University of Toronto," had been received. Applicant was John Carling, president of Carling's Breweries, he said.

Carling could not be reached for comment.

President Smith refused to comment.

Dean Bissell said he had nothing to say about it.

Dean MacFarlane of the Faculty of Medicine said: "This will ruin our Alcoholism Research Clinic plans. We wanted our students soused scientifically."

"Bowling to these degrading materialistic forces compromises the principles of a scholarly community," said Dr. Moore, President of Victoria. "We're bugs on temperance," he confided after.

Trinity College offered to trade Carling's proposed beverage room for the Buttery.

"This move (of Carling's) will bring the Park Plaza to its knees," said the manager of the King Cole Room.

No university authorities would admit the "leading Toronto figure" was Carling. The offer will go before the Board of Governors at its next meeting.

While admitting that there is no simple answer to the problem, Sniff plans to meet it by raising the standards.

"There are many convicts in this pen who don't belong here", he said. "There are a few dedicated criminals, but too many are here for selfish, unworthy motives."

"A great many are here simply because their fathers or mothers attended penitentiary, and because they feel it is expected of them. Others come simply to avoid the necessity of earning a living."

"To remedy this situation, we plan several steps," Smith says. "First, we will accept only the better class of criminals. Shop-lifters, pickpockets and petty larcenists will not be accepted. For them, it may be possible to institute a system of 'Junior Jails' with two-year terms, which would qualify them for penitentiary. In addition, the guards would personally interview every prospective inmate, to be sure that his motives were genuinely evil."

SAC with Shoemaker Asks New Equipment

At a specially convened secret meeting last night, the SAC voted 72-69 to ask the Caput for percerous SAC president Spike Shoemaker to buy a thumbtack.

"The Caput has been very gentlemanly told the assembly "in allowing us to have a bulletin board. However, as some of us predicted, we now have a notice to post on the bulletin board. Without a thumbtack, this may well be impossible."

Red Sevenpiper, Architecture Rep., opposed the motion on aesthetic grounds.

"The Neo-Gothic-Romano-Byzantine Architecture of this University", he said, "with its atmosphere of genteel decay and traditionalistic obsolescence, will offer a violent contrast to the strongly functionalist bias and gaudy materialistic chrome plate of a thumbtack, flaunted conspicuously in front of the SAC building."

Caput members, interviewed late last night, expressed divergent reactions, ranging from mild approval to incredulous indignation.

Said one: "these fine young people are Canada's future leaders. Give them their thumbtack, I say. Heh, heh, I was a bit of a hell-raiser myself at that age."

Others were less approving. Said Seigried Taylor, "I knew they'd never be satisfied. Give 'em an inch... Trouble with young people today, they're spoiled. Too many of the good things. When I was their age..."

The Caput will consider an appropriation for thumbtack at its next scheduled meeting, early in 1958.

Opinion on NFCUS Split; Liked, Hated and Ignored

U. Prof. Answers Dunbar's Attack In Legislature

A University of Toronto professor hit back yesterday at statements in the Legislature last week suggesting he was incompetent. Provincial Secretary George Dunbar, who made the statement, was to blame for any incompetence in the Department of Reform Institutions, said the professor, Stuart Jaffary of the School of Social Work.

Prof. Jaffary had been appointed in 1947 to investigate conditions at Burwash Reformatory, near Sudbury.

Jaffary said Dunbar was also responsible for his report.

"If (Dunbar) had any doubts as to my title, my profession, or my competence, I presumed he would have settled these before requesting me to act," said Jaffary, in a letter sent to Dunbar and the Toronto papers yesterday.

Dunbar had said Jaffary returned with "stupid recommendations." He said it "was my first experience, but I hope it will be my last, with a man of that calibre."

Jaffary charged Dunbar was trying to smear social workers by bringing up the Burwash report. Dunbar had recalled Jaffary's report when CCF leader Donald MacDonald had pressed for an impartial, non-government investigation of the Department of Reform Institutions. The idea came in a letter from the Canadian Association of Social Work, and Dunbar didn't like it, Jaffary said.

Jaffary said his report on Burwash had been "lying in the files for ten years," now.

NFCUS: Going or Staying?

Here one co-ed considers removing the plaque representing Toronto's membership in NFCUS from the wall of the SAC Building. Last Wednesday's SAC meeting "severed all connections" between Toronto and NFCUS, but this year's NFCUS fees will be paid, so Toronto is still technically a member. But for how long? —VSP by Ed Staworzynski

Students Petition on Campus Asking Re-entry in NFCUS

Some students don't like NFCUS; some do; and most just don't care.

This was the result of a Varsity poll conducted last night on the question of Toronto's membership in the national student federation. Toronto's SAC voted to withdraw from NFCUS at its last meeting on Wednesday night.

About 30% of the students questioned said that they thought Toronto should rejoin the national student group. An equal number were opposed to the idea. But the largest group — some 40% of those questioned — had no comment whatever to offer.

And one student, when asked if she thought Toronto should rejoin NFCUS, gave the answer: "What's NFCUS?"

A group of students who support Toronto's rejoining NFCUS have started a campaign to achieve their aim. Last Friday, members distributed 2,000 copies of a bulletin setting forth their views on the subject. This was circulated around the campus via porters' lodges, notice boards and lamp-posts.

Former NFCUS Chairman, Bill Smyth says, "Petitions are now being circulated by interested groups. We hope for 2,000 signatures but our time is short."

It has been rumored that a special SAC meeting would be held this week to reconsider the decision, but Michael Shoemaker, President of the SAC, said that no special meeting would be held and that discussion would be reserved for the final SAC meeting of March 21.

Plans are underway to submit the petition to the SAC meeting if the number of signatures warrants such action, said Smyth.

Michael Shoemaker has received a telegram from the President of the Student Council of the University of British Columbia asking him to attend a meeting to be held in the spring to discuss the idea of forming an alternative to NFCUS. The student council presidents of Manitoba, McGill, Montreal and UBC have also been invited.

Skulemen Write On 1954 Riot, Banned 'Varsity'

A banned issue of The Varsity has been made the subject of an English essay for first-year engineers. As an alternative, engineering freshmen can write about the "riot" in the fall of 1954, in which the registrar of University College was injured.

The engineers are reading John Stuart Mill's essay "On Liberty". In the essay the students have been asked to discuss the banning of the student paper in relation to Mill's views.

The article in the "gag issue" lampooned a lecture by Dr. Sidney Smith, president of U of T, on remedial English. The story was changed to one about remedial sex, by substituting the word "sex" for "English", wherever it had appeared in the original.

Copies of The Varsity were seized and removed from the files, by order of the SAC, and the paper was suspended.

The alternative essay, about the engineer's riot, will cover the question of how far students should be free to act and think as they please.

Some Engineering students have been complaining about the essays, "Essays could correspond more with what we'll be doing in later life," said R. Collins, (I SPS).

Another engineer, S. Benner, (I SPS) said "The present English course has very little to do with engineering and not much to do with improving our English."

Anti-Negro Leader Expelled May Seek Court Decision

The pro-segregation leader at the University of Alabama has been expelled for his part in the campus riot which preceded the expulsion of Negro coed Autherine Lucy.

Trustees announced the expulsion of Leonard R. Wilson, leader of a white Citizen's Council and the suspension of four other students. Disciplinary action was approved against twenty-five others.

Wilson had spoken at a demonstration the day that Miss Lucy first attended classes. He also spoke at several rallies that followed later.

Reports have indicated that Wilson will turn to the courts in an effort to seek readmittance to the university.

Wilson has also been accused of making false charges against university officials. Wilson has criticized the university authorities for their handling of the Lucy case. He called faculty investigation of campus disorders a "witch hunt."

Little Learning Is Dangerous Debated By Vic Tomorrow

Victoria College's debate of the year comes up tomorrow night. The annual Faculty Debate, held every year since 1891, will attempt to decide the question "Resolved that a Little Learning is a Dangerous Thing."

Wes Turner, president of the Victoria parliament said he understood one speaker would make some disparaging remarks about the value of a university education. Some of the speakers are reputed to have strong views on the subject.

Speakers for the government will be Professor M. McClure and Miss Jay MacPherson and for the noes, Miss K. Coburn and Mr. Peter Seymour.

This is the last debate of the year sponsored by the Victoria Debating Parliament.

Varsity Starts Studying Friday

The final issue of The Varsity will hit the stands this Friday morning.

All Varsity staffers are asked to report to The Varsity office immediately to obtain assignments for the final issue. Deadline for articles and Today's and Coming-Up's is this Wednesday at 6:00 p.m.

Warden, Hockey Star Talk Despite CBLT Breakdown

In spite of a last-minute emergency, CBC's second edition of Graphic successfully went on Friday night.

According to Warden McCulley of Hart House, connections with the Montreal home of Maurice "Rocket" Richard, the program's first interviewee of the night, were lost for several seconds almost immediately before the program started. However, they were regained for the interview.

Other subjects on the program included the demonstration of a new device for checking on allegedly drunk drivers, and a backstage visit to the Royal Alex while the Toronto Opera Company's Don Giovanni was in progress.

On the strictly "human-interest" side, a sequence was shown of a small boy having his first hair-cut.

Blood Trophy

The Skule Cannon rests comfortably in its new surroundings in The Varsity's office. It was presented by the Engineers to the School of Nursing in recognition of the Nurses' fine achievement in the Blood Campaign.

$4500 "National Reserve" Budgeted

Next year's proposed SAC budget contains an item — earmarked "National Reserve" — which is just equal to the fees that Toronto would have to pay to NFCUS to be a member.

The $4,500 item for a "reserve" was included in the proposed budget of the SAC by the Finance Commission, meeting yesterday.

Michael Shoemaker, SAC President, stated that he did not think that budgeting this amount was inconsistent with the SAC's resolution, which stated that the council "sever all ties" with the national federation, and that the NFCUS fees for next year not be included in the SAC budget.

"After all," said Shoemaker, "we have to consider the strong possibility that we might rejoin NFCUS, and make some allowance for this in our budget."

Murray Mogan, SAC Finance Commissioner, said that he thought the "reserve" should be included because Toronto has an obligation to participate in inter-university affairs. Mogan suggested that some of this money be used to finance such activities as a student summer seminar, weekend exchanges, etc. Requests for more funds from several organizations were refused.

folly in ontario

The decision of Ontario's Premier Frost to reject the recent federal fiscal offers and move this province towards a position of financial autonomy — and double taxation — can only be viewed with regret by those who are concerned with the problems of Canadian unity.

The premier, in terming the recent Ottawa conference a failure, has left great room for those who would consider Ontario's present policies a failure, and a failure of the most disastrous kind. The premier rejected the most generous fiscal offers yet to come out of Ottawa for the renting of provincial tax fields, and has evidently embarked on a course of levying his own taxes, in addition to the federal taxes already imposed.

The Ontario government cannot see that, while Ontario's needs for funds are undoubtedly great, the Ottawa government also needs vast resources for both defence and for an expanding program of social security.

The imposition of double-taxation in Ontario will not be greeted by enthusiasm by those who will have to pay extra for Mr. Frost's prized "autonomy." There is no evidence whatsoever that Ontario has exhausted its present sources of revenue, or indeed that the proposed contractual agreements with the federal government would infringe on Ontario's independence.

These extra taxes will hurt Ontario's growth. But even more disastrously, they will hurt the national welfare, for they will inevitably interfere with the federal "share the wealth" proposals, which would have aided Canada's have not provinces with federal revenue. The entry of Mr. Frost into federal tax fields means that less revenue, and less incentive, will be present for these equalization agreements.

We hope that Mr. Frost will realize that the solution of a national problem does not lie in promoting narrow provincial interests.

let's do it legal

Toronto's decision to pull out of the national student federation has achieved at least one positive result: it has set all the NFCUS supporters on campus working like busy little beavers to haul Toronto back into NFCUS.

There is nothing wrong with these students' desire to bring Toronto back into the fold, or to influence other students to support the federation.

But we hope that their enthusiasm will not lead persons occupying positions of authority under the constitution of the SAC to flout it, or to ignore the expressed desires of the council as a whole.

jolly good

Last Sunday the Hart House Orchestra Associates finished their season for the year. It has been very encouraging to see this organization prosper so well.

In the first place they have, by their efforts, kept in existence an orchestra which is a credit to Canadian culture. This is surely one of the most worthwhile ventures within and without the university that has been undertaken in the past few years.

In addition they have enriched both the life of the university and of Hart House. And perhaps we might suggest in a not too loud voice that they have enriched the community by resisting the interference of an organization which exists as an anachronism.

The series has justified the support it received from the students, and we wish it luck for the next year.

To Rejoin Or Not?

The NFCUS Question?

Ever since the students' council here voted, 10-8, to pull out of the national student federation, controversy has raged on the campus as to the wisdom of this action. Here The Varsity presents two views on this matter.

By PETER MARTIN
National President of NFCUS

On March 7th, an outgoing Students' Administrative Council voted to withdraw from the National Federation of Canadian University Students, despite the fact that this same Council had supported the National Federation throughout the year; and despite the fact that the organization is more vital and effective this year than it has ever before been in its history.

However, I do not intend to criticize the Students' Administrative Council. Instead, I would like to underline the need for a national student organization and to show that the SAC's decision is not in the best interests of the students of Toronto or of Canada.

Many of the SAC members who spoke against NFCUS the other night, acknowledged frankly the need for a national organization and advocated withdrawal only because they were not satisfied with the present organization. Their negative votes appear to be absurd in this connection.

A country such as Canada is one in which communication difficulties make contact between students difficult.

What the members do not seem to have realized is that NFCUS is an organization which they have formed and whose future is in their hands. They do not realize that NFCUS exists each year in the form which they have authorized. By withdrawal from NFCUS, the SAC has complicated enormously the problem of creating and maintaining a national student organization. They have destroyed their own contacts with other universities, and they have advocated a two to five year period of complete chaos during which a new organization would be formed.

By returning to NFCUS, they would find the means at their disposal to make of Canada's national student organization the sort of organization they would like.

They won't get it by sitting on the sidelines and complaining.

By SANDY MacPHERSON
Medicine Rep, SAC

Long before I attained the Olympian heights of the SAC I questioned the value of NFCUS. As an ordinary student, I frequently wondered what and who, these mysterious five letters represented.

Now I know. NFCUS claims to represent the students. In reality, it represents a vociferous in-group of campus politicians. Frankly idealistic, often appointed rather than elected, always enthusiastic, these people meet and talk about—NFCUS. As long as any compulsory organization exists for the few rather than for the many, I am unalterably opposed to it.

We have heard that we run and control NFCUS. How can this be reconciled with Mr. Martin's editorial statement in NFCUS Items last November: "They don't realize that an organization can't maintain stability if they have to rush off on a new tangent each time the delegates get together."

Why bother about delegates? Last fall our delegates went out West with specific proposals which were accepted by the conference. Many of them have not been implemented.

Why bother with a conference? Our vote to withdraw from NFCUS registered our protest against that organization as it now exists. Such a step was necessary. For the six years that I have been at the University of Toronto, student government has attempted to "reform" NFCUS. No one has succeeded.

We are not opposed to a national union of students. We are opposed to an organization supported by funds gained by compulsory levy which only shows signs of responsibility when threatened with loss of these funds.

This is not the end, but a beginning. Our university, always a leader in national affairs, will work as it always has for student unity—a unity of ALL the students, not just the "elite."

Bathos and Canadian Self-Righteousness

Editor, The Varsity:

As a student from the United States I have had more than my share of Canadian self-righteousness but the unreasoned bathos of Mr. Paul Wyszowski, who reveals his ignorance in your columns, demands comment.

It is this ignorance that concerns me and not his laudable plea for vocal support on the part of University students.

Nowhere in his letter does Mr. Wyszowski reveal even a flea's hair worth of knowledge.

Nor does he seem to realize that if the "murderers" he mentions were really "protected by the sympathetic public opinion" of Americans the vast majority of people would not be supporting the decision of the Supreme Court which brought about the immediate situation in the University of Alabama.

No one knows better than our clergy that it is not enough merely to be against social evils.

Certainly the fullest possible knowledge and understanding is required if we are to judge accurately the actions of others. Only after gaining this knowledge and understanding do our judgments gain validity.

The most disturbing element to me is the evident willingness of Canadians to sit here in their Seventh Heaven while looking South for every example of immortality and deceit. God knows we have them; and it is because American in the States are fighting them that they have become "news-value" throughout the world.

Is it implied in all this that there are no social problems in Canada?

Life must either be completely innocent or unbearably dull in Canada that the only cause with which Canadian students can become involved is one in the States. Look homeward angels, you are not in paradise yet.

Narrow-Mindedness of SAC

Thanks to the narrow-mindedness of the SAC, reps from Engineering, Medicine, Law, Nursing, POT, and St. Michael's College were now out of NFCUS.

At Wednesday night's SAC meeting Peter Martin, President of NFCUS, answered every question that has been raised by NFCUS opponents. Yet, by the vote of the SAC, those opposing NFCUS either did not listen to Peter Martin or were so prejudiced and biased to begin with that nothing could have changed their minds.

If ever NFCUS was justified, then it was justified by Peter Martin on Wednesday night. The audience of thirty present at the meeting, including a sizeable number of new SAC reps, were dismayed and awed when the vote was counted. The factual straightforward presentation of Peter Martin far overshadowed the arguments of the bigoted and biased anti-NFCUS mongers.

An inherent weakness of NFCUS however was brought to light. The lack of an organized public relations organization to keep its members and non-members informed of its aims, accomplishments and difficulties is a dire need. Second to this is, only the need of a patient and unbiased student body.

If we are agreed, and we seem to be, that a national federation is desirable, then the success of any such organization will depend on ourselves.

How we solve them is ultimately a function of our real desire to have a National Federation, and not the name or organization of such a body.

Jim Vasoff, IV SPS.

UBC Likes NFCUS

Editor, The Varsity:

With regard to your article "UBC May Cut NFCUS Cards" in Friday's issue of The Varsity, I do not believe that UBC is so overwhelmingly against NFCUS as the article in the Ubcussy or the reproduction in The Varsity would indicate.

The seeming chance which the poll taken by The Ubcussy gives could hardly be so large as to ensure the success of the 1956-57 vote in favour of NFCUS which was held last spring.

UofT Orchestra and Chorus

New Vitality Needed

By MICHAEL PENGELEY

Why was Convocation Hall two-thirds empty last Thursday night when the University Symphony Orchestra gave its second concert of the year?

I do not believe the answer is that University of Toronto students are so uninterested in classical music that they have no interest in attending. Nor do I believe that the orchestra and chorus are so hopelessly ineffectual, musically speaking, that they are purposely shunned. The reason, in my opinion, is two-fold:

- (a) The programs for several years now have not been of a kind likely to appeal to young people who perhaps are just becoming aware of the vast and exciting experiences that music can bring.
- (b) There has been no attempt recently to introduce student soloists with the orchestra.

The thing both these failures have in common is a substantial disregard for the pleasure of an audience. The University Symphony and Chorus are sponsored by the students through the SAC. I can see no reason why they should not cater to the musical appetites of students and, at the same time, help to promote an interest in the classical works. If it is argued that amateur musicians cannot do justice to the works of Mozart and Beethoven (which is undoubtedly true), it may also be pointed out that Beethoven, even when badly performed, is better listening than much of the work that has been presented by the orchestra in the last four or five years. And Beethoven—his overtures, symphonies and concertos—will draw an audience!

I was associated with the orchestra in the years 1946-47 when it was under the leadership of Hans Gruber, now director of the Victoria Symphony Orchestra. The concerts given under Gruber's direction brought students flocking to Convocation Hall so that latecomers could scarcely find a seat. It was not that the orchestra performed any better under his direction; but the concerts were of a kind that any student with the least musical spark about him could not resist attending. Marion Gruedeff, the well-known Canadian pianist, joined the orchestra at one of its performances, to play the popular Rachmaninoff Second Piano Concerto. The response was great. The concert-master of the orchestra at another concert gave an inspired performance of the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto. These are the kinds of works which will appeal, not only to students but to adults.

Another important feature of the concerts of six or seven years ago is that they were held Sunday evenings. The advantages of a Sunday concert need no comment.

It is time that both the Students' Administrative Council, and those directly connected with these organizations, take stock of themselves and ask whether their object is to entertain the students of the university, or merely help the participants amass credits in the various academic courses in music. The fact that the students of the university help finance the orchestra and chorus should impose some moral obligation in favour of the former. At the moment, the whole organization needs a potent shot in the arm—at least. Most of all, it needs some imagination.

About Thursday night's concert, there is little to say. The hall was, as I have said, two-thirds empty and the program only moderately interesting. It opened with a fairly pleasing performance of the Overture to Orione by Bach. Hans Gassteiger was conductor. The first movement, particularly, showed promise.

The Purcell-Akon Suite in five parts conducted by the orchestra's permanent conductor, Dr. Robert Rosevear, seemed uninspired for the most part. There was poor contrast between the sections, the brasses were frequently out of tune and the strings sometimes tiny in tone. There was some rhythmic uncertainty, I felt.

I found the Two Chorales by J. S. Bach, the most interesting and well-performed work on the program. Miss Berta Labash conducted the unaccompanied chorus with consummate skill. She is a young woman who knows what she is doing and has an instinctive feeling for what she does.

The other works on the program were: O Praise The Lord (Motet No. 6) by J. S. Bach; a Dance Overture by Burrill Phillips; Reincarnations by Samuel Barber for chorus; Three Dance Episodes from Rodco by Arvon Copland.

In general, I must say that I derived more pleasure from the University chorus than from the orchestral playing. Yet the orchestra did not play badly; rather, it was what they played. A little more regard for their programming and their public might help the group regain the audience's appreciation and the participants' enthusiasm.

Boyd Neel, Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto, conducted the Hart House Orchestra in Hart House's Great Hall Sunday evening, as always. The program was the last of the H O A season

Rock Wobbles

The second offering of Toronto's Premiere Theatre concerns itself with a current Broadway hit — Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? — a cute little spoof of Hollywood, Satan and similar matter. To ensure the quality of this production the Premiere people have imported international talent, a New York Director and the 'immeasurable guidance and encouragement' of 'Mr. Billy Rose of New York'. Judging from the results of their work, re-exporting might be in order.

The somewhat limited formula of sex and laughs to which the Premiere Theatre company seems to be addicted, has been carefully used in Rock Hunter. For the sex angle there is the lavish Sandu Scott, a young Hollywood nymph of remarkable dimensions, and for laughs there is the fine talent of Ron Hartmann, who, as the muddled dupe of Miss Scott's satanic agent, stands out in a mediocre cost. However, both the sumptuous Sandu and Hartmann were buried under the shaky structure of the production, which collapsed shortly after the start of the first act.

Sad and skimpy sets, careless organization of the actors on stage and a marked lack of co-ordination between technicians and players, combined with the general cast's unfamiliarity with their lines, helped to tear down what little cohesion the play originally had. Several times characters threw away whatever effect they had achieved by beginning to say a line, stumbling on it then, realizing that they were on the wrong page of the script, going back and starting all over again.

Aside from Hartmann, there was no real use made of voices. An almost wooden delivery did much to kill any effect of comedy and, in the case of Sandu, a gushy conscious spouting of lines gave the production a forced tone.

Communist Eyes Hart House

Canadian student canteens remind one of Gothic churches, according to Jiri Pelikan president of the International Union of Students, in an article in the communist newspaper, "World Students News."

Pelikan was IUS representative at the 1954 summer conference of NFCUS in Alberta, and afterwards toured across Canada, stopping off at Toronto. In this article, he gives his impressions of Canadian campuses, student newspapers and also attacks NFCUS.

Describing Canadian university campuses, including Toronto, Pelikan says the following: "I was able to admire the modern buildings and equipment, the paradox of which are the efforts for ancient architecture, and the interior decoration where, for example, some student canteens remind one of Gothic churches. (It is believed he was thinking of Hart House).

"The great advantage is that all faculties and administrative buildings are on one and the same campus with the essential English lawn in the middle, separate common rooms for girls and boys and naturally — the great number of cars and the problem of parking them"

According to Pelikan NFCUS lacks a national program for the academic, economic, cultural, sporting and social needs of Canadian students. NFCUS lacks the necessary "vehemence" to arouse student and public opinion when it presents such projects as reduced price cinema tickets.

"On the average," Pelikan says, "the student press shows some of the bad aspects of the Canadian press in general, especially trends of sensationalism, and arbitrary misinterpretation of events and speeches.

He further observes that little attention is given to cultural and international problems in the press.

McGill and Toronto campuses are described as having a "good journalistic level."

World Students News is published in Prague, Czechoslovakia, by the communist-dominated IUS.

H H O — The Grand Finale

Well, it's all over — until next Fall. The Hart House Orchestra has proved itself and will go on, if you want it. Boyd Neel appealed to the audience to see to it that they would have their Orchestra by completing applications for Membership — several have already been received. To sit and clap all night is not enough — the Members must start proselytizing now for the new Members which the Orchestra needs to be enlarged.

Sunday night's program was chosen by students and destined: Mudge arrived, but not Vivaldi. The scores which arrived from Rome were for strings, not bassoon concertos. Instead, Miss Elizabeth Benson-Guy sang three Handel arias, even though on the threshold of a cold. The first was from Semle, the others from Actis and Gabata. They were sung with great feeling and expression, that ravished the audience. The orchestra acquitted itself admirably in its new role as accompanist. We hope for more. The Mudge proved interesting. Though basically Handelian, there were details of construction and expression that distinguish Mudge as a composer of originality. The field of buried composers of Eighteenth Century England is large. Stanley, Gith and Wesley should certainly be dug up.

The Two Etudes by Godfrey Ridout, a member of the University staff were excellent. Here we contemporary Canadian music as it should be viable, well shaped, and not lacking in timeliness. It was interesting to note the audience response. They were obviously absorbed and at times even tense. In the words of educational authorities, there was maximum activity at all times. As much credit is due to Boyd Neel as the Orchestra and composer for the experience.

Mendelssohn wrote his Ninth Symphony for Strings at the age of fourteen, using an earlier String Quartet as its basis. The result is an exuberant work, with and without nineteenth century conventionalities. With some touches that can now be regarded as Mendelssohnian cliches, but are still very pleasant. The tunes, for such they are, tend to be over-developed. The Orchestra attacked the work with great verve. The variations of tempo in the last movement revealed some weaknesses, but also some unusual detail. The tone of the strings was tremendous.

The Hart House Orchestra has given us five evenings of superb music-making. We have heard the music of composers of four centuries in many more idioms than we might have expected. We have heard eminent soloists and versatile players in ideal surroundings. The thanks go to them, their conductors, the Warden of Hart House and the dedication of the students who formed the Association, also to the members and patrons who make their support

UBC will vote on the question of NFCUS membership this Thursday, and one member of the Toronto committee stated that Toronto's withdrawal will probably "tip the scales" on that campus against NFCUS.

 Of the twenty-six students questioned by The Varsity last night, nineteen did not know how much they paid to the support of NFCUS — 50c each annually per student.
When asked what they thought should be done with the surplus of some $4,500, students replied, "... use it to build a Student Union," "... pay The Varsity reporters," "... put it towards the All Varsity Revue," "... build a cafeteria for the engineers," "... use it for scholarships and barsaries," "... build a good place to drink," "... hire some decent professors," "... plant trees on the campus," "... start another NFCUS," "... use it for student exchanges," "... cut fees by fifty cents a year," "... yes, give it all to me."

No Women...

Dream College

Kingston (CUP) — A "Dream College" with no women students, scholarly gentlemen as professors, and no set timetable for lectures, was proposed at Queen's University last week.

"The idea of attending a University simply to acquire some sort of skill or trade is wrong," said Dr. H. W. Harkness here. "The 'Dream College' will have that atmosphere of leisure which is essential to maturing of the students where they can study because of interest and preference," he said.

His university would need some "sort of material atmosphere", well stocked libraries, lounges, classrooms, which all tend to give a relaxed university life, he said.

No women could be students. There would not be a strict schedule, students would only attend lectures when they felt like it, and professors would only give them when the spirit moved them.

Students would only have to take an examination at the end of their first year and then not again until their final year, he said.

Professor's duties would be just to instruct the students in the classrooms. A system of readers attached to the staff would assign and correct exercises.

Retarded Women Receive Training In Domestic Jobs

By V. K. CAMPBELL

The biggest problem for the mentally-retarded is trying to adjust to society, trying to get as much out of life as possible, and trying to contribute to the limit of ability.

An agency which attempts to help mentally retarded girls do this is Lorimer Lodge, 228 St. George Street.

One of the most important tasks of the Lodge is to train its members for employment. Most girls are trained for domestic positions, but lately some have been placed in other types of work.

Each year many move out and make a real contribution to society. For this to be possible requires much time and energy.

The Undergraduate Social Work Club extends an invitation to attend the meeting to be held this Thursday at 8 p.m. All interested in this social problem are invited, not merely those who intend entering the School of Social Work.

Champion Says Smith Exclusive

Labor Paper Attacks President, Government Over Education Views

In an article labelling Sidney Smith as "aristocratic-minded" the latest edition of Champion has attacked the President's comments on the educational crisis. Champion, a labor youth publication, then goes on to attack generally the measures of provincial and federal governments in the face of the crisis.

President Smith, does not agree with the United Nations declaration of human rights, claims Champion. While the UN declaration says an opportunity for a university education is part of one's birthright "the president of Canada's largest university says it is not," says the lead article.

"We are admitting young men and women to university who have neither brains, says the aristocratic-minded President Sidney Smith of the University of Toronto, nor the moral stamina to pursue advanced studies," Champion quotes.

This statement is made in the face of the fact that only 7.5 per cent of Canadian youth between the ages of 18-21, is gaining admittance to a university, says Champion.

In Ontario $35,000 is being spent to devise aptitude tests to limit enrollment," says Champion. In the next paragraph it points out that two hundred of six hundred engineering students were failed in their first test at the University of Toronto.

"It is proposed to add secret reports on high school students from their principal as a means of the selecting process in addition to university entrance examinations," Champion says.

"Liberal Party trickery at Ottawa," is said by Champion to be behind the recent proposal in parliament that students be given more scholarship aid.

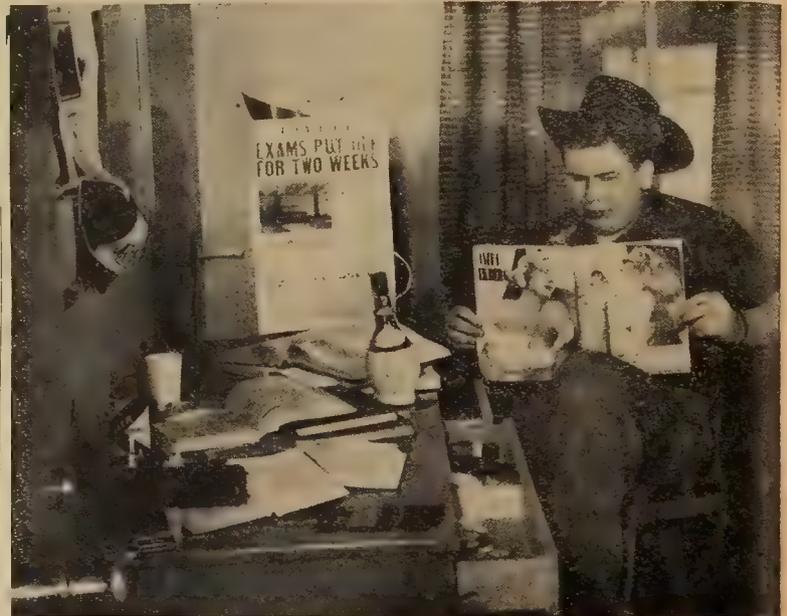

In the face of popular demand, they put up one of their backbenchers to introduce a motion for more scholarships, and then proceeded to bury the motion so it can't be voted on in this session of parliament, Champion said.

The paper suggested that the root of the crisis appeared to be financial. But money would be no problem, it said, unless the $2 billion defence budget was regarded as an untouchable sacred cow.

The real crisis, declared Champion, resulted from Canada's national policy. With all the Canadian jobs, Canadian companies, and Canadian money going to the United States, what need was there for talented, creative young Canadians, it asked.

Gag Issue A Success Fear, Delight Result

"Isn't it fabulous!" and "But I've got tickets to Europe for the 8th!" — such were comments heard after the first glance at Friday's gag issue of The Varsity. Professor R. J. Getty, head of the classics department at UC reportedly went to Principal Jeanneret's office and asked if he had to reset all his exams again.

Another source states that Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse, head of UC's English department, was interrupted in the middle of his lecture on Spencer and Milton and told to go and see Principal Jeanneret who wanted to know whether or not the English exams had been tampered with.

A student, way behind in his studies and harassed with essays, happened to glance over someone's shoulder in the JCR and read the headlines. Without waiting to read more, he rushed home to celebrate by taking his wife to a show.

Yesterday morning, Canadian Press and the CBC who received copies by mail were still not aware that it was all in fun. Canadian Press phoned The Varsity office to get some more information about the "heft" and reported that the CBC was "quite excited."

WUS Wants Dime From Each Student

A ten cent per student levy — to help students in Asia and Africa — was proposed by last Wednesday's SAC Meeting, by the secretary of World University Service of Canada.

"I don't think the idea will ever be considered," said SAC President Michael Shoemaker after the meeting. "The SAC budget is far too tight."

The thousand dollars taken with this levy would be added to the proceeds of the annual university SHARE campaign for WUSC, Shoemaker said.

WUSC money, raised through student levies and campaigns and the sale of handicrafts across Canada, has been used for medical equipment, health centres, duplicating equipment, in Japan, India, and other Asiatic nations. WUSC also sponsors foreign students studying in Canada, and sends Canadians to international seminars. (This year's is in Germany).

To do this year raised $5,500 in its SHARE campaign.

The money would make our revenue more certain and make our administration easier and less costly," Perinbam told the SAC.

He said other Canadian universities have student levies. Students at the universities of Saskatchewan and British Columbia pay a dollar a year to WUSC through their fees, he said. McMaster students pay fifty cents.

He said WUSC would be satisfied with ten cents a student from Toronto.

Perinbam expressed the Canadian students' "sense of responsibility" to students of other races, as shown through WUSC. "We can be certain of better relation (with them) in the future due to this," he said.

Volume of News Varied Campus Views Carried To Make Banner Year

By VERN GILBERT
Varsity News Editor

Blue laws kill campus concert . . . Drinking is banned for Queen's classic . . . Queen's demolish goalposts . . . Move to bury NFCUS is downed by council . . . NFCUS out, U of T severs all ties . . . Fire guts mining lab, radioactivity feared . . . Masterson quits . . .

These were some of the news stories which made banner headlines in The Varsity during 1955-56. This customary news-editor's review of the year's activities will attempt to trace some of the larger issues which appeared in the past academic year.

The volume of news varied. At the beginning of the year there was little trouble filling eight pages a night. Football games, distinguished visitors, student "shenanigans," and the SAC kept reporters busy.

Later in the year, the 75th anniversary issue kept staff enthusiasm alive, but after Christmas the news department was hit by a diminishing quantity of "big" stories and steadily dwindling number of reporters.

Over the year, news stories were confined pretty much to the campus. Club affairs, Hart House debates, college affairs, weekends, visitors, and staff and organizational changes took most of the attention.

Toronto's daily press picked up two big campus events and gave them wide publicity. The Hart House Orchestra, early in October planned a series of Sunday concerts. The Lord's Day Alliance threatened police action if the concerts went on.

Students, The Varsity and the downtown press were roused to action. Screaming headlines and petitions fluttered all over the campus. The SAC, President Sidney Smith and Dr. Boyd protested. The Lord's Day Alliance finally backed down, and the concerts went on.

Drinking at games, paint-slinging and goal post-demolishing pushed Blue Laws out of the news within a week. The SAC deplored students' conduct, President Smith protested and there was talk of cancelling the Yates Cup final if students did not behave.

The Toronto Telegram reported The Varsity's story with these words, "Paper Lashes Debauchery at Football Games, Liquor Bottle Throwing Draw Official Rebuke." Strict policing in Kingston at the play-off brought the whole episode to a graceful anti-climax.

On a level more closely connected with student activities, the SAC set the campus humming when at its next-to-last meeting it finally decided to secede from NFCUS by a 10-8 vote. Five months before, the council had upheld the federation 10-7. Petitions began to appear to get Toronto back in NFCUS. A Varsity poll revealed that almost half a sample of students asked had no opinion about NFCUS at all. A fire in the mining engineering building brought downtown reporters to the campus early in March. Dangerous radioactivity. (Continued on Page 3)

SAC, Pleas Fail Get No Extension In Library Hours

Students' pleas and the SAC's request to have library hours extended to 11:00 p.m. for the month of March have been of no avail. It is expected that the library will close at ten o'clock for the remainder of the term.

Mr. R. H. Blackburn, Chief Librarian, attended the SAC meeting, February 22, as a result of an investigation in library hours. He was asked to call a special meeting of the committee to consider the student council's request to keep the Wallace Room open till eleven on an experimental basis.

Mr. Blackburn said he did know when the meeting would be held. As yet the SAC has not been informed of any meeting of the University's Library Committee to even discuss the issue.

The library controversy has been a popular student meet for the last five years at least. The battle will probably continue next fall, since no decision has been reached this year.

Inco Metals at Work in Canada

Modern telephone cables are made up of many insulated copper wires. These cables can handle several thousand telephone calls simultaneously. Copper for nearly 75% of our telephone cables is mined, milled and refined by Inco right here in Canada. Then it goes to other Canadian companies for the manufacture of wire and cable. This cable is sold to telephone companies for installation in underground systems, like the one shown here, or in overhead telephone lines. All these operations make jobs for Canadian workmen.

Cables like this, made from INCO COPPER, handle thousands of telephone calls at once!

... and help provide jobs for Canadians

First, the ore from Inco's mines near Sudbury, Ontario, is processed in the Inco mill, the Inco smelter and the Inco copper refinery. It helps make jobs for about 18,000 Inco employees.

Next, the refined copper is sold to Canadian companies that manufacture copper wire and cable. There, Inco copper helps provide jobs for several thousand more employees.

Then, the cable goes to Canadian telephone companies where it helps make jobs for many thousands more Canadians.

Inco produces over 250,000,000 pounds of copper a year. And more than half of this copper goes to Canadian industries. Almost 75% of the telephone lines in Canada are made from Inco copper. From the ore to the finished cable, this Inco copper stays in Canada and helps provide employment for Canadians.

Sunday Concerts Emerged Victors

By MICHAEL B. PENGELLIFY
Varsity Managing Editor

Sunday Blue Laws clamp down
And the 18-piece Hart House Orchestra — one of the finest string groups in the country — is forced out of business.

The orchestra had been planning to give a series of five Sunday night concerts in Hart House, and the Lords Day Alliance petition.

For University of Toronto students, that was the big news event of the 1955-56 academic year, a vote of Varsity senior editors decided recently.

So far as most university people were concerned the row, which dipped into national prominence over the national radio hook-ups and the daily newspapers — had a happy ending.

Just one week after the Toronto office of the Lord's Day Alliance kicked up their stink, threatening "police action" if the concerts were held, the series was back on again.

The week long controversy brought the Hart House Orchestra Associates — the group of students who planned the series — plenty of much-needed publicity.

As Dr. Boyd Neel guided the orchestra through its fifth and final concert last week, it was no secret that the series had left the Associates comfortably on the blue side of the ledger.

The row over the Sunday concerts was ignited one morning last October.

When the Rev. A. S. McGrath, Executive Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance arrived at his downtown office that day he found, lying on his desk a clipping from a Toronto daily newspaper advertising the Sunday night series.

He got on the phone and told Dr. Boyd Neel, the conductor of the orchestra, that the concerts would have to be changed to a week-day night if admission were charged.

There were some warm phrases over the telephone. Snapped Dr. Neel: "Evidently it is all right to play baseball in Toronto on Sunday but not Beethoven."

That night, Herby Best speaking for the Associates, announced the five-concert series had been cancelled and that money would be refunded to ticket-holders.

A week later, however, after scores of people — including some quite influential — had raised a veritable hullabaloo, the concerts were re-scheduled.

Sheepskin Isn't But Graduates Will Get Paper

By MICHAEL CASSIDY
Varsity Asst. News Editor

A sheepskin is not really a sheepskin. To avoid disillusionment, the University of Toronto should know that a sheepskin is made of the pelt of a sheep.

But no signatures. The Ontario Education Council, which has been asked to advise the Government on the date isn't put on till the University of Toronto's next meeting.

Biggest extra-convictional event is a Graduate Ball now sponsored by the SAC and held in Hart House, May 24th.

The ball will be held in the Hart House, 100 St. George Street, Toronto. Tickets are $2.00 for men, $1.50 for women, $1.00 for children under 12. The ball will be held in the Hart House, 100 St. George Street, Toronto.

SAC Glancing Back

By RALPH BERRIN
Varsity Staff Reporter

- The Students' Administrative Council this year, besides dropping out of NFCUS:
- asked students to refrain from tearing down goalposts and throwing bottles;
- were sorry to learn that the Handbook had an unexpected deficit of $338;
- frowned when told that no reduction in the price of texts at the U of T bookstore was possible;
- were surprised to learn that the Blue and White Society was no longer a Rah! Rah! society;
- were pleased to find last year's net assets were $19,657;
- had a beat-up looking President at one meeting;
- laughed in despair when the Student service commission failed twice to entice children from the University Settlement to football games. The report stated that children might be adverse to being used as a publicity medium;
- spent $75 on cheerleaders' skirts and drum majorette costumes;
- sent flowers to the President and wished him well;
- were thanked by the President; looked astonished after an offer by the Circle K Club on campus to do anything for the SAC; but took no action on this;
- instituted a social committee;
- appeared relieved to hear that the Political Economy Club would run the Mock Parliament;
- agreed to operate the Carnegie Record Collection concerts again in the Mechanical Building's staff room;
- paid $20 to move some cupboards from one corner to another in the Book Exchange;
- were perplexed on learning that an unbreakable contract in perpetuity for University crests and rings made by the SAC council in the 1920's was still obligating the SAC;
- presented a "SAC'er of the Week" award to T. Sievenpiper (IV Arch) for his work on the SAC Bulletin Board;

- decided to give blood in a body as a good example;
- had one closed meeting to pick a Varsity Editor, Pete Gzowski, voted themselves to be a Hospitality Committee without blazers;

- learned that from now on a student — the SAC president — will sit on the Caput, the University's disciplinary body.

Big News Of '56

- For The Varsity, however, no fire will ever come up to "the night UC burned down" — which The Varsity missed, being out of action due to bankruptcy.
- The football coach, Bob Masteron, resigned his job in January to take a position with the Calgary Stampede. His position was filled by Dalt White, who thus became the only Canadian coach in the inter-collegiate loop.
- Stories reported the appointment of Vice-president C. T. Bissell to the presidency of Carleton College, the President's report, the opening of the new Trinity College Chapel, and a visit to the university by Russian priests touring Canada.
- On the student front the mock parliament drew four front page stories in a row.
- The year's biggest news flop was undoubtedly the "flu epidemic" at Victoria. There was no recurrence of the 1919 closing of the university, just 40 residents at Burwash Hall got "24-hour flu".
- Other news stories included:
 - Students in law cases — the Dresden restaurant owner and his discrimination against Negroes had two airings.
 - Exchange weekends and the Winter Carnival.
 - Philosophers' Walk and its attendant characters, which cropped up at least three times.

- Among others:
 - Bookburning, the CUP conference, and impecunious students waiting for Dominion-Provincial grants.
 - Special issues on marriage and education.
 - SHARE, Red Feather and the Red Cross Blood Drive. These latter found students' enthusiasm needed much prodding to produce results.
 - Another Varsity poll found that 21 of 21 students knew at least part of the President's name, whereas none of 21 knew who the Chancellor was.

Federation's Last Year?

By ROBERT BROWN

The national students' federation isn't national any more.

The five largest universities in Canada (McGill, UBC, Toronto, Montreal, Manitoba) are not members. Two-thirds of Canadian university students do not belong. The NFCUS budget for next year, providing no universities rejoin, will be less than half of this year's. Several NFCUS projects will have to be scrapped, universities remaining will get even less for their money, and the exodus from the federation may turn into a rout.

Here on this campus, NFCUS has had a particularly hard year. A surprise move to kill NFCUS at the first SAC meeting was defeated 10-7. (Only 17 members voted on this resolution; yet when NFCUS was later given the heave-ho by the SAC with 18 of the 25 SAC members voting, many students protested the "unrepresentative" vote.)

During the year, NFCUS came in from criticism from many quarters. But its supporters here worked hard and well. Before its demise here, NFCUS had racked up some solid and not-so-solid achievements:

- Student Discount Service in operation, with 50 stores participating. But even the local SDS committee, headed by Ralph Burgess and John Woods thought the value of the scheme ques-

- tionable students just didn't respond.
- Art and Short Story Contest: Toronto's Ann Lazier took top honors in the painting contest, and 18 entries were submitted from Toronto in the story contest.
- Travel Service: This survived early criticism, and under Dick Verity appears to be flourishing on this campus.
- Inter-Regional Exchanges: Toronto's senate has decided that unless students show more interest, the project will be discontinued here.
- January Regional Conference in Hamilton: Toronto proposed proportional voting, and more emphasis on Canadian unity.

All these achievements are the results of hard and lengthy work. Despite this, three big universities — Manitoba, Toronto, and UBC, withdrew from NFCUS this year. There is a possibility that Toronto may re-enter, but this is not likely before the fall.

Among other's, Toronto's Peter Martin must be given an "A" for effort for his work as NFCUS national president this year. But the failure of NFCUS to attract and interest students — particularly in the large universities — remains to be solved before NFCUS's future life is assured. It may be that Canada's students, culture, and geography are too difficult obstacles for a national federation to overcome.

TRINITY WINS JENNINGS CUP

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN BROOKS

"Speaking of Sport" is, we feel, quite a good caption for a sports editorial column. But when we deem it necessary to write a column such as this to follow, it is a bit difficult to place the connection between "sport" and the situation we wish to discuss, other than the fact that the incidents took place as sports events.

We've all heard of drinking at football games and of littering the ice with programs at hockey games, but when a certain group of spectators have to stoop to the ridiculous and dangerous tactics employed at recent Interfaculty sports events on this campus, the situation is definitely getting out of hand.

As a matter of fact, beef number one dates back right through the basketball schedule. It seems as though our "certain group" has been getting a much greater kick out of creating disturbances at noon hour games than actually attending for the purpose of watching the contests. One should think that by the time a person reaches University level, he should have left behind him his childish activities. One would expect this, but it is apparently not the case. Anyone with any sense of common decency at all will tell you that the show-off, with his loud comments and obscene language, belongs on Iowa Jarvis Street and not in the Hart House spectators gallery. Surely if a person can't behave himself in a proper manner at a basketball game, he does not belong at a University. Swearing and throwing of lunch remains have been habits all year at basketball games, and it looks as though we'll have to wait until someone loses an eye by a stray toothpick before these "children" will come to their senses.

And it was more than likely the same people who carried their antics to the Arena last Tuesday for the hockey final. When the Trinity team took to the ice for the third period, it was met with a barrage of snowballs from the top row of the greys. That in itself wasn't too bad, but when the missiles began to be directed at the spectators on the opposite side, trouble was in the offing. Before long, the lights, struck (quite unintentionally, of course) by a stray snowball here and there, began to pop. Fortunately, one shafted when no one was in the vicinity, but the second came dangerously close to spraying glass on several participants underneath. Then, some bright young jackass decided he'd aim at the clock. We shudder to think what could have been the result had the remains of a plate of glass, the size of an automobile tire, come sailing down on the ice. Smarten up, chaps, you're playing with fire!

It is a well-known fact that this University possesses one of the top Interfaculty sports systems on the North American continent. The fans' support of Interfaculty sports is an integral part of its continued success. The cases we have just cited are unfair to the players and referees, not to mention the other spectators and the administrators of the Interfaculty system.

It seems rather ridiculous that we should have to devote our final column of the year to comment upon such unnecessary behaviour, but since the situation has become so increasingly alarming, it is obvious that remedial steps must be taken to prevent any recurrences.

Perhaps by bringing the matter to the attention of the guilty students involved, who perhaps do not realize the disastrous results their actions could produce, at the end of the year, they will take advantage of the summer months to grow up a bit. Let's hope so!

Goodwin, Osler Game Standouts In Hockey Panthers 2-1 Victory

By JOHN VOJTECH

Amid thunderous cheers and shattering light bulbs, a sixteen year famine ended for Trinity College as they knocked off Jr. SPS 2-1 on Tuesday afternoon to retain possession of the Jennings Cup which they have not seen since the season of '39-40. It was an abrupt ending to hockey activity on the campus as the Panthers took the best of three series two games to nil.

One reason why the trophy rests within the hallowed walls of Trinity is because of the fabulous net-minding done by John Goodwin. In playing his lost game for Trinity before graduating, Goodwin came up with his best performance. At times, it was his terrific playing that kept the Panthers from between the devil and the deep blue sea.

The game had even the most neutral observers sitting on the edge of their respective seats. The action started early in the first period when John Patterson sent the Skule team ahead as he slapped a pass from Joe Bielawski into the net. The lead was short-lived as a few minutes later, Pete Sanderson let a long shot go from the blue line which Bill Lovering tipped in to tie the score.

In the second period, John Seagram was banished for hooking. Panther Dave Osler was sent on the ice to kill the penalty. This he did and more. He also killed the Skule team by scoring while his team was a man short. On the faceoff after the penalty, Osler was sent on the ice to kill the penalty. This he did and more. He also killed the Skule team by scoring while his team was a man short. On the faceoff after the penalty, Osler got hold of the puck and raced down the left side leaving the Skule defence far behind.

He rounded the Skule net and slapped the puck into the net off George German's body as German lunged over to cover the side.

German played well in the Skule nets as he saved the Skule team time and time again, notably as Panther Brooke Ellis broke into the clear twice only to be robbed by German. Other Skule stars who gave their all were Jim Gray, George Rentis, Joe Bielawski, Libero DeCarlo and Bill Adams.

When the game ended, Trinity supporters rushed out onto the ice and chaired Goodwin on their shoulders. He deserved it and more. The Mighty Mite came up with saves which were nothing short of outright robbery. Mike DePencier, Max Sanderson, John Seagram, Christ Johnson and Pete Giffen played well for the Black Panthers.

Ice Blues Kept Title Capturing Nine Of 12

Early season indications forecast difficulty for the hockey Blues in defending the Intercollegiate championship won so easily in the winter of 1954-55. Apart from an experienced band of juniors somewhat attracted to McGill, and a suddenly inspired club at Laval, failures and other incidental conditions stripped last year's titlists of much of their talent.

John Tolton, however, returned to graduate studies; Ken Linseman and Brian Anderson crossed the campus from St. Mike's; Sandy Morrison and John Macdonald left the junior fold for a higher education, and several promising rookies showed up when coach Jack Kennedy issued the call to arms in October.

Still, early exhibition games seemed to indicate a weaker team than last season, although probably better balanced. The Blues managed a tie in four games in the American midwest against Denver University and Colorado College, and dropped exhibition tests in Toronto to East York Lyndhursts and St. Mike's Majors.

But highly-rated McGill invaded before Christmas and Varsity walloped the Redmen 10-5. Two weekend victories from the Carabins and McGill as the new year opened set the Blues up for the following week's struggle with Laval.

The Rouge et Or invaded, strong as predicted, and dropped the home club 3-2. The issue was partially settled a week later when the Blues dumped Laval 4-0 in Quebec City and then edged the U of M 6-4 the next night in Verdun.

But now McGill loomed on the horizon as a possible contender, and after topping the Blues 2-1 on Toronto ice, seemed headed somewhat belatedly for the top. But strength prevailed, with the Blues lacing Laval 6-3 the next week, and then clinching the title with twin victories from McGill and Laval in old Quebec at the end of the month.

Linseman fired his 18th goal of the season in the last game against the Carabins, setting a new mark for Varsity in one season. The fiery little winger added another honor when his teammates named him the most valuable player on the senior club.

Athletic Director Warren Stevens has called the 1955 club the best in his 23 years at the university, but this team seemed truly to be a champion. Never quite able to unloose themselves, they still coasted through the schedule with ease, while providing an ever-growing audience with a host of rare sports thrills.

CUP All-Stars

The first and second Canadian University Press all-star hockey teams were picked by a poll of the hockey writers of the four college newspapers of the Intercollegiate league.

FIRST TEAM — Goal — Al Fleming (V); Defence — Dave Jackson (V), Gerard Houle (M); Forwards — Leo Konyk (McG), Don Cossar (V), Ken Linseman (V).

SECOND TEAM — Goal — Cy Guevremont (M); Defence — Dave Stephen (V), Len Sigurdson (McG); Forwards — John Akitt (V), Brian McCann (McG), Dick Baltan (McG).

on the sideline

By FLO MIDDLETON

The Varsity, like all other extracurricular activities, must end in order to make time possible for all the studying that did not get done during the year and so with all the other staffers, we must draw the curtain down on another wonderful two terms. In a way, it is quite horrifying because it means that exams are around the corner, and sad for me, in that it is the last "On the Sideline". However, this year's ending has its very encouraging moments for the Women's Athletic Building row seems as though it is going to be built.

A week ago, one could not help being a pessimist, but this week the gloom has changed to optimism. Last Wednesday, the influential Property Committee met and approved the model for the Athletic Building. Sometime this week, the Board of Governors is to meet and say either yes or no. It seems highly unlikely that this august group of gentlemen will refuse the recommendations of the more specialized and highly trained Property Committee.

Actually, the Board has no legitimate reason to say no, since the plans have been approved. It is not a question of money for the required sums have been put away for some time now. On general principles, these gentlemen cannot reply in the negative because the need for such a building is only too evident.

Assuming that the governors will see the "light," it will take at least three months for all the smaller building problems to be ironed out and for tenders to be submitted. One cannot help feeling, that minus any red tape from Simcoe Hall, the women of this University shall see construction starting on the building they were promised thirty years ago, by the fall. After all these years of waiting, I hope we are not disillusioned.

In wishing success to the hopes of the many women who have done so much in attempting to make the Women's Athletic Building an actuality, one cannot overlook the work of Miss Slack who has been the guiding spirit. To her and her staff, we say many thanks and we know that this time they will not be disappointed.

IRISH, SKULE MEET FOR CUP

Engineers Force Deciding Game Taking Thrilling 64-62 Victory

Junior SPS, with elimination starting them in the face, overcame a six point deficit with six minutes remaining in the game on Wednesday afternoon, to down St. Mike's 64-62 and tie up the Sifton Cup basketball finals at one game each.

Alec Fraser was the key man for Skule in the first half when he tallied 17 of his 18 points, Jerry Wojdon was the driving force for the Engineers in the last half as he scored ten points after going scoreless in the opening period. Bill Karpinski and Dave Primeau also stood out for the victors, scoring 16 and 11 points respectively.

High man in the game was St. Mike's Ed Callaghan who potted 26 points, 16 from the free throw line. Joe Girdlestone and "Spook" Robinson chipped in with 11 each.

A major factor in the SPS win was the great job Dick Jaworski did on the Double Blue's Dan Regan. Regan, a consistent 18 point a game scorer, was held to two in the first half and six in the second.

Skule held a six point lead through most of the first stanza, but St. Mike's rallied to trail by only two at the half, 34-32. SPS didn't have too much difficulty in breaking the zone put up by the Irish. They passed the ball into the bucket, and Fraser either took close-in shots or passed out to his teammates cutting by for shots.

The Irish tied the game early in the second frame and went into a six point lead with 12 minutes remaining. They held their six point margin for another six minutes before hoops by Wojdon and Primeau sandwiched around two foul shots by Karpinski evened the score. With two minutes left Skule held a 62-59 lead. Robinson's free throw and Ken Stanton's driving lay-up tied the game and set the stage for the climax. Wojdon scored on a rebound to provide the winning margin for the Engineers. The Irish bounced back and almost tied it when Girdlestone's set shot went in and out. Ten seconds remained when, with the Double Blue in possession, Jaworski stole the ball from Callaghan to end the contest.

Today's third game, at 1:07 p.m., could go either way, but we'll call Skule to win by nine.

Speaking of Sport

By HOWIE MANDELL

When exams come along, sports look for an exit, and since the exams are fast approaching and sports just as quickly dying, you'll truly feel that a snap review of what has happened on this campus in the world of sports is an order.

Football, football and more football headline the fall sports calendar, and, of course, the main football topic here is the University of Toronto Blues. The climax to a thrilling season took place in Kingston when, in a special playoff encounter for the Yates Cup, emblematic of Intercollegiate Football supremacy, Queen's overpowered the Blues 18-0.

Other football news saw Phil Murtz, Toronto's hard-driving captain, carry off the Johnny Copp Memorial Trophy as the most valuable player on the Varsity team. The Intermediate football team had quite a successful season when they won the Shaw Trophy, symbolic of Intermediate football supremacy. Perhaps the biggest football story of the year, was the resignation of Bob Masterson as Head Coach of the Blues and the announcement that Dalt White had been signed to coach Varsity in the next semester.

But football isn't the only athletic activity that goes on in the autumn of the year. In the first place there's soccer, and more, winning both the Senior and Intermediate crowns. Then there's track, and there again the locals triumphed winning the senior title by a 20 point margin over their closest rivals. In the field of golf, the U of T Intermediate team, led by Hugh Sampson's great performance, ran away from five others to easily capture the Intermediate Golf Championship.

But when the snow falls a young man's fancy turns (you guessed it) to basketball and hockey. Hokey was the big attraction on the campus this winter, with the Blues capturing the Intercollegiate Championship and the Queen's Cup. The Varsity attack was led by high-scoring Ken Linsen and who, along with Don Cassar, Dave Jackson and Red Fleming were chosen to the CUP all-star team.

Instead of entering Varsity in the regular Intercollegiate-Intermediate loop, the Whites entered the rejuvenated T.H.E. Major Series. It took some time for the Whites to get adjusted to the calibre of play in the loop, but they finally got rolling near the end of the season and went unbeaten in eight games.

Out on the basketball floor, Leo McMaster's Blues led a little trouble starting the season when they consistently went down to defeat at the hands of Peter Hall. But then something happened to Varsity and, with eight games left, they out-hustled their opposition all the way to win six of those eight encounters. Highlighting the season was the brilliant play of Leo Mandell, Tom Dacys-shyn and Peter Tetter, who all made the CUP all-star team.

The Intermediate basketball team came within an eyelash of capturing the league crown before they were defeated by an underdog McMaster team in the big game of the year at Hart House. The win gave Assumption the title.

And now on to the books!

Biggs Trophy

Bobby Waugh, a three year member of the Varsity football team, was named Tuesday night as the 1956 winner of the George M. Biggs Trophy. The trophy is awarded annually by the Athletic Association for leadership, sportsmanship and performance. In addition to his football prowess, Waugh was a member of the Intercollegiate wrestling team for the past four years, captaining the squad this year. He is holder of four first team colours as well as the bronze T. Upon graduation, Waugh journeys west to the summer camp of the Edmonton Eskimos.

Four Crowns To Varsity In Winter Sports Season

The University of Toronto took four Intercollegiate championships out of a possible nine in winter sports this past season.

The netmen kept the Badminton title in Toronto, winning all 24 of their matches. Jim Carnwath won the singles, Pete Ferguson and Ray Cornish the doubles championships. All three are now participating in the Dominion championships in Calgary. Ted Alexander was the fourth member of the squad.

The Intermediate Swimming team indicated Varsity's future in the water is in good shape as they won the championship by amassing a total of 50 points. The Senior Swimming team did not do as well however, as they placed third behind McMaster and Western. McMaster totalled 48 points in winning the Dougall Trophy. Western was close behind with 47 points and Toronto managed 14.

In the Skiing competitions Toronto ranked third in a six team race for the title. Edging out Toronto were McGill and Queen's. The championships were held at St. Sauveur and Mount Gabriel.

U of T captured the fencing championships with 20 points; well ahead of McGill with seven. The sabre, epee and foil championships were won by J. S. Andru, M. Nash, and G. L. Montgomery respectively.

Toronto also took first place in the curling bonspiel held at Guelph. Losing only one match, they advanced to the finals in which they defeated Waterloo "B" team 14-7.

The Boxing and Wrestling Blues both finished second. In the final countings our boxers trailed Queen's by eight points. In wrestling, Varsity finished 20 points behind Western and only one point ahead of O.A.C. Freeman Roth and Bob Sibthorp were the only Blue champions in the grappling sport.

Basketball Blues Finished Year Hot Moving Up To Grab Second Place

The University of Toronto basketball Blues started the season as cold as an ice cube and ended the year hotter than a fire-cracker, winning six of their last, seven contests.

The Blues started their exhibition year by meeting the toughest competition they could possibly find. Toronto travelled to New York City where they met three colleges in the area. In their first contest they were soundly whipped by a very good Seton Hall squad 93-60. A quick trip to New Rochelle saw the Blues trounced 78-58 by a high scoring Iona quintet. In that contest Varsity could not maintain a 39-37 half time margin. The Blues played one of their best games of the year when they took on Fairleigh-Dickinson in the last game of their New York series.

Times looked pretty gloomy for Toronto as they lost eight of their next nine contests. After successive losses to Buffalo, Toronto got their first taste of victory in their initial Intercollegiate contest of the year. On the thirteenth of January a highly ranked Assumption College crew fell before Toronto 66-61. But this contest wasn't the one to lift Toronto from their losing complexion. The next game, they were back to their old tactics when a vastly superior Niagara squad squashed them 84-56. This was followed by losses to Western, and Assumption in league encounters and to Yeshiva in an exhibition game at Hart House.

Then the Blues finally managed to find their way out of the quagmire of losses with the victory over the winners of the Western Area. The Games played in Quebec 98-59. A loss to perhaps the second best team in Canada, the Western Mustangs followed that one if it hadn't been for the fact that

Baby Blues Missed Title

A two point loss to McMaster was the difference between a first place tie and a second place dead-lock for Varsity. In a basketball intermediate, The 62-60 setback received at the hands of Mac dropped the Baby Blues into a second place tie with Western. A game behind league-leading Assumption.

Both Varsity and Western completed 6-2 records while Assumption suffered only one loss in their eight game schedule. A win over McMaster, one of the doormats of the loop, would have enabled our seconds to snag the intermediate cage title with Assumption.

However, the season was not a total loss. Not blessed with an overabundance of material, Coach Dalt White molded a team that conducted itself in fine style. Their only other loss was to Assumption, and that the night after playing in London, they downed Western in an overtime thriller. Ed Rizby consistently led the way for the Baby Blues, averaging about twenty points a contest.

Some fine performances while Gary Vipond and Robin Goldring were the key rebounders.

Cage fans can expect to see Rizby, Stroud and Vipond, on next year's edition of the Senior Blues.

CUP All-Stars

The first and second Canadian University Press all-star basketball teams were picked by a poll of the basketball writers of the five college newspapers of the Intercollegiate league.

SECOND TEAM - Forwards - Bert Raphael (McM), Larry Connorton (A), Dick Mackenzie (V); Guards - Leo Madden (V), Peter Potter (V), Don Wright (McG) (tie).

The Sportswoman

By MERLE OVERHOLT

Even though the "Bronze Baby" is back at Western for another year, the sports year has not been a total loss for Varsity's athletic ladies. What the senior basketball team lacked in championship play, the intermediates displayed and, if this is any indication of what is to come, that ugly bronze monster may be resting with us by this time next year.

Western was definitely the team to beat again this year and as well as the basketball crown they added the volleyball and swimming titles to their trophies. Varsity only brought back second class honours from the swimming meet at Western this fall but after Christmas the badminton team travelled to McGill, cleaned up in all the matches, and returned home in top place. When Toronto played hosts to the tennis tournament, the Varsity foursome played such tremendous tennis that they again took top honours - thus the Blue and White leads in two out of the six intercollegiate sports.

On the interfaculty front the Vic girls are queens of the campus.

Vic played on top in the softball when they defeated PHE in the volleyball by a resounding 37-21 point score; and they rounded out their winning ways by chalking up the most points in the badminton tournament.

PHE was not always on the short end of the score though. In swimming, the fizzed mermaids literally swam away with the meet when the basketball playoffs rolled around they were again away out in front - this time it was the Meds team that bowed before them.

The girls of Saint Hilda's also had a pretty successful run on the intramural championships, starting off early in the fall by clinching the tennis crown and ending up the season by trouncing all other contenders for ski supremacy.

POT took their place in the top of the "athletic cream" by downing the UC pucksters in the well-contested hockey playoffs.

So much for the past - next fall, new achievements in our Blue and White world of sport!

TRINITY WINS JENNINGS CUP

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN BROOKS

"Speaking of Sport" is, we feel, quite a good caption for a sports editorial column. But when we deem it necessary to write a column such as this to follow, it is a bit difficult to place the connection between "sport" and the situation we wish to discuss, other than the fact that the incidents took place as sports events.

We've all heard of drinking at football games and of littering the ice with programs at hockey games, but when a certain group of spectators have to stoop to the ridiculous and dangerous tactics employed at recent Interfaculty sports events on this campus, the situation is definitely getting out of hand.

As a matter of fact, beef number one dates back right through the basketball schedule. It seems as though our "certain group" has been getting a much greater kick out of creating disturbances at noon hour games than actually attending for the purpose of watching the contests. One should think that by the time a person reaches University level, he should have left behind him his childish activities. One would expect this, but it is apparently not the case. Anyone with any sense of common decency at all will tell you that the show-off with his loud comments and profane language belongs on lower Jarvis Street and not in the Hart House spectators gallery. Surely if a person can't behave himself in a proper manner at a basketball game, he does not belong at a University. Swearing and throwing of lunch remains have been habits of year at basketball games, and it looks as though we'll have to wait until someone loses an eye by a stray toothpick before these "children" will come to their senses.

And it was more than likely the same people who carried their antics to the Arena last Tuesday for the hockey final. When the Trinity team took to the ice for the third period, it was met with a barrage of snowballs from the top row of the greys. That in itself wasn't too bad, but when the missiles began to be directed at the spectators on the opposite side, trouble was in the offing. Before long, the lights, struck (quite unintentionally, of course) by a stray snowball here and there, began to pop. Fortunately, one shattered when no one was in the vicinity, but the second came dangerously close to spraying glass on several participants underneath. Then, some bright young jackass decided he'd aim at the clock. We shudder to think what could have been the result had the remains of a plate of glass the size of an automobile tire come sailing down on the ice. Smarten up, chaps, you're playing with fire!

It is a well-known fact that this University possesses one of the top Interfaculty sports systems on the North American continent. The fans' support of Interfaculty sports is an integral part of its continued success. The cases we have just cited are unfair to the players and referees, not to mention the other spectators and the administrators of the Interfaculty system.

It seems rather ridiculous that we should have to devote our final column of the year to comment upon such unnecessary behaviour, but since the situation has become so increasingly alarming, it is obvious that remedial steps must be taken to prevent any recurrences.

Perhaps by bringing the matter to the attention of the guilty students involved, who perhaps do not realize the disastrous results their actions could produce, at the end of the year, they will take advantage of the summer months to grow up a bit. Let's hope so!

Goodwin, Osler Game Standouts In Hockey Panthers 2-1 Victory

By JOHN VOJTECH

Amid thunderous cheers and shattering light bulbs, a sixteen year famine ended for Trinity College as they knocked off Jr. SPS 2-1 on Tuesday afternoon to retain possession of the Jennings Cup which they have not seen since the season of '39-40. It was an abrupt ending to hockey activity on the campus as the Panthers took the best of three series two games to nil.

One reason why the trophy rests within the hallowed walls of Trinity is because of the fabulous net-minding done by John Goodwin. In playing his last game for Trinity before graduating, Goodwin came up with his best performance. At times, it was his terrific playing that kept the Panthers from between the devil and the deep blue sea.

The game had even the most neutral observers sitting on the edge of their respective seats. The action started early in the first period when John Patterson sent the Skule team ahead as he slapped a pass from Joe Bielawski into the net. The lead was short lived as a few minutes later, Pete Saunderson let a long shot go from the blue line which Bill Lovering tipped in to tie the score.

In the second period, John Seagram was banished for hooking. Panther Dave Osler was sent on the ice to kill the penalty. This he did and more. He also killed the Skule team by scoring while his team was a man short. On the faceoff after the penalty, Osler was sent on the ice to kill the penalty. This he did and more. He also killed the Skule team by scoring while his team was a man short. On the faceoff after the penalty, Osler got hold of the puck and raced down the left side leaving the Skule defence far behind.

He rounded the Skule net and slapped the puck into the net off George German's body as German lunged over to cover the side.

German played well in the Skule nets as he saved the Skule team time and time again, notably as Panther Brooke Ellis broke into the clear twice only to be robbed by German. Other Skule stars who gave their all were Jim Gray, George Rentis, Joe Bielawski, Libero DeCarlo and Bill Adams.

When the game ended, Trinity supporters rushed out onto the ice and chaired Goodwin on their shoulders. He deserved it and more. The Mighty Mite came up with saves which were nothing short of outright robbery. Mike DePencier, Max Saunderson, John Seagram, Christ Johnson and Pete Giffen played well for the Black Panthers.

Ice Blues Kept Title Capturing Nine Of 12

Early season indications forecast difficulty for the hockey Blues in defending the Intercollegiate championship won so easily in the winter of 1954-55. Apart from an experienced band of juniors somehow attracted to McGill, and a suddenly inspired club at Laval, failures and other incidental conditions stripped last year's titlists of much of their talent.

John Tolton, however, returned to graduate studies; Ken Linseman and Brian Anderson crossed the campus from St. Mike's; Sandy Morrison and John Macdonald left the junior fold for a higher education, and several promising rookies showed up when coach Jack Kennedy issued the call to arms in October.

Still, early exhibition games seemed to indicate a weaker team than last season, although probably better balanced. The Blues managed a tie in four games in the American midwest against Denver University and Colorado College, and dropped exhibition tests in Toronto to East York Lyndhursts and St. Mike's Majors.

But highly-rated McGill invaded before Christmas and Varsity walloped the Redmen 10-5. Two weekend victories from the Carabins and McGill as the new year opened set the Blues up for the following week's struggle with Laval.

The Rouge et Or invaded, strong as predicted, and dropped the home club 3-2. The issue was partially settled a week later when the Blues dumped Laval 4-0 in Quebec City and then edged the U of M 6-4 the next night in Verdun.

But now McGill loomed on the horizon as a possible contender, and after topping the Blues 2-1 on Toronto ice, seemed headed somewhat belatedly for the top. But strength prevailed, with the Blues lacing Laval 6-3 the next week, and then clinching the title with twin victories from McGill and Laval in old Quebec at the end of the month.

Linseman fired his 18th goal of the season in the last game against the Carabins, setting a new mark for Varsity in one season. The fiery little winger added another honor when his teammates named him the most valuable player on the senior club.

Athletic Director Warren Stevens has called the 1955 club the best in his 23 years at the university, but this team seemed truly to be a champion. Never quite able to unloose themselves, they still coasted through the schedule with ease, while providing an ever-growing audience with a host of rare sports thrills.

on the sideline

By FLO MIDDLETON

The Varsity, like all other extracurricular activities, must end in order to make time possible for all the studying that did not get done during the year and so with all the other staffers, we must draw the curtain down on another wonderful two terms. In a way, it is quite horrifying because it means that exams are around the corner, and sad for me, in that it is the last "On the Sideline". However, this year's ending has its very encouraging moments for the Women's Athletic Building row seems as though it is going to be built.

A week ago, one could not help being a pessimist, but this week the gloom has changed to optimism. Last Wednesday, the influential Property Committee met and approved the model for the Athletic Building. Sometime this week, the Board of Governors is to meet and say either yes or no. It seems highly unlikely that this august group of gentlemen will refuse the recommendations of the more specialized and highly trained Property Committee.

Actually, the Board has no legiti-mate reason to say no, since the plans have been approved. It is not a question of money for the required sums have been put away for some time now. On general principles, these gentlemen cannot reply in the negative because the need for such a building is only too evident.

Assuming that the governors will see the "light" it will take at least three months for all the smaller building women to be ironed out and for tenders to be submitted. One cannot help feeling, that minus any red tape from Simcoe Hall, the women of this University shall see construction starting on the building they were promised thirty years ago, by the fall. After all these years of waiting, I hope we are not disillusioned.

In wishing success to the hopes of the many women who have done so much in attempting to make the Women's Athletic Building an actuality, one cannot overlook the work of Miss Slack who has been the guiding spirit. To her and her staff, we say many thanks and we know that this time they will not be disappointed.

A Cross For Makarios

Guest Editorial

Too Late

The number of relatively innocent people whom the Russians have transported to Siberia and other out of the way places for political Crimethink is immense. The number of people the British have treated the same way for the same offense is practically limited to one Cypriot Archbishop.

Quantitatively, the British cannot be compared to the Russians as suppressors and deporters of political deviants. Qualitatively, the resemblances are frightening.

Archbishop Makarios has been removed (really removed) for wanting something which all those countries generally referred to as "Freedom loving" are generally supposed to love—freedom. The reason? Gratifying the Archbishop's desire for freedom might mean losing military bases.

The British Empire (including all of us) has officially gone on record as valuing a strategic position above the civil rights of an Archbishop, above the will of a subject people, above Democracy. This is all far away? Sure it is. This doesn't concern us? The hell it doesn't! We are members of The British Empire, and also representatives of it. In the eyes of the world, each one of us is partially responsible for the Cyprus fiasco. A black eye for the British Empire is a black eye for us.

An Editor's Year

By ROBERT D. BROWN

To be the editor of a large college daily seems like an important and interesting job. And it is. But it is more than this: it is almost a way of life, a manner of living that inevitably cuts you off from the rest of the campus.

In this, the last article that I shall write in my final year at University, I would like to think back over the year that I have shared the responsibility of this paper. I remember coming down to the Varsity Office, early, close-walled, and sitting down in the classrooms of editor's cubicle to start planning the next day's issue.

I remember only vaguely what I did, proposals, thoughts, that I wanted to place before the students, but which never seemed to get done because of talks with injured publicity representatives and outraged moralists.

An Editor's Year In Review

By WENDY MICHENER

So here I am at the end and I have exactly 40 lines to write about the editor's year in review.

After a whole year of thinking of nothing but The Varsity and what should happen to The Varsity and what should or could be put into The Varsity, and, with the hurdle of exams just waiting for my pratfall it is very hard to look back with any kind of perspective.

How shall I tell you in 40 lines all about the mystical workings of the administration and the SAC that we have been in a position to find out about, how shall I give you an idea of the fifteen dozen crises every night, the challenge and sense of achievement in sending up the last copy for each paper.

How shall I tell you about the stimulation of knowing about everything that's happening, of finding out about THINGS, of meeting the people who are really important on campus and in positions connected with the university, and of meeting the even more interesting unimportant people, unimportant because they are too radical to make the necessary compromises.

Lets face it, I can't tell you what I would, so with a final double sense of frustration and achievement, I will just thank you for the privilege of being editor this year, and send my typewriter back to the Underwood renting agency.

Maybe she likes to go OUT for dinner now and then. On Sunday, for instance. She's been hitting the books all afternoon — it's 5:30 — she wants a change of scene — she wants some comfortable, relaxing place — good conversation, fine food. So you take her to Scott's, because it's got that terrific buffet dinner, and you can have as many helpings as you like for no extra charge.

And Scott's has ATMOSPHERE. You know — soft lights, white linen, pleasant, efficient waitresses. She's impressed, of course, because the food's excellent — the surroundings just right. YOU'RE impressed too. Scott's is so close — just over at Bloor and Yonge — and that tremendous food is so reasonably priced! It's remarkable! She'll want to go back again and again. So will you.

Not With a Bang, But a Whimper

After 88 issues, The Varsity and its editors bid you farewell for this year. In the pages of this, the 75th volume of The Varsity, we have tried to present to you, the reader, a paper that would serve the dual function of being both informative and stimulating.

We do not know how well we have succeeded, but we have tried. During the year we have presented a 48-page anniversary issue that reviewed the history of both the university and the paper. We have drawn your attention to such random topics as the problem of abortion and the need for social service workers, the dilemma of higher education and the significance of national cat week.

To this disunified campus, divided along such lines as faculty, religion, and social standing, we have tried to present a varied diet in which all alike might find something of interest and value. But we have had some prejudices: we believe that students should be made to face the issues that abound in this troubled world; that a paper should not be bound by outmoded and shopworn taboos of a century ago when discussion of an issue is needed.

The value of a paper such as The Varsity in an academic community may be considerable, and depends upon its ability to put before the students the events and issues about which they should be informed as educated citizens. But the paper also has the responsibility of providing at least a modicum of leadership.

All this we have attempted to do this year. We hope that our efforts have been taken in the same sincerity in which they were offered and we wish the staff and editor of next year's paper luck in their task of continuing and improving the vital traditions of this paper.

We express, on behalf of ourselves, and — we feel — on behalf of the whole university, our deep appreciation to the many staffers who have worked on this year's Varsity. We thank the SAC for our budget, and for providing an ubiquitous object of criticism. We thank our printers, the SAC staff, the campus publicity men, the letter writers, the critics . . .

And, most of all, as the lights in The Varsity office dim for the last time, we thank you, the reader, for the privilege of presenting you with this 75th volume of the Varsity.

it's called the students council

Varsity editors make a habit of going to SAC meetings. They have to. This is perhaps how they come to be unanimously discouraged with the organization.

The fact is that the SAC as it stands now and as it has operated in the last few years is nowhere near being a "student government" or even a representative student body. It is both custom and administration-ridden.

What has the SAC done this year? They met twice a month for a couple of hours, operated the same week-ends as the year before, administered the Blue and White, handled debates slightly better than usual, interfered with The Varsity and Torontonensis, lost money on the Handbook, operated a housing service, a book exchange, and a student loan service. All these things have been done other years in almost exactly the same manner and merely required the rubber stamp of the SAC.

The SAC has done a few things this year. They have almost got themselves a bulletin board after a year of dicking with the administration. They have called themselves the host committee. They have planned to take over UC's book show and call it the AVR. They have made a feeble attempt at getting later library hours. And they have left NFCUS. That's new all right.

At this point you'll say what do you want the SAC to do anyway? We want them to be more than civil servants, that's what. We want them to be real leaders in student affairs. We want them not to pass the contract for blazers automatically on to Wilson's before finding out that they could get them at a ten-dollar saving at some other firm. We want them to be informed of each matter of business before it comes up, starting at the beginning of the year to be informed about the running of the council. We want them to be prepared to state their own opinion or the opinion of their faculty. We want them to consult the student by referendums on issues of major importance, to campaign actively for anything that would help students, to be prepared to try to settle any student problems which appear even in the face of opposition from the administration. We want them to make sure that student wishes are not contraried simply because the permanent employees of the SAC know the ropes better than they do.

And you, the individual student, we want you to make a big noise if your representative falls down in this. As the saying goes it is not a right only, but a duty.

OUR READERS WRITE:

We Want To Be Entertained

Editor, The Varsity:

I thank Mike Pengeley for his frank appraisal of the U. of T. Orchestra and Chorus. It is obvious that neither group suffers from any lack of ability or talent; but, rather, the performances need a touch of showmanship.

As Mr. Pengeley suggests, the university audience wishes to be entertained!

Secondly, before I close, let me add my congratulations to the others offered to Boyd Neel and the Hart House Orchestra for their splendid series of concerts, presented during the last few months.

I urge the student body and friends of the university to give their full support to the orchestra's expansion.

Trusting in this, I look forward to next fall and to an even more successful season for the Orchestra Associates.

A. Rowe, U.C. I.

Referendum?

Editor, The Varsity:

NFCUS stands for something above local interests. But SAC refuses to accept that there are any interests broader, or more noble than those of U of T. If the students of Toronto want to be provincial I think that they should have the right to make the decision for themselves in a general referendum.

Retiring Chiefs	Bob Brown, Wendy Michener

before we leave...

For those who are only a few exams and two months away from graduating from this university, the last few days of this term must be a time for some sentimental or critical reflections.

Before descending into the grey fog of forced learning that awaits us all in the next few weeks, each prospective graduate must ask himself: Has it been worth it? What have I gained from this university?

The answers to both these questions must depend primarily on the individual. Education and profit are here for those who are willing to find them: the records of the past attest to this. But — as with anything worthwhile — some initiative and application must be shown by the individual student.

If you now lack an education, it is not the fault of dull professors or a poor educational system: you alone are to blame.

The world that awaits us beyond the secluded sanctums of the university may seem foreign to the spirit of a university.

But if the graduate can take with him a part of the habits and the environment of this campus, the dichotomy between this university and the cold cruel world may not seem so great. The peculiar mixture of objectivity and idealism that is the essential feature of a good university can also serve the individual in society: it should not be laid away with the sheepskin in the closet.

Readers Squabbled Often On Love, Lucy, Library

By CELIA SCHACHTER
Varsity Staff Reporter

Phrases ranging from philosophical verbosity to clipped witicism sprinkled the unprecedented flood of letters to the editor of The Varsity this year. From the first issue in September, till now, over 300 letters have been received from various students, setting forth their opinions on all possible subjects. The response of the students to current issues through The Varsity's mailbag shows that students still maintain an intelligent awareness of the world outside of the library and the KCR. It is also somewhat flattering to the paper; for although many letters have been critical of The Varsity, the large response has shown that the paper is being read.

The issues on which the most letters have been received were: the suspension of the Hart House Orchestra Sunday Concert, Billy Graham, the expulsion of Autherine Lucy from the University of Alabama, and the editorial on the Woman's View.

The first major issue was the suspension of the Sunday night concert of the Hart House Orchestra due to the Lord's Day Alliance Act. Opinions on this issue were diverse. One letter commented:

"It is a sorry spectacle to see officials of a university institution prostrate themselves before a self-appointed morality squad of puritan imbeciles";

Billy Graham aroused as much discussion here as he did throughout the rest of the world. While one person called him a plumber, another replied that without plumbers many artists would long since have died because of unsanitary conditions.

In the Negro segregation issue at the University of Alabama, many students felt that the S.A.C. should send a telegram of encouragement or an offer of a scholarship to Autherine Lucy. An unusual unanimity appeared in that all were agreed Negro segregation is in direct opposition to democracy and freedom. One letter asked:

"May one group suppress another under their laws only because of a different colour?"

Various letters were received either for or against fraternities and initiations, prompted by a Varsity editorial on the subject. Many of the initiates were in favor and praised it as "great fun."

One letter criticized The Varsity for "trying very hard to become the Flash of campus newspapers." It referred to the articles on homosexuals on Philosopher's Walk, on Menstruation, and on the Sex in Fraternities story.

But the Letter of the Year is one which contains five short words on the editorial on Menstruation:

"Madam: have you tried Anu- con?"

Get Lost, Billy Graham

Debates — Concl

By BERNIE SINGER

Get lost Billy Graham! Canada should have joined the American Revolution! It's a shame Guy Fawkes bungled his job! Geneva was not another Munich! There is a Canadian culture!

These are the conclusions of some of the debates held at the U of T this year. Many other regime-rocking decisions were made at debates this year. It was declared that Martin Luther is not deplorable, that Vic is not Victorian, and that trade unions are not too powerful.

On topics of the world, Varsity debaters decided that absolutism is not the answer to the problems of government in France, that the free world and the enslaved world were sincere in seeking peace at Geneva, that the 49th parallel boundary of the U.S. and Canada should have been scrapped even before it was decided upon, and that French Canada should not be assimilated.

The debates at individual colleges reflected some of their attitudes. Besides pronouncing themselves not Victorian, and lamenting censorship of the printed word, Vic men boasted the sexiest coeds on the campus but deplored the girls' not putting their attributes to better practical use.

The engineers defeated the doctrine of polite torture of freshmen, on the debating floor, in favor of a constructive initiation — immense change from their mob riot spirit of last year. UC in typical stout fashion decided that the spirit of UC should not be uncorked.

Debates among the colleges were undistinguished, the Meds (against POI) being unable to decide if suicide is justifiable. St. Hilda's battle with UC resulted in the startling conclusion that the government should not subsidize student marriages.

How fared Toronto debaters with other colleges? The UTDU debaters in the U.S. came in twenty-first in competition with fifty-two other debating teams. When Moishe Reiter and Clyde Batten debated outside of Toronto in Windsor, Detroit, Chicago and Madison, they won two debates while no decisions were given on their others.

Igloo Is Too Cold, Burns Up But Other Residences Grow

By A. JAMES

The most widely publicized residence on the campus this year was the Winter Carnival Igloo. Since its destruction, attention has turned to more permanent buildings being planned and in process of development.

The Igloo was built in January — two engineers lived in it for 24 hours to publicize the Carnival. The snow and board structure was gutted by an unknown arsonist after the Carnival.

Construction will begin in April for a one million dollar residence to accommodate one hundred men at St. Michael's College. The building will be L-shaped, facing St. Mary Street and the Victoria College residence.

When the new residence is completed in September of next year, Elmsley House will be torn down in keeping with the St. Michael's policy of replacing the old homes which now serve as residences on the campus. Concerning future plans, Father Lavery, Registrar of St. Michael's, said "Further plans will likely concern classroom building to look after the expected increase in registration."

The new addition to Mary Hall, the women's residence of St. Michael's, should be ready for occupancy next September. A chapel and modern residence accommodation for one hundred people are being erected at a cost of $700,000.

Trinity College has also enlarged its residence with a $250,000 addition to the north wing which will house forty-four men. Mr. G. M. Mudge, Bursar of Trinity, said that the next building to be erected will probably provide more residence space in the north-west corner of the college building.

"We would like to increase our registration and so increase our proportion of residence students," he said, "But we are very close to using our physical facilities to the limit." Further expansion at Trinity will probably necessitate a general increase of staff, office space and classroom facilities.

Victoria College is now in its second year of a three year programme of rejuvenation. Fluorescent lighting has been installed throughout the building and a former tuck shop in the basement has been converted into a language laboratory. Record players and tape recorders are available for class work and individual study.

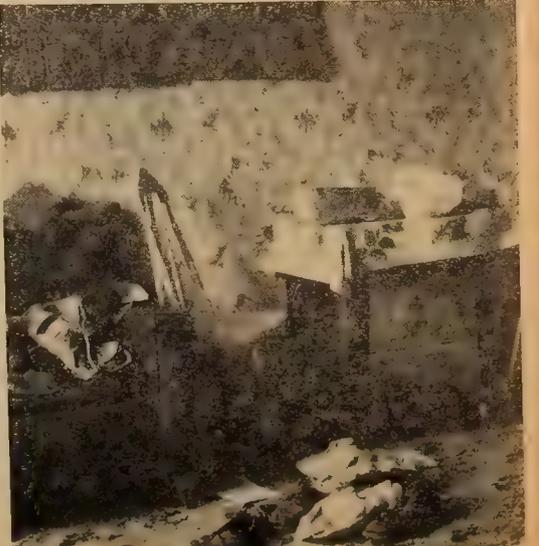

The Accounting Department and Graduate records are now housed in a building at 85 Charles Street which was purchased and redecorated last summer.

At the same time the Victoria College Library was altered to provide more office space and improve the catalogue room. The newest building on the Victoria College campus is Wymilwood, the "Vic Union," constructed in 1952 at a cost of $250,000.

The Connault Laboratories have been enlarged through the addition of a storage building and the construction of a new Polio Virus Laboratory in the Dufferin Division.

Mr. F. J. Hastie, Assistant Superintendent, said that the university had also been occupied with conversion to 60 cycle. Now being considered is a tentative plan to floodlight Varsity Stadium.

Squalor and Poverty

This is the "home" of a married couple, both students at Toronto. Conditions are hardly the best, as stale food litters the table, and articles of clothing are strewn about the floor. The "home" is located in a cheap rooming house near the campus.

Big Year For Campus Politics —Mud Flies In All Directions

Some students thought that politics on campus this year were dirty.

Most of their indignation was directed at the Mock Parliament, held in the Ontario Legislature in January.

The Mock Parliament is a student-run imitation of the Federal House of Commons. Students vote by party, and seats are assigned to the parties on the basis of their student support.

Dispute about the Parliament, revived this year after a two year lapse, started before Christmas, and continued to the end of sittings.

The Tories were censured for their opposition tactics. A mimeographed document, asking for discipline, and saying, "remember, embarrass the government," guided the PC members' actions in the Parliament. The document was almost seized by force by the PC leader, Ted Rogers, from the CCF leader, Alan Millard, and a Varsity reporter, who had been given a copy. The PC's, and especially Rogers, were condemned by students, and by the organizers of the Parliament (the President and Secretary of the Political Economy Club), for their "irresponsible attitude."

Only one bill, abolishing capital punishment, was passed in the three day sitting. The first session debated the Speech from the Throne for two hours, attacking the Liberals and the Liberals' policy; the third session was prevented by a Conservative filibuster from passing a bill to abolish corporal punishment.

Observers of the Parliament came away "disgusted" and "disillusioned."

"The end result is not to increase student interest, but to strengthen the widespread aversion to campus politics," wrote one student.

Earlier, dispute had arisen over who would govern.

The Conservatives, with 42 seats in the November elections, automatically assumed they would be the government.

A working agreement between the Liberals, with 30 seats, and the CCF with 19 seats, enabled the Liberals to bid for power. The Communists—the LPP—got seven seats in the elections.

After two weeks of squabble on whether or not it was right for a "coalition" (as the Conservatives termed the agreement) to govern, Governor General E. A. MacDonald asked the Liberals to govern.

The political clubs on campus have "signally failed" in their duty to discuss broad issues of freedom and democracy, President Smith said in his opening speech. However:

The Conservatives were in their own words, "best-organized and most lively party on campus this year."

Last week, 325 party members and other students heard the national PC leader, George Drew, give a speech on the decline of Parliamentary freedom at Victoria.

In the fall, National President George Hees spoke to the party in Hart House.

The Liberals, this week, entertained Canada's Minister for External Affairs, Lester Pearson.

In the fall, they heard a campaign in the Spadina by-election, Sam Godfrey, and his campaign Manager, Senator David Croll.

The CCF had two meetings with Ontario CCF leader Donald MacDonald.

They also had a meeting with their national leader, M. J. Coidwell.

Mockery of Parliament?

Local Campus Publications Flourish In Eventful Year

MAUREEN MACPHERSON

This has been a flourishing year for the local campus publications.

The Strand, Vic's weekly publication, more than doubled its circulation (from 300 to 650) as a result of a budget increase of $175 and the financial aid provided by the inclusion of a few advertisements. It concentrated on news items of general student interest written in a breezy style.

The Anarchist continued publishing its unorthodox verbosity in the dark catacombs of Trinity while the U.C. Gargoyle had its most successful year yet.

Another success was Toke Oike, the voice of the engineers. It published more issues than ever.

The Mike, a publication of St. Michael's College, overhauled its policy, and a more definite distinction was made between what is editorial and what is news. This resulted in an overall improvement.

Unfortunately two papers did not appear this year. Campus Comment seems to have gone under, while the Hart House Bulletin, a publicity organ for the house, ceased publication after a few issues last fall.

The Undergrad, which is the second U.C. publication, had two editors this year for the first time in its history. Another new feature of the literary magazine is the publication of two issues, the first of which appeared before Christmas. The second is awaited with eager anticipation.

CUP

Runneth-Out

By CAROL HOFFMAN
Varsity CUP Editor

At the beginning of the year, we expressed our views on CUP, its purpose and its functions. Its raison d'être, we said, was to supply news coverage, for local, national, and international events — from panty raids to national conferences. Through CUP we hoped to give the student something of a national consciousness by telling him what went on in the rest of his country.

Well, there've been three national conferences this year — and plenty of panty raids too. In fact, this year, as usual, CUP has been teeming with news. There was always a perennial topic, through both its conference and its individual members: Peter Martin, of the U of T, was elected NFCUS president this year. At the conference, we were told, nearly all the Toronto proposals were implemented. Various universities — UNB and UBC, to name two — considered dropping out of NFCUS, and McGill considered coming back in.

The WUS conference at Saskatoon saw President Smith appointed the national president for this year. And the third conference of the year, the Canadian University Press conference at Quebec, brought up a topic of ever absorbing interest — at least to journalists. Controversy over freedom of the press raged across the country. How much censorship should a university paper have? The epithet of "the vilest rag" was hurled at The Ulysseye, which held top spot on the "freedom list." The Varsity ranked seventeenth in the same list.

One of the most absorbing topics of the year, for university papers both in the States and in Canada, was the issue of segregation. Early in the fall, Duke University announced successful integration of three negro students. However, later that year, riots raged at Duke, when university authorities refused to allow a nearby "mixed" college to be officially invited to Duke. Editorials and letters to the editor, across the States came out strongly for or against the admission of Negro students into "white" universities. This was but a preview of what was yet to come, for the furor over the historic case of Autherine Lucy has not yet died down. The issue, which called forth both the latent idealism and the latent prejudice of students across the country, both in extreme form, affected Canadian students as well. NFCUS sent a telegram of support to Miss Lucy. McGill students and Manitoba ones separately offered their encouragement.

Freshmen initiations always make the news in CUP in the fall — this year there were the usual damaged halls, mock trials, and dunkings. As well, UBC freshies had their skirts slashed—the boys thought they were too tight.

Vandalism made its appearance this year. The most astounding case was that of the bull, locked for the night in MacDonald Hall, Guelph. Queen's University for a while seemed to be in the grip of student hoodlums. The Stadium was painted, Western and Toronto stadiums were painted by Queens, and the Toronto goalposts were stolen and then returned — by Queens. The incidents culminated with the "football riot" at Queen's where some students were injured. After this, drinking was banned at Queen's games.

Panty raids, and virgin births, murders and suicides, all these found their way into CUP this year. Despite the McGill streetcar riots and The Queen's invasion of the States, the year was really quite quiet — for students, that is. In fact we'd say that serious issues, such as segregation and national unions, prejudice and student government, occupied students' minds as much as gags and high jinks. This year there was generally less preoccupation with sex, with a few minor exceptions, although rowdiness seemed to increase. In fact, the student viewpoint seems to be about the same all across Canada — mature in considering some issues, as irresponsible as an adolescent's in considering others.

Mud, Snow -- And Igloos

Toronto's Second Winter Carnival went ahead in January, despite a bare, muddy campus.

At Caledon Hills Farms, there was snow, and competitions, and a queen, and three hundred spectators.

Two engineers won a contest on why they wanted to live in an igloo for twenty-four hours. Their prize — a twenty-four stay in an igloo. The igloo was wood-framed and covered with snow shavings from Riverdale Arena. The two students, John Sanderson and Barry Mitchell, also got a ten pound carp and a bottle of beer ("later used to bribe a demonstrator") they reported.

The igloo burned down after the Carnival. Nobody knows how. Sylvia Kilu (II Pharm) was named Queen of the Carnival over twelve other contestants, for her "ruggedness plus good looks." All faculties and colleges entered candidates in the contest.

Forestry won the Carnival's fox pelt award, for its outstanding performances in snowshoeing, skiing, wood chopping, and orienteering. Several of the winning foresters had slept outside, in ter-degree weather, the night before the competition.

Two chariot races were held on campus before the Carnival — one, the Engineer's annual event, the other, an all-faculty event for the Carnival.

As well, a parade for the carnival tried to tour the main campus — but got turned back by a university policeman at the gate, who had received specific instructions that the parade not be admitted.

Campus $ Campaigns Fall Short Blood, Treasure Van Succeed

Are Toronto students stingy, broke, or just apathetic?

Campaign organizers for SHARE and the Red Feather drive wondered this year as they reviewed their shattered quotas.

Neither campaign reached its quota. Red Feather ended with only a half of its $5,000 goal collected. SHARE, World University Service's fund raising arm on campus, ended a month later, with just a shade over two-thirds its $7500 objective.

On the bright side, two new projects were born here since September: one proposed that a series of lectures and seminars be given by the University, to

By MICHAEL CASSIDY
Varsity Asst News Editor

help New Canadians and visiting foreign students understand Canada; the other was a plan to organize student energy to help under-privileged children.

Students flocked en masses to buy foreign goods from India, Africa (and the Canadian Indians) at WUSC's Treasure Van, a truck which tours Canadian universities selling, and making money to help foreign students and universities.

And the university's blood drive came within thirty-four pints of its 1500 pint aim.

The Red Feather campaign, inexplicably, proved the greatest flop. Despite a croquet game on the front campus, a last-day slogan of "Close the Gap", and a crowded Convocation Hall jazz concert by Cal Jackson, his quartet, and student talent, the campaign failed to reach $2,500.

The SHARE campaign had a similar if not so awful fate.

Brightest feature of this three-week long campaign were the auctions. Girls, girls, girls, in ones and in pairs, the UC speaker's chair, the head of John the Baptist, Lieutenant Governor Breithaupt's personal parking sign — all went on the block.

The nurses offered a date to any engineer who gave two bucks or more to the SHARE drive.

Wycliffe and Emmanuel eventually won the campaign. 67.4% of the objective — a bit over five thousand dollars — was collected.

"The university should be conscious of the needs of the community," said a group of Vic students this fall.

They proposed an active welfare committee, to direct students in social service.

TV, Concerts, Arts In HH Heavy Year

By COLIN GRAHAM

What happened at Hart House this year? In September, J. E. Bickersteth returned: the man who for 25 years was Warden of Hart House and whose intellectual leadership was influential in moulding many of the men who are now helping to mould Canada.

In March, Warden McCulley began his Friday night program "Graphic," over 28 TV stations, to show Canada through her personalities.

Between September and March there were concerts: Glee Club, String Orchestra, Sunday Evening, 5 O'Clock, Noon Hour and Quartet concerts. There were art exhibitions, record hours, debates, and the largest chess simul ever held in North America.

The series of Sunday Church Services in the Great Hall arranged by the Rev. Jim Cunningham, Chaplain to Hart House, was the more dramatic aspect of the work which he quietly did every day.

Keen competition for membership on Hart House Committees wound up the year. Next year for the new committee members, said Warden McCulley, will mean "some hard work, but it also means picking out some of the best traditions, thoughts and purposes of the University."

Go Semi-Pro

Traditionally the most amateur of all productions in Hart House Theatre, this year's College Show series stepped slightly out of character and tried a new, semi-professional look. Dentantics enjoyed a swiftly-spread rumour that their show was to serve as the prototype for a TV series; Skule Nite '56, or at least their kick line, was good enough to qualify as a travelling show, though it went only to the McGill Winter Carnival; and the Vic Bob, slightly the dulled for script ballast, did its greatest good in pointing up the sad waste of fine talent in the cast.

Taken in order, the three shows seemed to follow a definite pattern, developing from a straight "book" show, the Vic Bob, through a semi-book affair, Dentantics, to the "bitter end", Skule Nite, the Engineers' effort. The men from Skule threw style to the winds, concentrated on campus for the bulk of their material, took a few strides off-campus to visit a hillbilly jailhouse and Caesar's court, then packaged everything into one tight little bundle that never stopped popping open. Dentantics, exploiting a clever "Shakespearean characters out of work" gimmick to connect a sequence of satires on movies and TV, was a more subtle show, a little finer in tone and refined in humour than was Skule Nite.

Through the last three years the two professional faculty shows have been built around the same stars and, in both cases, by the same writers and directors. Next fall though, Skule will have no Jim Vasoff or Bob Hill to write, produce, direct and star in Skule Nite '56. Dentantics will be missing Dave Engel, the gifted comic who has carried the show almost singlehanded in the past. Going out into the cruel world with him are Sid Kirson, his straight man and writer Sid Golden. What they leave behind suggest problems for next year's production staff.

Writing isn't likely to be too much of a worry for the Engineers in '56. Several lower classmen have already proven themselves in working on this year's script, but comics to play their lines may be harder to find. The Dentistry people have their own problem, but it's the reverse of the Skulemen's. Dentantics has at least one man to build a show around — Jerry Gray, the folk-song minstrel whose filler act stopped the show in '55, will be back and probably available — but more top-notch writers aren't kicking around in the Huron Street hovel.

Highs Higher

Campus drama went downright odd this year, with critics singing the praises of the college's excursions into experimental theatre, and undergraduate directors and producers donning a hurt and bewildered look for the remainder of the season. In short, nothing paid.

Five reasonably competent productions of this season might be classed as "experimental theatre," though the novelty of two of them has worn off. In fact, in the case of the UC Players' Guild production, the shine had worn off too. R.U.R., theatrically speaking, was recently enough written (20's) to be an anachronism. This Capek robot-romp is a theatrical milestone, honest, and I'm glad that the guild, bless it, was generous enough to produce it for us.

Vic's and Trinity's contributions were also significant, and old enough and new enough (respectively) to appeal to discriminating Torontonians. Peer Gynt and Brecht's Mother Courage are two records of spiritual pilgrimage, both revolutionary for their day. Whitaker's Peer was too effete, but in the Brecht play (directed by Joseph Furst) we were given a gem of a production, polished to near-perfection by the superb performance of Juliana Gianelli in the title role. I hope this sincere praise makes the producers feel better.

Robert Gill, with his usual eclecticism, brought everything from baseball bats to bodkins onto the Hart House stage. The ultra-modern Troublemakers (with Leon Major subbing as director) was not altogether a success, while the season-closing Hamlet was too cloying and wooden to be much more than a quick peek at the plot. Candida helped to prove that Shaw is always welcome on the campus.

So now, comes the end of the year — and what? It seems to have been proved that no undergraduate group can make money in Hart House Theatre. The function of the college drama society is still hotly debated, but at least these groups should be given the chance to present experimental theatre with modern stage-facilities — they should be given every possible encouragement to do so. The problem of Hart House rental might be looked at again, and club executives might try to discover the willingness of the professional theatre-type to discuss or demonstrate his art or craft. As always, the panaceas resolved themselves into initiative and reluctance to accept authority with an unreasoning trust. But these qualities will be missing on the campus next year. Our graduating class (that is, my graduating class) will be gone.

Neil Ralston

tears, idle tears

Real Canadian Theatre

Patricia Joudry's Teach Me How To Cry, this year's University Alumnae Dramatic Club presentation, is a clever, though heavy-handed piece of modern theatre. "Modern" in one of the better senses of the word, in that it utilizes the methods of split-level staging and split-second, non-representational emotional exchanges. And if the characters, each wandering in his own little Waste Land, are too much bitterly aware of their individual frustrations, we can't really blame them. After all, they're North Americans.

Miss Joudry's protagonists and theme almost justify the incoherent emotionality that pervades the play. Her study of self-integration cannot be described as subtle, but for another the strength and insight for self-integration cannot be described as subtle, but for a first stage play it is amazingly effective. The author has been well served by director Leon Major — to call him "promising" seems a little inadequate by now — and a cast with almost uniformly professional a polish.

Major's staging has neatly avoided a sense of moony introspection, scene succeeding on scene with a satisfying rapidity, from multi-purpose plateau to one (and occasionally both) of the two downstage domestic locales. An extensive use of slow dims tended to blunt this purpose for the sake of dramatic tableaux (just the things for production shots) that might easily have been dispensed with.

The play's suggestion of fits-and-starts mental growth, however, was not seriously impaired; principally responsible (among those on stage) for the play's impact carrying over into the production is Suzanne Finlay, who plays the awakening high school girl, Melinda Grant. Her querulous uncertainty could be seen and felt deepening into a new confidence. Lee Lawrence as her beau Will, was perhaps too rough-hewn for the sensitivity I had always associated with the part. His at first returned nature seemed more the product of experience than of distrust of the unknown, and I was glad to see him drop his early attempts to imitate the vocal and physical mannerisms of the adolescent.

The others in the cast presented themselves as test cases without losing their places as inter-relating minds, which is what I suppose they were supposed to do. Best of them was Phyllis Malcolm Stewart as Melinda's escapist mother, shrinking into herself to avoid the clutches of past and present. Expertly done, like most of the production.

movies reviewed

...In The Dark

In spite of the audience encroachments of television, movies this (university) year, have been if not better than ever at least as good as ever. Some of them were worth skipping lectures for.

Perhaps the most significant things to be added to our movie diet were two hauntingly beautiful films from Japan, Ugetsu and Gate of Hell. And from Sweden came Arne Sucksdorff's Great Adventure, a really rare and memorable experience.

Even though we are not seeing any more Miracle In Milan's or Bicycle Thief's, from Italy, we may (or may not) look forward to the lavish epic oriental splendour of Anglo-Franco-Italo-American productions of Heaven of Troy, etc. What has happened to De Sica's Umberto D? Who is holding it back — the Lord's Day Alliance, the Loyal Daughters, ... who?

We had much that was musical too: Guys and Dolls was fine, Kismet uneven, Tender Trap very enjoyable. Hollywood made some sincere attempts to tackle serious material, with Rebel Without A Cause and Trial. Both of these fell flat when they lapsed into an oversimplification of the problems involved.

France sent Fernandel and a very witty and candid Sheep. We saw Tati as the gawky Hulot. We haven't seen it yet, but we hear that Lady Killers is a comedy with "pleasing original" and "gruesome overtones," and with Guinness at his best. We saw too, Guinness in The Prisoner. Animal Farm was disappointing for those who expected something in the UPA idiom.

Night of the Hunter contained some very fine moments but on the whole was burdened by a pretentious artsy-craftyness. In spots it was tragically funny. We welcomed back, Henry Fonda in Mr. Roberts. He underplayed (as always) and Cagney, perhaps overplayed.

Magnani was magnificent in Rose Tattoo — perhaps too much so for the good of the movie. It seemed to be held back by a coldness and artificiality (Tennessee Williams?), in spite of Magnani.

Israel sent us Hill 24 Doesn't Answer, an ambitious and moving effort. We are awaiting with anticipation, Israel's release of Tale of a Taxi. Also awaiting: De Sica's Umberto D, Austria's Don Giovanni, Clement Garsais, War and Peace, and Mother, (Donkio — USSR) and Fernandel's Don Juan.

art at vic

Jack Bechtel, teacher at the Doon School of Fine Arts, has an exhibit at Vic's Alumni Hall, at the moment. The landscapes have obviously been done in the Doon countryside, but there is only one painting, and there are few influences to suggest his trip to Mexico in 1954.

The exhibit, superficially attractive, is disappointing. Mr. Bechtel's interest in light used for dramatic purposes leaves me unmoved. His compositions are often carefully balanced around a central area where there is nothing. The well-thought-out quiet colour schemes, the sure technique of the teacher, and a vocabulary of happy gimmicks have made these paintings pleasant, but they are only shallowly satisfactory.

Jack Bechtel is one of the four Canadian artists that have been exhibited at Victoria this year. Isabel McLaughlin, a graduate of the Ontario College of Art had a series of her whimsical botanical studies, and John Alfson, now teaching at OCA, had an exhibit of sombre representational painting. An attempt to include the third major art form, architecture, by a series of American photographs and School of Architecture models proved a failure — an incoherent exhibit. The most exciting and controversial show was that of Rowel Bowles — paintings with vigorous and messy streaks of oils in rocketing colours.

Give Me Liberty Or ...?

By NEIL RALSTON

Simon and Schuster could hardly have picked on a better time to publish Nikos Kazantzaki's Freedom or Death, with its topical implicit comment upon present British troubles in Cyprus. Here the time and the place are different - Crete (or its Greek inhabitants) rebelling against Turkish rule somewhere around the turn of the century, but the widely differing viewpoints presented, and the emotional biases that are recognized, strike a very familiar chord for anyone with an eye to contemporary affairs.

The Cretans are undoubtedly in the right, historically and politically speaking, yet Mr. Kazantzaki manages somehow to convince us that they should never have won their freedom. This he does by a sort of Rupert Brooke attitude to war - as a purifying element in human affairs, especially when the cause happens to be just.

Captain Michales, the novel's hero, is the sort of man one dislikes at sight, incapable of sustained argument on any subject but women, and capable of the most appallingly national belligerence and pouty petulance. But he dies with the book's slogan-title on his lips, so apparently this makes up for everything. Or does the author really admire his character throughout? A horrible thought.

Castrations and similar mutilations, all terribly symbolic, abound, as does the cry, "I did it for Crete." Presumably other people said "I did it for Turkey," but few of them are mentioned. The lives of the main people doing things for Crete are traced from horror to whole to horror, people now carrying secret papers and now stirring up dissent among those who seem strangely unwilling to revolt.

Our friend the hero does not even have the saving grace of utilitarianism. A completely hopeless revolt he sees as a magnificent gesture, and when it involves the death of thousands of innocent he exults in the meaning(?) of their death. And when the revolt brings death upon himself, he encounters that death as a bride, fiercely and proudly and more than a little mysteriously. All the reasons lie shrouded in poetic miasma.

The really shaking thing about the book is that it is very well written, with a shuddering impact that leaves one completely convinced until the irrationality of it all is felt. "Fight for freedom" has been one of man's favourite pursuits since not even man known when. If the Druids resisted invasion, it was probably on grounds something like this. But to relate this abstract concept with the envy and xenophobia that inspired both Turk and Greek to incredible acts over more than five hundred years - that relation is surely a degradation of fundamental human values.

Freedom or Death, though it ought to be ennobling, is really completely the reverse. In its glorification of jack-booted brutality, it almost imperceptibly turns values inside out. And its magnificent narrative method makes it all, all too easy to swallow.

STRAY LEAVES

Barker's Milton Milton's Thought

The University of Toronto Press has just published a second printing of Professor A. E. Barker's Milton and the Puritan Dilemma (at $7.95) - and people ought to know about it. For a systematic study of Milton's thought, the work has few equals, and anyone who wants to get through a Milton course and to Hell with the expense could hardly make a better buy.

The emphasis is upon the Miltonic (and, of course, Puritan) views of the liberty of the individual in society, views constantly altered by the impact of events from Revolution onwards. Mainly through Milton's prose writing, Prof. Barker shows the great poet's true position as the mirror and crystallizer of the thought of his time. Milton is at once acted upon by contemporary opinion of the general, and the personal facts of marriage and blindness.

Two All-Musical Lives

By ERWIN BIENER

There are hardly two characters as much divergent in their temperamental, ideal and artistic outlook than Bruckner and Mahler. Born 36 years apart, they spent their formative years in eras as well as environments entirely antithetical for the most part, similar to warrant a comparative study. A new double biography (by H. F. Redlich, Pub., Dent, $1.75) sympathetically deals with the men and their settings.

Bruckner, the awkward inhibited semi-pietistic provincial schoolmaster, Mahler, the mystically poetic, intellectually precocious young conductor, lived at a most critical juncture of musical development.

Influenced by Liszt and Berlioz, orchestral and especially the symphonic media underwent a most thorough formal and structural transformation. Classical abstraction was superseded by picturesque programmaticism. This orchestral colouration took on the heavy-weight opulence of romantic sonorities. The next step inevitably led to Wagner's Gesamtkunstwerk which brought the romantic symphony into the opera.

Apart from Brahms and Chaikovsky, it fell to Bruckner and Mahler to rescue the symphony from being swallowed up in the Wagnerian music drama. From this historical point of view, Mr. Redlich's double presentation of the two composers seems to be entirely justified.

The author, rather than contrasting these symphonists, takes up his analysis from the biographical, historical, musical and even psycho-analytical positions.

Undoubtedly Mr. Redlich's historical insights provide the most interesting material for the artistic development of the two masters. Bruckner's musicality confirmed allegiance to the polyphonic masters of the Middle-Ages as well as Palestrina strongly corroborates Mr. Redlich's contention that "his artistic personality seems to link him with the age of the Renaissance and the Baroque era rather than with the epoch of Liszt and Wagner." No wonder that Bruckner's style combined with the unusual length of his symphonies were rather frowned upon by sophisticated contemporaries, especially by Brahms who called them

"Symphonic Boa Constrictors."

Mahler, on the other hand, integrated in his almost expressionistically orchestrated symphonies the melodious elements of the romantic song-cycles. Our better understanding of his masterworks depends considerably on both literary and philosophical frames of reference which Mr. Redlich is not hesitant to present at greater length.

The psychoanalytic snapshots developed by Mr. Redlich should serve as reference for character studies rather than a pass-key to psycho-aesthetical parlor games.

Bulletin Board Coming Soon May be Up by End of March

The word has it that the much-publicized SAC Bulletin Board will be up in all its glory by March 21st.

Since November 10th, when the Varsity headlines read "Erection of Board Delayed—Max Ditz Own Postholes", the board has been expected "any time". The suggestion was first brought up at the SAC meeting of October 26th, and as the details began to take shape the board was to be a six foot structure of steel, with blue and white trim to attract attention.

At present, our spies tell us that the controversial structure is in Varsity Arena, being painted, in readiness for its debut

National Tabloid Advocated

Hamilton: (CUP) — A national student paper will probably be published next year in Toronto by the Canadian University Press.

Gord Vichert, editor of the executive board of the CUP, the McMaster Silhouette, said that the results of a cross-Canada survey of the 24 student newspapers that are members of CUP indicated that the project would go through. The paper would be the first national paper ever published in Canada.

The paper, if published, would be an eight-page tabloid with a probable circulation of over 40,000. It would contain articles in both English and French, and would be published under the control of Canadian student editors. It would be printed immediately after the next CUP conference, to be held in Toronto the last week in December.

It will be distributed on all Canadian campuses in early January of 1957.

The project, first put forward by The Varsity, was approved in principle at last year's CUP conference in Quebec City. The paper in charge of publication for the coming term would be The Varsity, which is also the host paper for the next conference.

If the idea should prove successful, the project will be continued at future conferences, with a "publisher paper" being elected every year. The costs of the paper will be borne by the CUP papers themselves.

Varsity Co-Editor Bob Brown estimated the cost of the new newspaper — yet unnamed, would be below $10.00 per thousand copies.

Articles to be contained in the paper include reports on the CUP conference itself, editorials and articles on various topics affecting the Canadian student, and news stories of national interest.

"The paper will express no definite point of view," said Co-Editor Brown, "but will attempt to put forward a variety of opinions on any subject of national concern."

Vichert termed publication of the paper "almost assured." He said that while all papers had not yet voted on the CUP referendum, all replies received so far had been favourable.

Varsity Co-Editor Wendy Michener said that the paper was the first real attempt at a national newspaper in Canada. NFCUS had talked of such a project for some time, she said, but no action had ever been taken.

"It will be a medium for presenting an all-Canadian viewpoint," she stated.

EAC At A Glance

The External Affairs Committee last Wednesday, besides electing the new committee chairman:

—passed the motion that EAC reps make personal contact with all foreign students at their college;

—learned that the U of T is a large and impersonal institution; —applauded six committee reports loudly and their chairmen;

—laughed when the Chairman said "Ask questions; I don't know the answers";

—were told that the EAC cannot hear the EAC Executive Committee minutes; —smiled when former NFCUS Co-chairman B. Smyth gave his "final" report, possibly a post-mortem;

—heard that one frustration of a sub-committee chairman was having to listen to discussions on NFCUS at Executive meetings;

—learned that ten berths had been reserved in January for a Scottish exchange with the students to be chosen next Monday;

—were told that NFCUS had two problems: philosophy and organization;

—saw a private petition passed around approving NFCUS and attracting 20 signatures;

—learned EAC did not approve of an Institute of Canadian Civilization;

—had a record attendance of 40 and heard from most of them.

All Varsity Review Is Back! Without Review-Type Musical

Last week's SAC meeting favored the reinstatement of the All Varsity Review on Toronto's campus. Curt Reis, who this year directed UC's production of perfection, has been accepted as director and a producer chosen. It has been decided that next year's review will be in the form of a book show, rather than the traditional review. Carousels, Finnigan's Rainbow, and Fanny, established Broadway shows, have been under consideration. Chairman of the AVR Committee Donna Heimann explained that the committee decided it would not be feasible to produce a review, "the ideal type of show for the AVR." Agreeing with the decision to produce a book show, Diana Hays (IV UC) pointed out that previous AVR's were done by returned Service men, with experience amounting to professional calibre through participation in army shows. Milton Barnes, musical director for next year's show, expects to enlist the orchestra from the ranks of those attending the Conservatory where he is a student.

Varsity Staffers' Awards Coming

Every year at this time a worthy Varsity staffer earns a little recognition by winning the Anita Freedman Award.

The award is open to all members of the staff except the upper echelons of the senior staffhead. Qualifications are energy, faithfulness, inventiveness, and integrity as well as a definite literary contribution to the paper; writers from all of the paper's departments are eligible.

Anita Freedman wrote for The Varsity while studying English Language and Literature at the university. After receiving her B.A. in 1942 she worked for the Canadian Press, and then for the Globe and Mail.

Following her death in May, 1947, a group of her friends established a fund in her memory to arouse an incentive for journalism on the campus.

Several other members of the paper will receive recognition for their services in the form of Varsity pins. They will be awarded to not more than six or seven people for consistent and faithful work for The Varsity. The custom was begun over sixteen years ago, and many of the winners of this award in the past now occupy key positions in Canadian journalism.

UBC VOTES NO TO NFCUS

Skeleton of a Bulletin Board

Here, at last, is the Bulletin Board which has been planned by the Student's Council all year. The steel frame was received a few weeks ago and is now being painted in a room of the Varsity Arena by Ted Sievenpiper, its designer and instigator. It is expected to appear in front of the SAC building by the end of March.

63 Votes Kill Federation Five Top U's Now Out

Vancouver: (CUP) — Special — The University of British Columbia voted yesterday to withdraw from the national federation.

Following the lead of the other four of Canada's five largest universities, UBC students voted 369 to 303 in a general meeting in favour of the students' council's proposal to withdraw from NFCUS.

McGill, Montreal, Toronto, and Manitoba have already severed ties with the national student body, along with the smaller Acadia University.

UBC's withdrawal means the loss of some 6,300 students and $3,150 in annual revenue.

Horse Can't Do Says Math Man Discussing Bets

Is it possible to win at playing the horses? Not according to Dr. J. F. Howe, who spoke last night to the annual meeting of the Bloor Street Mathematics Society. His subject was the pari-mutuel betting machine.

The talk was one given during the seminar attended by mathematics lecturers, teachers and professors, from all over Ontario.

Among those taking part were Miss Mary Crowther, hydrostatics section, Queen's Park; Dr. W. K. Brendon, Hamilton; Miss Ruth Gardner, Hamilton; Prof. J. M. O'Brien, Prof. R. J. T. Byers, U of T; Dr. P. Hawrylyshyn, University of Groningen, C. T. Davidson, professor of music, Penzance College; Dr. W. L. Zimmerman, Prof. H. J. Henderson, Kingston; and Dr. R. C. Sanderson, McMaster University.

Chairman was Prof. P. A. Petrie, OCE.

When Toronto voted to withdraw a week ago, NFCUS national President, Peter Martin (of Toronto) watched 25% of the federation's financial resources disappear. He was left with a little less than $15,000 out of an original $23,000 budget for next year (Manitoba's withdrawal cost NFCUS another $2,000), but UBC's action cut this by another 20%.

NFCUS administration expenses, executive salaries, and conference and travelling cost more than $15,000 annually.

One Toronto student said: "Nobody acquainted with the situation sees any chance that NFCUS can survive this double disaster, unless a great deal of additional support is obtained soon."

Yesterday's decision by the UBC general assembly has already run into difficulties. The constitution of the UBC Alma Mater Society requires a quorum of 1,000 students. When the meeting was called to order, the required number of students were present; but as heated discussion of the motion continued, more and more students straggled out. By the time the vote was called, the dribble had risen to a slow stream, and only 672 students remained to vote NFCUS out of UBC.

Stan Beck, Editor of The Ubsysey, told a Varsity reporter last night in a long-distance phone call that NFCUS supporters on campus were challenging the vote on the grounds that a quorum was not present. However, said Beck, it was difficult to predict the outcome of the constitutional dispute.

Earlier, UBC's student council had voted in favor of withdrawing from NFCUS, and Alma Mater President Bray had spoken vehemently against the student federation. Bray has already invited some student council presidents to come to a conference to discuss his proposal to form an alternative to NFCUS, an association of student council presidents. Bray called NFCUS an organization in which "hopelessly confused and chaotic conditions exist."

Marc Bell, local NFCUS Chairman, was described by a UBC student as an "enthusiastic and determined" supporter of the national student body. However, said the student, there are indications that Bell will throw his weight behind an alternative to NFCUS if that body falters seriously.

In Toronto, former NFCUS Co-Chairman Bill Smyth declared: "Despite this crushing blow, NFCUS will carry on."

Two thirds of Canadian University students are now not members of NFCUS. Since UBC's withdrawal has definitely dropped NFCUS membership to below 50% of Canadian students, NFCUS may not be able to be represented at international conferences as the representative of Canadian students.

Varsity Assemblage Will Decide World Prospect

The final Varsity party of the year will be held on Friday, March 23, at a place to be announced later.

All staffers who have worked on the paper this year are invited. Information as to details will be posted next week in The Varsity office.

The drunken orgy will be the last of the famed Varsity debauches for this season.

All staffers who have received letters from the editors are urged to reply definitely as soon as possible.

Murphy Bridie Going To Vic Professor Reveals In Debate

A Victoria College professor under hypnosis last night revealed his past identity as Murphy Bridie at the Vic faculty debate Wednesday night.

Opposition Senator, Professor P. Seymour was placed in a revealing trance by his lady colleague, Senator Professor K. Coburn before the largest audience in attendance at a Vic debate this year.

Motion before the House was "A Little Learning is a Dangerous Thing." It was upheld by a vote of 52 to 36. Professor M. MacLure and Miss Jay Macpherson spoke for the government.

Professor Seymour communed with Orpheus and then with Mackenzie King. Orpheus asked to be moved so that the rain wouldn't drip down his back from the roof. (Orpheus is a statue located in the Wymilwood Union Garden).

Mackenzie King is reported to have said that only a little learning made him Prime Minister of Canada.

Speaking for the government, Professor MacLure said, "Learn a little about women and it can be a very dangerous thing. Study only the perfume ads and you learn that women are irresistible, alluring and partly undressed. Study only the women's pages of a newspaper and their only activities are getting married, going to teas, eating and reducing after eating."

He went on to point out that a little knowledge about automobiles learned from ads can also be dangerous and confusing.

"Sweep ahead grace" sounds more like an injunction for a mixed curling team to me than a car," he said.

A little learning is very dangerous in poetic interpretations as well, according to MacLure who illustrated this from Keats' "Ode to A Grecian Urn." He quoted "O Attic shape! Fair attitude! with brede of marble men and maidens overwrought."

"No wonder the maidens are overwrought if the men are made of marble," he commented.

Opposition member Professor Coburn said that a little learning was very safe.

"Take Marilyn Monroe," she said, "She has been signed up for a part in the Sleeping Beauty with Sir Lawrence Olivier. Have either of the learned ladies present been signed up?"

"Marilyn Monroe's 'little' learning has led her into very pleasant places. If this is danger, let us live dangerously!"

Jay Macpherson speaking for the government presented her entire speech in poetry. In part she said:

"Education has nothing to do with life; what do they talk about in the coffee shop? not Keats or Shelley, but more likely the dull thuds in Wendy Michener's belly, what prof's cute but needs a hair-cut? (or a close shave) or who carried the flue from Burwash to Annesley Hall?"

Before going into his climactic trance, Professor Seymour explained that in checking on Pope's essay from which the motion was taken, he read "A little learning is a dangerous thing, drink deep."

"I got that far and stopped," he said.

Fence Going Up In Two Weeks Last Incentive For Final Exams

Sunshine and robins and soon the campus fence.

Last incentive for the final cramming will appear during the next two weeks when university workmen build fences around front and back campuses to keep students from dirtying their feet.

The fence, traditional reminder that exams are upon us, protects the ground from the spitter-splinter of little feet.

Only break in the tradition occurred in 1951 when premature warm weather frustrated maintenance officials into guarding the ground in December.

By protecting the "quagmire" from being turned into a ploughed field, workmen can have the grass in shape by next fall.

Used Book Policy Tried Next Year At Bookstore

The U of T Bookstore is going to compete with the SAC Book Exchange in selling used books. Manager R. E. Saul indicated the idea was still in the "trying out" stages.

Only current texts and the latest editions are being bought by the Bookstore; the price varying with condition. The SAC Book Exchange resale policy is maintained at 75% of the last price with a 10% markup. The Bookstore said they would try to keep prices as low as possible, but didn't tell their exact markup.

Used books were first offered last fall at the store. Students are offered a used or new copy of the book they ask for. All last year's small stock of used books have been sold, showing that students have taken advantage of the lower prices on used books.

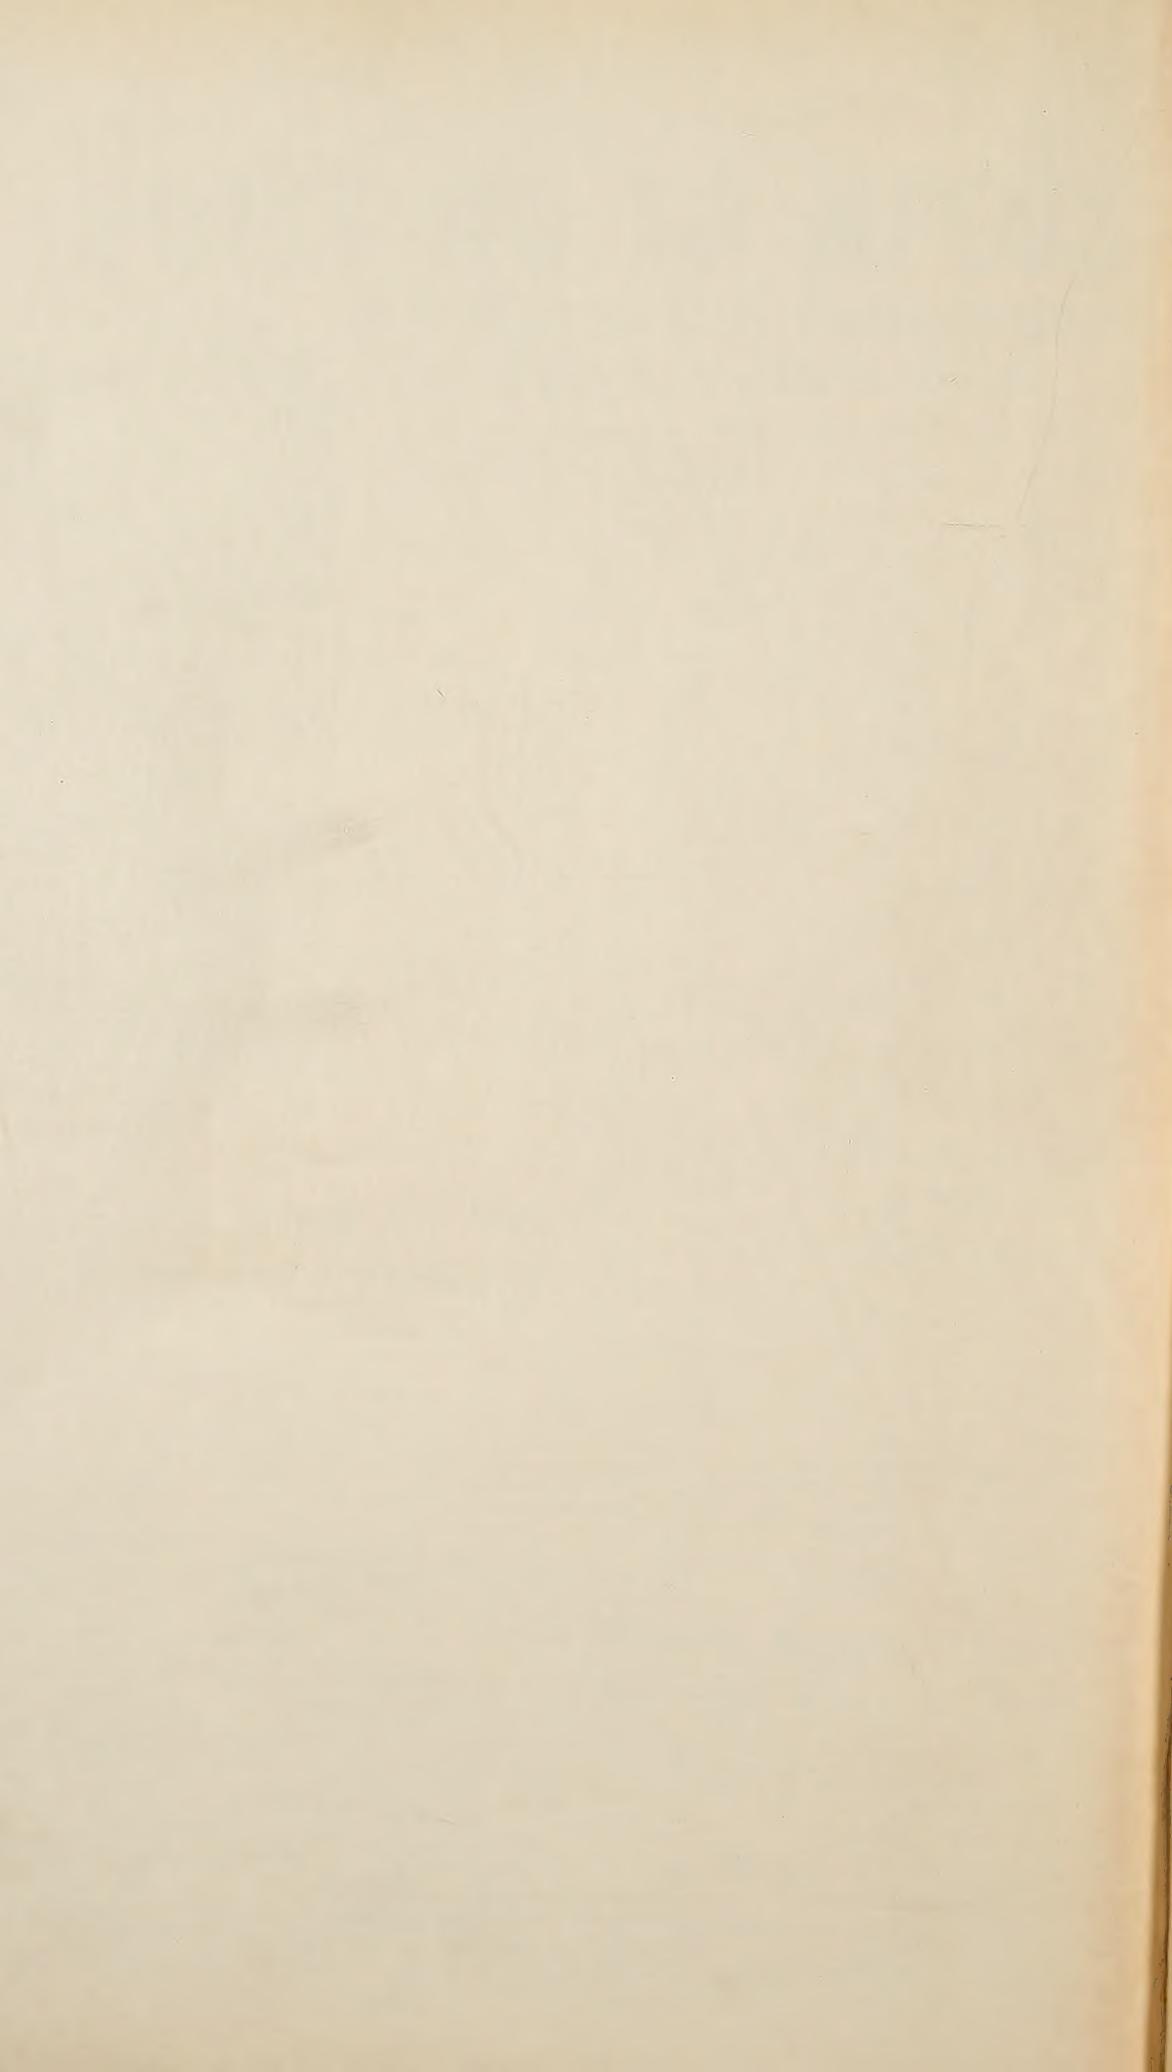

What Is 'National Affairs'? Last SAC Meet To Decide

Topics ranging from the national student federation to finances are expected to flare up at the last meeting of the Students' Administrative Council this year, on March 21.

The meeting, at which both outgoing and incoming SAC reps will be present, will pass the SAC's budget for the coming year. The inclusion of a $4,500 item for "national affairs" — is expected to touch off debate on the question of NFCUS membership again, as this is the exact amount of money needed for NFCUS fees.

The meeting may also hear a report on the long-awaited bulletin board which Ted Sievenpiper, Arch. Rep., expects to see erected by meeting time — maybe.

The SAC's budget, governing the spending of over $800,000 revenue annually, will also be passed. The budget is reported to be "tight" by members of the finance commission, as rising costs have made it difficult to keep expenses within the $5 student levy.
